Note: In September 1993, the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, under the leadership of National President, George Clough Jr., and National Historian, John J. Concannon, initiated a long-range and continuing program of gathering, preparing, publishing and microfilming specially-selected Ancient Order of Hibernian and Irish-in-America historical and research material. The AOH will package and distribute this not-readily-available-elsewhere historical material to universities, colleges, libraries and educational institutions. It is the fond hope of the AOH that the increased and wider availability of this "grass-roots" Ancient Order or Hibernians and American Irish historical material will promote the knowledge of and the study of the prominent role and the outstanding accomplishments of the Irish in America.

"Roots - Trees" Flight Reservations Due Now

REVIEWING PLANS for the August 1987 Ancient Order of Hibernians "Roots" Flight to Ireland are AOH National President Nicholas Murphy, at left, and Rockland County travel agent Connie O'Sullivan.

NEW YORK: Plans for a special Ancient Order of Hibernians "Roots" flight to Ireland in August 1987 were announced by AOH National President Nicholas Murphy.

The Hibernian "Roots" flight will be via Irish International Airlines, with departures scheduled from New York on July 29th and 30th, and from Boston on July 30th. Participants can arrange for return flights after one, two, three or four week stays in Ireland. Flight arrangements are being handled by Healy-O'Sullivan Travel of Pearl River, New York.

The Hibernian flight, via Irish International Airlines, takes its "Roots" name and theme from the fact that the two National Boards of the AOH, both men's and ladies', have adopted the "Trees for Ireland" reforestation project as a "pet AOH charity." And one of the major events planned for this "Hibernian visit to the land of our roots," says President Murphy, will be participation in the "full pomp and ceremony dedication of an 'AOH Memorial Forest' in memory of the Order's deceased members." The "AOH Forest" dedication will take place on August 4, 1987.

The AOH National Chairman of Charity and Missions, David R. Burke of Lawrence, Massachusetts, reports that plans for the dedication are now being finalized, with several forest locations in Ireland presently under consideration as the most suitable site for the AOH Memorial Forest. The final decision, Burke says, will be announced shortly.

Charities Chairman Burke reports that individual Hibernians, as well as AOH divisions, county and state boards, may memorialize their beloved dead by arranging for the planting of a tree, dedicated to their memory, within the AOH Memorial Forest. These "living" memorials will be recorded in the tree registry of Ireland's Department of Forestry.

National President Murphy and AOH "Roots" Flight Chairman, John Foody, are working on arrangements for a number of "entertainments and events, both serious and fun, in various parts of Ireland," which participants in the "Roots" flight may take in if they wish. Chairman Foody notes that the "Roots" flight is open to all Irish Americans.

For full details on the AOH "Roots" flight, prices, optional tours, etc., contact Connie O'Sullivan at (212) 733-4611 or (914) 735-9500. Or refer to announcement on Page Four of this issue.

England Replies to Biaggi

Ambassador's Letter Raises More Doubt

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY) released a letter from the British Ambassador to the United States relative to the ongoing investigation into the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Biaggi said the letter "casts further doubt on the ability of the British to identify and prosecute those involved in official acts of violence in Northern Ireland."

The letter was sent by Ambassador Antony Acland and was in response to earlier letters from Biaggi and 20 other Members of Congress (most of whom serve with Biaggi on the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs) in which they charged the British government with "whitewashing" a preliminary report on RUC violations prepared by John Stalker. Biaggi said the situation has been complicated by the British government's "harassment of Mr. Stalker which first caused him to be removed from the inquiry and most recently led to his resignation from the Manchester police."

Biaggi said that he plans to share a copy of the response with Amnesty International which had been critical of the British government's handling of the inquiry. In addition, he said he would present it to the State Department which he said must be "concerned" about this. "I would hope they would insist on the British government completing the inquiry or instituting a new independent probe before we approve of any projects which might involve U.S. economic aid."

The text of the letter follows:

"The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland has asked me to reply to your telegram of 6 October and letter of 3 December about the conduct and procedures of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, particularly in relation to an alleged 'shoot to kill' policy. I am sorry that you have had to wait so long for a reply.

"The United Kingdom Government fully shares your and Amnesty International's concerns at the situation in Northern Ireland which has resulted in tragic loss of life. We are committed to protecting the human rights of everyone in Northern Ireland, in the difficult circumstances of a prolonged terrorist campaign. This is expressed internationally by our ratification of the UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and of the European Convention on Human Rights including the rights of individual petition, and our acceptance of the jurisdiction of the European Covenant on Human Rights. The Government has striven to ensure that its policies and practices conform with the letter and spirit of both the Covenant and the Convention. And within our domestic law, a number of special measures in recent years have been introduced to prevent discrimination and protect human rights in Northern Ireland. We are always willing to listen and talk to those who have a genuine concern about human rights in Northern Ireland: Northern Ireland Ministers have, for example, recently offered to discuss the issues touched on in your telegram with representatives of Amnesty International.

"Our commitment to human rights is also expressed in our aims of reconciling the rights, interests, and traditions of the two communities in Northern Ireland; defeating those who seek to exploit divisions within the community by violence and building a happier and more peaceful future for the people of Northern Ireland. These aims are shared by the Government of the Irish Republic; and it was to achieve these shared objectives that we concluded in November 1985 the Anglo-Irish Agreement. Through the machinery of the Intergovernmental Conference with which we and the Irish Government, with growing mutual confidence and respect, are cooperating, we hope to improve the prospects for lasting peace between the two North Ireland communities. Through the Intergovernmental Conference the Irish Government has put forward views and proposals in the interests of the nationalist community which the UK Government has listened to very carefully, although, of course we also continue to make the final decision. In particular, we have discussed the action the British Government are taking — in areas as diverse, for example, as strengthening police complaint procedures, promoting employment equality, removing electoral anomalies, and enhancing the standing of the Irish language — which should all be of particular benefit to

MARIO BIAGGI (D-NY) together with leaders of major Irish American organizations held a meeting recently in Washington to discuss the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs and its agenda in the new 100th Congress. Biaggi were, from left clockwise, Joseph Roche, Kathy Holmes, Martin Galvin, Peter Burns-O'Brien, John Finucane, Rita Mullen, Robert Bateman, Robert Bianco, Rev. 'Irish Summer' Program Begins Twelfth Year

ST. PAUL, MN — The Irish American Cultural Institute is again offering American teenagers the chance at a unique "Irish summer" as it begins accepting applications for its 12th annual Irish Way Program. Up to 150 American high school students will take advantage of that offer and converge on Ireland from all over the U.S. for more than five weeks this July and August.

The Irish Way's "Irish Summer" provides American students with a comprehensive introduction to Ireland. Students study Irish history and literature, travel, and are "adopted" by an Irish family during the program's "home stay." They are also exposed to traditional Irish arts and sports, and participate in a variety of social, recreational and cultural activities.

Each student sees a play at Ireland's national theatre, for example, attends a match of Ireland's fast-paced national sport of hurling, and dances at ceilidh (traditional Irish dances). Students can also play in sports matches against Irish teenagers during the program, which runs from July 4 through August 10.

Irish Author Begins Tour

ST. PAUL, MN — Des Lavelle, Irish author, environmentalist, photographer, and man of the sea, will show his own color slides of Ireland's magnificent and intriguing Skellig Islands during a North American tour for the Irish American Cultural Institute's annual Irish Perceptions series in February.

The fourth of six Irish artists and experts the Irish American Cultural Institute will bring from Ireland for the 1986-87 Irish Perceptions season, Lavelle opens the spring half of the series. Storyteller Batt Burns (April) and biographer/historian Anne Chambers (May) follow, completing the Institute's 17th consecutive year of importing speakers and performers from Ireland.

Born and still living in County Kerry, Lavelle is descended from a long line of islanders and lighthouse keepers. The salt water is in his blood, he says, whether he's fishing, scuba diving or guiding tourists, occupations he has been involved with most of his life. Even his hobby is boating.

Lavelle has combined other interests — writing, photography, the study of bird and sea life — with his interest in the sea to produce two books, Skellig - Island Outpost of Europe (O'Brien Press, Dublin, 1976) and Kerry (O'Brien Press, Dublin, 1986).

During the past decade, Lavelle has drawn heavily from his extensive

President's Message

By Nicholas Murphy, National President

Dear Brothers:

I would like to begin this message by wishing all Hibernians and their families a very Happy and Prosperous 1987.

As we begin the new year I would like to bring you up to date on some of the initiatives we have taken during the latter part of 1986 and those which we will take in 1987.

Our National Convention in Buffalo called for the boycott of Ford Motors based on Ford's refusal to sign the MacBride Principles which we feel are a basis of rectifying sixty years of rank discrimination against the minority in Northern Ireland. In the latter part of 1986, together with P.E.C. Chairman Joe Roche, Public Relations Director Mike Cummings and Deputy F.F.A.I. Chairman Jack Irwin, I met with high ranking representatives from Ford, Detroit, to discuss with them our convention's call for a boycott. We had a productive exchange of ideas with the company agreeing to meet again early in 1987. I would like to add that the AOH delegation felt that calling a boycott should only be a final resort — for should a boycott be called and not succeed all options have been exercised without achieving the goal. Therefore our delegation opted for negotiations in an effort to resolve the situation. We will continue to pursue this avenue in an effort to achieve equal employment opportunity for our sisters and brothers in North East Ireland.

their first chance to experience the Skelligs through Lavelle's eyes. They will explore the 6th century monastery and village built on a sheer cliff on a very forbidding outpost, the thousands of seabirds, the seals and sharks, the lighthouse, the history, the folklore and colors. Lavelle will also speculate on the Skelligs' future and the job the human race is doing as steward of what he calls "priceless treasures history and nature have placed in our custody."

The Irish American Cultural Institute is a non-profit public foundation whose purpose is the non-political, non-religious promotion of Irish culture. Its programs include the Trees for Ireland reforestation project and the Irish Way, an annual summer program in Ireland for American high school students.

Early in December I had the pleasure of meeting with John Cardinal O'Connor of New York. I conveyed to His Eminence the best wishes of all Hibernians and I thanked him for his many fine statements on the Northern Ireland situation since he became Archbishop of New York. Cardinal O'Connor spoke of his great admiration for the work of Hibernians over the past 150 years and pledged his support for our efforts. I was extremely pleased to hear his Eminence speak with such command of the facts on the situation in Northern Ireland. We look forward to working with Cardinal O'Connor in the years ahead.

The major problem facing most organizations is the maintenance of their membership rolls. The AOH is no exception, and we must take the necessary steps to protect our organization. I have instructed our National Organizer, Mike Hession, to mount a major organizing campaign during 1987 with the goal of doubling our membership. Mike has instructed all divisions to formulate their individual campaign plans. The national drive will be supported by advertising at the national level. We request your total cooperation with Mike Hession and his deputies in their effort to increase our membership rolls.

On January 7, I participated with other Irish American National leaders in a meeting with Congressman Biaggi and his staff to discuss an agenda for the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee on Irish Affairs for the 1987 Congress. This is the tenth anniversary of the Biaggi committee and we found the Congressman and his able assistant Bob Blacato as enthusiastic as ever about the work of the Committee. Among the proposed agenda items were:

(a) Legislation for adoption of the MacBride Principles.

(b) Change in the discriminatory visa policy as it now pertains to representatives of the Nationalist community in Northern Ireland.

(c) Congressional hearings on Northern Ireland.

(d) Close monitoring of the distribution of U.S. economic aid to Northern Ireland.

(e) Change in discriminatory immigration policy as it pertains to Ireland.

The Ad Hoc Committee will conduct formal hearings on the agenda on January 28, 1987.

As previously announced the AOH together with the Ladies AOH will dedicate an AOH forest in Ireland on August 4, 1987. We invite all Hibernians to take part in this historic dedication if they plan to travel to Ireland in 1987. In this connection the AOH National Board will sponsor group flights to Ireland on the nights of July 29, and 30, 1987. For further information on this flight, please call Flight Chairman John Foody at 914-359-1386 or our travel agent, Connie O'Sullivan at 914-735-9500 or 212-733-4611.

And finally, I would like to thank all those Divisions who contributed so generously to Martin Higgins' annual appeal for the needy in Northern Ireland. Through your caring, Martin was able to send a substantial contribution to our favorite charities.

Yours in Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity
Nick Murphy

Hibernian National Boards Begin On-going Dialogue

The National Board of the AOH in America, at the urging of National President Nick Murphy, has undertaken to establish an ongoing dialogue with its counterpart Hibernian organization in Ireland, the Board of Erin. This goal was given considerable impetus when National Political Education Chairman Joe Roche recently spent some time visiting with members of the Board of Erin in Ireland.

The substance of the visit was confirmed by both sides in follow-up correspondence, and the boards have begun to swap their national publications. The letters indicate how eager the Irish Hibernians are for closer mutual contact in the interest of Ireland's well-being and how they will welcome visits from travelers to their country. One letter is devoted to stating their position on the British Occupation of North-east Ireland.

Both letters from Hibernian Brother John F. Kieran follow in their entirety. Following the letters is a story which will graphically portray what Hibernians in Ireland may encounter when they parade through their streets.

Dear Bro. Roche,

Many thanks for your letter of 8th September; I was glad to know you returned home safe and well. It was a pleasure and honour to meet such a distinguished member of the Board of America of our Order. The members of the Board who took part in the discussions were very much taken by the complete agreement we have on the mottoes of our Order, both here and in America, our complete allegiance to Faith and Fatherland and the belief that the way forward is through Friendship, Unity and True Christian Charity.

At a Meeting of the Board of Erin on the 27th September, when we reported on your visit, our President, Bro. Raymond McCormack, and the Brothers of the Board expressed satisfaction that you had taken the time to meet us and to endeavour by all means in our power to keep close contact, so that we can foster the aims and ideals of our Order in these difficult times in Ireland. Bro. McCormack has requested me to send you his fraternal greetings and to assure your members of a hearty Cead Mile Failte to any of our centres.

I am enclosing a list of Club Rooms in Ireland overleaf. The members were very attracted by your Lapel Badge and I have been requested to ask if you will send us on three gross of same (on the undertaking that we pay for same).

I look forward to meeting your secretary, Bro. Tom McNabb, and you can assure him he, or any other member, will always find an Irish Welcome.

In conclusion, I reiterate your sentiment of continuing the dialogue and agree we have been too long apart. We extend an invitation to your Board to send observers to our Convention in Drogheda, Co. Louth, on 26th September 1987.

With best wishes and hopes for the future.

Yours fraternally,
John F. Kieran

Dear Bro. Roche,

You ask what we are doing to relieve the position in Ireland to-day. Our members North and South, in Scotland and London, take active interest in Political Parties as individuals and take every opportunity to strive to interest these people in Ireland's cause for Unity and Liberty by democratic means.

We gladly plead guilty to the indictment of repudiating the right of a British Government to govern any part of Ireland and we register also a plea of guilty to the charge that none but Roman Catholics of Irish birth, or descent, are eligible for membership. Our stand down the years is a tribute to the constancy and purpose of our forefathers. Love of Ireland is the monopoly of no man, or no party, and patriotism does not mean hatred of any country but love of one's own.

The old National Party was swept aside and the use of force was substituted as a means of settling the Irish Question. The Nationalists and their chief allies always strove for a United Ireland. So far we have not succeeded but the men who overwhelmed them in their appeal to force against constitutional methods have not achieved it either. You have only to look at TV, or read the papers to see the result of their doctrine. Our country is now bitterly divided, graveyards full of innocent people, not enough facts to hold so called convicted terrorists, homes shattered, broken families and wives and parents mourning their lost ones. The financial stability of both the Republic and N.I. in shatters and no sign of Peace.

Politicians in the Republic now preach Friendship with our northern brethren. If they had only listened to Redmond, Dillon and the other leaders of the National Party and the AOH, we believe Ireland would be a better place to live in. We believe that the unity of Ireland must come about and that this present day tyranny and violence must cease for in that way, and in that way only, will we achieve our hopes and ideals of Ireland a Nation Once Again.

Yours fraternally,
John F. Kieran

Disturbances Mar Hibernian Demonstration at Toome

Several thousand Hibernians were on parade in the village representing divisions from Derry, Antrim, Tyrone and Armagh. There were three divisions from Scotland and a newly formed division from the North of England.

The parade headed by a number of bands proceeded through the village to the Erin's Own G.A.A. field on the Randalstown road watched by thousands of spectators who enjoyed the colourful spectacle of band uniforms, regalia and flags — the Tricolour and flags of the Four Provinces predominant.

The trouble erupted shortly afterwards when stones and bottles were showered on R.U.C. Landrovers. At one stage a Union Jack was burned.

Windows in business premises and private homes were broken and one man struck on the head with a stone, was taken to hospital for treatment. When R.U.C. re-inforcements arrived there was a baton charge

Speaking at the public meeting, AOH National Secretary, Jr. Jack Kiernan, from Dundalk, referred to the previous day's disturbances in the County Louth town. He said that supporters of D.U.P. deputy leader, Peter Robinson, had gone to Dundalk looking for trouble. They claimed that they did not get sufficient protection from the Gardaí but he 'dreaded to think what would have happened had it not been for the good work of the Gardaí.'

'The Gardaí are one of the fairest police forces in the world and would in no way allow anyone to be abused,' Mr. Kiernan declared, adding that if Loyalists were to get away with such thuggery on other occasions, it could prove very serious for the people of the Republic.

He went on: 'Ever since partition was imposed by Britain, it has been strongly opposed by the overwhelming majority of the Irish people. The passage of time has served merely to intensify that opposition. Bitter experience has confirmed the conviction that the division of the country is immoral, unnatural, politically and economically disastrous and a mockery of the facts of history and geography. Every Irish nationalist wants to have this injustice removed with all possible speed.'

Mr. Kiernan slammed those who would resort to violence to achieve re-unification. Their tactics, he said, were to be deplored by every right thinking citizen.

'If any section of our fellow countrymen, however wrong headed they may be at the moment, were to be dragged into a re-united Ireland by means of armed force, the result would undoubtedly be to leave us with a legacy of bitterness and hatred, the speaker declared.

The National President of the Order, Mr. Raymond McCormack, claimed that since the establishment of the Northern government, Catholics had never experienced social justice or fair play, yet they had never failed to live up to their responsibilities. Mr. McWilliams, Secretary of the Scottish Board, referring to the Order's principles of peace, friendship and true Christian charity, said they had always extended the hand of friendship to their Protestant fellow countrymen, but on the other hand it had never been extended to the majority.

'Is there any hope at all that this generation of Irish men can come together and settle their differences or are we going to leave it to another generation and carry on with this bigotry and hatred?' he asked. It was time the followers of Paisley, Robinson and McCrea realised that there was no hope for them, if they continued to have such people as their leader, Mr. McWilliams stated.

Resolutions passed reaffirmed the Order's loyalty to the Holy Father, the allegiance of Hibernians to a united Ireland, rejecting all forms of violence to attain this goal and pleading to establish good relations with their Protestant fellow countrymen.

An official of the Antrim Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, who organised Friday's demonstration in Toomebridge, said the trouble which started at the end of the parade was caused by youths, whom he described as outsiders and hangers on.

These were people whom they did not want near their demonstration, he went on, adding that only one window in a dwelling house was broken as a result of the stone throwing.

The Book of Freedom

In recognition of the sacrifice of the many generations of Irishmen and Irishwomen, at home and in exile, we in America who are concerned with the freedom of all Ireland, have instituted a "Book of Freedom" for this purpose, and we offer this generation a means of permanently recording their participation.

To the many Americans who wish to identify with this noble ideal, the "Book of Freedom" offers a unique opportunity by reserving a page.

The pages in the handcrafted book are of the finest quality parchment and each donor's page will be uniquely illustrated in a full color Celtic design. A donor's page may include a quotation from an Irish patriot, a family coat of arms, or a memorial. The designs are based upon The Book of Kells and other Irish illuminated manuscripts.

This St. Patrick's Day make a page in the Book of Freedom a lasting gift proclaiming your concern for the oppressed minority in the north of Ireland. The book will be on display in a suitable museum to offer future generations the names and thoughts of those who came to Ireland's aid during the crucial phase of her fight for independence.

A basic page is priced at $300, with $100 increments, in keeping with the Celtic tradition of recognizing achievements by the use of lavish color and intricate interlaced designs.

All proceeds will be forwarded to An Cumann Cabhrac, to aid the dependents of Irish political prisoners.

"Both our Governments also believe that the defeat of terrorism is the key to achieving a happier future for all the people of Northern Ireland. As a result greater security cooperation across the border with the Republic is achieved. There has been greater contact between the two police forces and agreement reached on a series of joint reports on intelligence cooperation, liaison structures and operational and technical matters. Many of the recommendations in these reports are now being implemented, further planning is under way and there is determination on both sides that progress should continue.

"Just as the Irish Government has publicly expressed their repugnance at terrorist methods by the IRA or anyone else in Northern Ireland, so they have joined with us in praising the work of the security forces and in particular the Royal Ulster Constabulary. As Alan Dukes, the Irish Minister of Justice said in a speech on 15 September, 'there is increasing support among the nationalist community for the RUC and it is well merited' while more recently Peter Barry, the Irish Foreign Minister, has paid even warmer tribute to the RUC. The police and Army continue to face great dangers in carrying out their duties in combatting terrorism with courage, impartiality, and professionalism. Since the Autumn of 1982 (the period referred to by Amnesty International) a total of 136 members of the security forces have been killed by terrorist action. In such circumstances there will be inevitably occasions when the security forces will have no reasonable alternative but to use force. But like everyone else they must obey the law, and are answerable to the courts for their actions.

"The police inquiry to which you refer, which was commissioned by the Chief Constable of the RUC in May 1984, under the leadership of the Deputy Chief Constable of Manchester Mr. John Stalker was not set up to investigate over 35 separate shooting incidents involving civilians since 1982. Some 33 civilians have died in incidents involving the security forces in the course of their duties since Autumn 1982 (the period referred to by Amnesty International). The great majority of these (25) were armed and engaged in terrorist violence, or were attacking the security forces in some way. Of the remainder, in one case a soldier was found guilty of murder, and in another a civilian was accidentally caught in crossfire between the security forces and terrorists. All these cases have been thoroughly and impartially investigated.

"The inquiry set up in May 1984 concerns only the circumstances surrounding the remaining six cases; which arose from three incidents involving the RUC in Co. Armagh in late 1982. The deaths and ensuing court proceedings, where four officers were acquitted of murder, gave rise to allegations that the RUC had been operating a 'shoot to kill' policy, had conspired to suppress or falsify evidence and, in one of the incidents, had deliberately infringed the border with the Republic. Mr. Stalker submitted an interim report in September 1985 to the Chief Constable of the RUC, who in turn submitted it to the Director of Public Prosecutions (Northern Ireland). In March 1986, the DPP directed that further investigations should be undertaken. This task was to have been completed by the same inquiry team, but was overtaken by Mr. Stalker's enforced leave and subsequent suspension from duty while allegations about his personal conduct in Manchester were being investigated. No evidence has been found of any connection between the allegations against Mr. Stalker and events in Northern Ireland. Mr. Sampson, who is Chief Constable of the West Yorkshire Constabulary in Great Britain took over the inquiry. The first part of his report was submitted to the Chief Constable of the RUC on 22 October. The DPP (NI) also received a copy. A second part will be submitted to the Chief Constable as soon as possible. Once the DPP has received the completed report, along with any comments from the Chief Constable, he will decide what directions to give as to criminal proceedings. I should perhaps add that the Director is completely independent of the Government in the discharge of his functions. British Ministers have made it clear that they will also study those aspects of the report which concern the management of the RUC and report to the Parliament at the earliest appropriate opportunity. There is no question whatsoever of any attempted 'whitewash.'

"Finally, I can assure you the British Government will continue to work with all people of goodwill in and outside Northern Ireland, including the Irish Government, to secure a better life together for both communities and to defeat the men of violence. We will continue to work towards these goals wholly within the law.

I am sending copies of this letter to those who signed your telegram."

National Awards To Benefit Trees For Ireland Fund

The National Boards of the AOH have approved the proposal that the proceeds of the 1987 Awards program be contributed to the AOH Trees for Ireland fund.

The wasteful stripping of Ireland's forests by those occupying our homeland during the mid-centuries, in order to preserve their own, has led to millions of barren acres which can and must be replanted. With your help the AOH will play a major part in ending the need to import lumber and wood products, an unnecessary drain on the economy, help

March Is Education Month

AT THE NATIONAL AOH convention, R. Joseph Kriegbaum, standing at right with National President Nick Murphy, proposed a resolution to foster knowledge of Irish history, which reads as follows: "That the National Board declare the month of March as Irish Education month and that the national historian make available information to assist schools, etc., throughout the states to better understand Irish history." The resolution passed unanimously. Kriegbaum is president of the Clark County, Springfield, Ohio, R.F.K. Division 1.

Ohio Division Grows

MARTINS FERRY — Little did the some 100 Irish-Catholic men who met in the Bridgeport, Belmont County, Knights of Columbus hall 10 years ago realize what an influence the Ancient Order of Hibernians was to be in their lives. For from that historic meeting on a cold evening in February 1977 grew one of the more influential AOH divisions in the State of Ohio and from that new division came active members who played a vital role in the AOH in Ohio.

Among the catalysts who played a role in organizing the AOH again in Belmont County — and in eastern Ohio — were Michael Muldowney, who spent countless hours telephoning and visiting prospective AOH members. But in reality it was not just the hopes of one man but the goal of many Irish-Catholic men who cherished the idea of forming and joining a group that was pledged to the betterment of Irish culture, history and policies. Amid the group of men who met in Bridgeport was immediate Past National President Joseph A. Roche who at the time was National Organizer. With him was an old friend from Pittsburgh, Pa., Kevin Donohue.

Nearly 100 men finally joined the newly-formed Belmont County Division No. 1, and from that group came a state president, a state vice president, and a member of the National AOH Board. Elected as first president of the division was Muldowney, who eventually was in the addition of thousands of jobs, as well as adding significantly to the beauty of Ireland.

The first award is a round trip to Ireland for two via Aer Lingus, courtesy of Connie O'Sullivan, O'Sullivan Travel Agency, Pearl River, N.Y. A second and third prize will also be awarded.

Richard Rogers, assistant national secretary and awards chairman, has mailed out guidelines for the program. Any additional materials or information is available through him at Box 623, Mineola, New York 11501.

elected a state president; Tom Murphy, vice president; James J. Brennan, recording secretary, and John Gallagher, chairman of the Standing Committee. Other officers were James Hughes, treasurer, who is now president of the division and Timothy Coyne, financial secretary.

Not standing on its laurels as the newest Ohio AOH division, Belmont County members decided to bid for a state convention and won that right for the 63rd biennial state convention at Wilson Lodge, Oglebay Park, Wheeling W.Va. in 1981.

In a sense, that was just a beginning for the active division. Eventually the division produced a state president, Muldowney; a state vice president, Murphy, and a state public relations director, James J. Brennan. Brennan, who held the post of state PR director for six of the first seven years he was an AOH member, also served as state Hibernian/Notre Dame committee chairman. In December 1985, then National President Joseph A. Roche named Brennan as National Director for Advertising for the National Hibernian Digest. He was reappointed to that post by President Nicholas Murphy of New City, N.Y.

Original charter members of Belmont County division came from nearly every county in the Ohio Valley region of Ohio and from Fairmont, W.Va. Eventually, three divisions were formed from the original Belmont County membership: Washington County, Jefferson County in Ohio and Marion County, West Virginia.

Division President James J. Hughes said that plans are under way for a gala celebration of the unit's 10th anniversary. The event will be held in conjunction with the division's annual St. Patrick's Day dinner, tentatively scheduled for the first Saturday in March. The division still meets once a month and its sessions are usually well attended by active and progressive members, according to Hughes, who recently retired from an office with the State of Ohio.

Ireland is famous for its crystal. Every piece is the product of rare craftsmanship and strict adherence to quality.

The same is true for Budweiser.

We brew our beer with the finest hops, rice, and barley malt. Then we age it with Beechwood, to aid the natural carbonation. The result is a clean, crisp taste that has been distinctively Budweiser's for over one hundred years.

BORD FAILTE
(Irish Tourist Board)
AND THAT TRIP TO IRELAND
Tourism is big business. Tourism from all markets was worth 960 million pounds (Irish) to Ireland in 1985. 1.9 million foreign visitors saw the beauty of Erin that year, and 91,000 Irish wage earners were glad of it.

Bord Failte, The Irish Tourist Board, was directly responsible for this important stimulus to the Irish economy. The Board's vigorous leadership in all aspects of Ireland's tourism industry has been the prime mover. Bord Failte is an Irish governmental agency. It is part of the Ministry of Tourism, Fisheries, and Forestry. Mr. P.V. Doyle heads the Board of Directors in Dublin, overseeing a (1986) budget of 31 million pounds. For this expenditure Bord Failte was instrumental in pushing Ireland's tourism business to a new record performance. It is Mr. Doyle's opinion that by the turn of the century tourism will be the world's biggest revenue producing industry, and Ireland is certainly looking for its share of the world market.

It may surprise many readers to learn that the U.S. and Canada account for only 17% of the visitors to Ireland. British visitors had 46% of the action, Continental Europe 14%, Northern Ireland 20%, and the rest of the world 3%. However, the U.S. tourists spent far more money — 177.6 million pounds of the 462.2 million pounds spent by foreign visitors in direct tourism revenue. As expected, more revenue was earned in Dublin and the east, 230 million; next came Cork and Kerry with 167 million; the west of Ireland received 103 million pounds of the tourist pie; while the midlands got 48 million; and Shannonside pocketed 78 million pounds.

Bord Failte points to careful planning, marketing strategy and good public relations as being responsible for Ireland's good fortune in 1985. "Promotion and marketing is the name of the game," quotes Michael Howard, of Dublin, the Board's East Coast executive stationed in New York City, the Board's North American headquarters. Michael emphasized the mission of the Board to be one of leadership, direction, and encouragement, rather than direct public salesmanship — that job the Board leaves for the Travel Agencies, Tour Charter companies, and the many working elements of the tourism industry. The Board is always available, however, to anyone, at any time, for advice and help in planning that trip to Ireland. A source of information for the traveler and the public is the Board's identity these days, Michael Howard explained. He re-emphasized the mission: promotion and marketing, planning and leadership strategy. The Board is affiliated with four airlines: Aer Lingus, Pan Am, Northwest, and Delta for air travel to Shannon and Dublin. The new airport at Knock is showing increasing overseas air traffic and is expected to share in the travel market and to prime the airport environs with tourism money.

Bord Failte promotes Irish tourism on a worldwide basis. The market is continually being researched and clever advertising campaigns are being introduced in many countries. "The most interesting people go to Ireland," was advocated as an ad personality campaign. Trade and professional organizations are targets for sales presentations. Extensive TV publicity coverage, and Tour operator workshops led to promotional successes, such as, the recent convention sponsored by the Oldsmobile Division of General Motors. 358 top dealer and sales representatives and their spouses were invited to a 5 day Dublin vacation and shopping spree. Each participant received $1000 from GM, which had to be spent in Dublin shops. 1200 auto insurance agents from Michigan held their convention in Dublin in 1985. Other major gatherings in Ireland included the 12th World Congress on Health Education (1500 delegates), International Seed Traders (1100 delegates), European Congress of Building Societies (800 delegates), and many, many more for a total of 58,000 conference delegates. Golfing clubs and fishing societies, caravan and camping lovers, major consumer exhibitors, and show horses and riders also made the trip.

Travel Agencies specializing in Irish travel have joined together in local promotional groups. There are 26 agencies in the New York area group alone. Discounted and attractive tour packages offered by the agencies are always quickly snapped up by hundreds of thousands of vacationers. During the year Bord Failte provided 14 million pounds in investment grants directly to Irish hotels, guest houses, parks, hostels, and many tourism-related building projects to enhance the tourism capability with improved facilities. The Travel Agencies also benefit from the Board's funding activities and an important businesslike link is maintained between them.

The bottom line benefit is meant, primarily, for the traveling visitor to Ireland. All the hassles of travel is looked into and smoothed over by Bord Failte personnel. Making your trip to Ireland pleasurable is their reason for being. They are, first and always, employees and representatives of the government of the Republic of Ireland.

The Board tracks the business and vacationing behavior of every visitor, noting days spent in Ireland (average 11), how the visitor money is spent, how much, who gets it, accommodations used, food preference, regional bednights, and even the social class of the traveler. Every conceivable tourism income factor is collected and disseminated by new computer systems, electronic communications, video text, and all the modern assortment of devices used to mind the store and count the money. Awards are given by the Board of tidy towns, service excellence, top restaurants, best Irish craft salespeople, tourist menus; and even the Garda is rewarded — in each Province.

"The most interesting people go to Ireland." Will you be one of the interesting ones this year? If you are, the Bord Failte, in some way, will make your visit pleasant and enjoyable.

Efforts Under Way To Change Immigration Act

A far reaching Immigration Bill was recently passed by the Senate and House of Representatives and signed by President Reagan. We are fully aware that it was not a perfect Bill and the law still discriminates against Irish and other European nationals. The U.I.A.I.C. has been the prime mover in trying to secure legislation to eliminate this discrimination. As a matter of fact legislation was introduced in the House to reduce discrimination under a Bill sponsored by this Committee, but was amended by members of the Senate and the House at a conference meeting. The revised Bill provides for 5,000 nonpreference visas per year or 10,000 over a two year period, and these are to be allocated among 36 countries.

The rules and regulations for the Amnesty phase of the new Bill have not been issued as of this mailing; however, a full assistance program has been put in motion and further details will be sent to you as soon as the regulations are issued by the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The attached instructions for applying for these visas (courtesy Consulate General of Ireland, New York) is self explanatory. If further details are required feel free to contact one of our members listed below.

Of course fuller participation will increase the effectiveness of our effort to bring about long term changes in the present immigration laws. Therefore we are suggesting that you consider undertaking the following steps:

1. That the president of each organization appoint a delegate who will attend our monthly meetings as your delegate.
2. That a permanent time slot be set aside on your agenda at each regular meeting so that this delegate can keep you informed of any new developments.
3. We ask that this notice be read out publicly at the next regular meeting of your association.

We would like to hear from you as soon as is practical.

We are confident that the infusion of new ideas from your respective organizations will serve to strengthen and redouble our efforts.

On Staying Irish

By HUGH O'NEILL

I have no idea what to tell my son about March 17. St. Patrick's Day breaks my heart.

It brings to mind my maternal grandmother, Beatrice Haran, nee Reynolds, whose voice was for me and my brothers and sisters — Anne, Kevin, Kathleen, Eileen, Timothy and Mary — the very sound of Ireland, somehow at once soft and fierce, a whisper of flower and fog. That voice is gone now from our family and, looking at my son, I often find myself wondering what endures across the years, played out through Brooklyn and the not-Irish suburbs. Beyond the familiar fragments of our history, the railroads, the bridges, the union halls, beyond the booze and blarney slanders that have a day in the sun each March, what remains true about our people? What lingers in the blood? The answer is buried in an ethnic joke, a story invented like all such stories by a fellow of black heart, a story that accidentally reveals the secret glory of our crowd.

Pat and Mike it seems grew up together and for twenty years, boys and men, scratched out a hard life planting and digging potatoes. Then one day Pat tells Mike he's tired and he's going to America, a place where a man, you see, might have a little opportunity. Barely looking up, Mike gives a half-wave and mutters "God bless you, Pat" in farewell to his lifelong friend. Anyways, thirty years go by and Pat returns, a fancy man in a limousine. He pulls up to the field where he left Mike three decades earlier and sees an old man bent over a hoe. Carrying a walking stick in a jeweled hand, his eyes abrim, his heart beating quickly, Pat staggers across the tilled field to the companion of his youth. Finally he yells out "Mike, Michael Ryan, it's me, Pat. Pat McQuade. At that moment Mike looks up, squints into the sun and says, with the affectionate hostility reserved for the good people when they go wrong, "Well, are you back or what?"

Mike, you see, is supposed to be a fool, an ignorant earth-bound man, unable to see beyond the end of a hoe, a creature without imagination, fit only for the work of back and blade. But in his darkness the inventor of this tale has stumbled upon our virtue. Mike's no fool. Indeed, he's wiser than his now wealth and American friend. He knows that the commerce, the action, the traffic of the world is a trick, a sleight of hand designed to make us feel either better or worse than we are, as though we weren't all of us just fine and humble, God's good people. Mike's "Are you back or what?" proclaims the primacy of the heart. It is an announcement that the years, the mistake his friend made thirty years ago, the vulgarities of the world couldn't matter less, Pat appears to be back.

Ever suspicious of the past and the future, the Irish have a genius for the moment. But on St. Patrick's Day we diminish that gift, delivering ourselves into the hands of those who would describe our readiness for life as rather more whimsical than grand, into the hands of envious men who are all wrong about the light in our eyes. It isn't a twinkle at all. It's a shimmer, the shimmer of something happening, of the spirit being instantly and forever renewed. It's a bad business this day in the sun.

My father and I share the name of the great O'Neill, the Earl of Tyrone. Red Hugh, who in 1599 drove Elizabeth's Essex out of Ireland, before some years later submitting to the crown. But my son, whose red hair is an ancient Celtic gift, is not Hugh O'Neill. We named him Joshua to honor his mother's people, the Stalbergs and Friedenhofs, Russian Jews who arrived, thank God, in Philadelphia about the time my mother's parents left Sligo and Longford for a new life. Joshua O'Neill is an American. New York-born.

But he hears ancestral voices. Three months ago upon hearing a first few notes of pipe and string, he looked up, a fawn catching a fire on the wind. "I like this music," he said not thirty seconds into the Clancy Brothers' rendition of "Roddy McCauley." "It's a special record." I smiled and he began to dance — a sweet, silly jack-leg baby jig that revealed a silver truth. St. Patrick's Day couldn't be less like the people it celebrates. Demanding and deliberate, full of huzzahs and self-importance, it parades us all out of shape, denatured, reduced to a cartoon version of our gracious selves.

Perhaps I'll tell my boy that St. Patrick's Day betrays our secret with a shout. Perhaps I'll tell him that every green plastic derby worn in public celebration is a private wound. Or perhaps I'll say nothing. For even now, at close of day, he demands a lullabye of the vigorous sounds. "Put on my Clancy Boys record," he'll say, snuggling down in his quilted nest.

I swear his voice reminds me of my grandmother.

Ballad of St. Patrick

By GEORGE R. DARRAH

Swept up by Raiders when he was sixteen
Who brought him from Gaul to the Land of the Green
In Ulster's fair fields he was made to herd sheep
Till God sent him a message one night in his sleep
He made his way south to Wicklow, they say
Where he found a ship's captain to take him away Back with his home folks he could not fit in
For the Irish kept calling him, "Save us from sin."
So he studied in Gaul and a priest he became
And finally was sent back to Ireland again.
He landed at Down but his stay there was short
For he had to confront the High King and his Court.

Born to be Ruler in Rome's dying day
Taken by pirates a shepherd and slave
He brought the good news of Christ and His grace
Of God in Three Persons to our Irish race.

In Ireland all fires were put out in the spring
And only relighted by Tara's High King
But Patrick encamped on a neighboring hill
And on Easter eve a great fire he did build
When the Druids saw the fire they knew in their hearts
That the Christians from Ireland would never depart
The fire he started that night on Slane's hill, Brings pride to the hearts of all Irishmen still:
For when Europe lay silent in Barbarian waste
The Irish came swarming sent by God's Grace.
They rebuilt the churches and taught in the schools
And with faith and with toil brought learnings' renewal.

One of the first rate artists to capture this Irish and American hands across the sea sentiment is Pat Roper."

Included in "Our Heritage" are such standards as Danny Boy, Ireland's 32, Dear Old Donegal, Black Velvet Band, McNamara's Band, and Maggie, to mention a few.

Also included are such American classics as Irish Eyes Are Smiling, Grand Old Flag, Over There, Give My Regards to Broadway, and East Side, West Side.

IN MEMORIAM

AR DAIS DE GO RAIBH A ANAM

Patrick Sherwin An Appreciation

PATRICK M. SHERMAN

BRIDGEPORT, CONNECTICUT: Patrick M. Sherwin, a long time Hibernian, — member of J.F.K. Division — died in St. Vincent's Medical Center, here, on January 2, 1987. He was born in Kilglass, Co. Roscommon, on November 4, 1908, one of six children in the family.

Pat was a past division and state president, and national director of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. An active man — a participator rather than an onlooker — he never let the sand lie on his shoes. He had many talents over and above his considerable aptitude in working with his hands.

He was an Irish historian (who could recite the poetry of our land), a raconteur and eloquent debater. His speech was colorful, interspersed with descriptive Irish sayings. In debate, Pat's witty incidental analogies provoked sudden laughter and added spice to many a Hibernian meeting from Division to National Convention.

A dominant man, he never needed to take a back seat to anyone. He was no respecter of persons. He was close to irreverent on occasion and a clerical collar was no protection. Friend and opponent were kept on their toes, just as likely to receive a sharp humorous barb, but he held no grudges and enjoyed a similar come-back retort.

Pat had a never-ending fund of humorous stories about the Irishmen of his early days in Bridgeport. His prodigious memory recalled their names, relatives, incidentals and circumstances.

In 1956 he acted as personal representative of Gov. Abraham Ribicoff when he invited Robert Briscoe — the first Jewish Lord Mayor of Dublin — to visit Connecticut. Briscoe accepted and was given a reception in Hartford.

He was an all-around athlete in baseball and softball. He also represented the YMCA in boxing and wrestling. The YMCA appointed him chairman of their annual handball tournament. He often referred to it as Irish handball. It was one of our oldest gaelic games. He ensured that the Irish stars from New York and Ireland received invitations and they often took the honors.

Herbert Geller wrote an Ethnic History Series in the Bridgeport Sunday Post which lasted 2 1/2 years (1977 to 1980) on the many local immigrants. Pat, the late Ed Speer, Bob Allen and myself (all brother Hibernians) furnished enough material on the Irish to keep it going for six weeks — the longest ethnic contribution. This series was printed in booklet form by the Bridgeport Board of Education and used in the curriculum of several schools.

Pat's lively "Letters to the Editor" in the Bridgeport Post often triggered a follow-up from me and we formed an effective one-two punch, providing information on oppressed northeast Ireland. Our letters were often long but every word was printed.

Sometimes, when pressed for time, he would call me to be refreshed on an incident or date in Irish history and I would tell him exactly where he could verify my advice.

The church and other good causes were beneficiaries of his fundraising ability and aptitude for enlisting helpers. His corned beef and cabbage I.N.A. dinners were legendary. Pat planned and supervised every detail, purchasing the ingredients, cooking and finally entertaining with his stories. Out-of-town groups of Hibernians were attracted as well as many local non-Irish.

Irish Northern Aid was never far from his mind. He referred to his aides as "the twelve apostles." I was pleased to be designated his "Northern Ireland man."

Pat was popular and widely known and made his mark on the Bridgeport community. On innumerable occasions when I was introduced to people who found I was Irish, the first question would be: Do you know Pat Sherwin? He was indeed "Mr. Bridgeport Hibernian."

Fr. John Bowler, Rocky Hill, past Conn. state chaplain, led the prayers of the Ritual with the JFK Division at the funeral home. President Maurice Kiely voiced praise for Pat and his family. A constant stream of Hibernians from Greenwich, Stamford, Norwalk, Danbury, Waterbury, New Haven, Meriden and New York City came to pay their respects.

After the Mass in the Cathedral, Mike Clifford led in the singing of the Irish National Anthem. Vincente Carrafiello speaking for the family, in an eloquent tribute to Pat's life and achievements, elicited applause from the large congregation.

Pat Sherwin was a man of many achievements. He walked with the great Irish American patriots of our time. Many of us are grieving while remembering the greater grief of Ann and the family.

Singers Commemorate Dooley At Special Memorial Service

A memorial Mass commemorating the 25th anniversary of the death of Dr. Thomas A. Dooley was sung by the Dr. Tom Dooley Choralists at Most Holy Rosary Church, Syracuse, NY, on Saturday, November 29.

The Rev. John Ahern, national chaplain of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, celebrated the Mass. Members of the Dr. Tom Dooley Division No. 1, Camillus, participated along with all Hibernians in Central New York.

Dr. Thomas A. Dooley was born in St. Louis on January 17, 1927. He studied at the St. Louis University School of Medicine and served as a Navy doctor in the jungles of Indochina. He established medical teams and clinics in Laos, Cambodia, Vietnam and other parts of Southeast Asia with the help of contributed funds from the United States. He formed Medico, which later became part of CARE.

He was honored by both the United States and Vietnam for his work. He was the youngest officer ever to receive the Legion of Merit Medal. Stricken with cancer, Dr. Dooley died January 18, 1961, at the age of 34.

President John F. Kennedy said that Dr. Dooley was the inspiration of the Peace Corps. In June 1961, Dr. Dooley was posthumously awarded the Congressional Medal by President Kennedy.

began in 1962, named in honor of the famous doctor-missionary. The 30-man chorus is reported to be the only Irish Choral Group in the country. From its inception, the chorus has been directed by Michael E. Pinkasewicz, who was inducted as an honorary member of the AOH at the National Convention held in Elmira, NY in 1964.

Among the Choralists' memorable appearances have been: the Liberty Weekend Celebration in New York City July 4, 1986; the pre-Mass ceremonies for Pope John Paul II's visit to Toronto in 1984; a 1982 St. Patrick's Day performance for President Reagan and the Prime minister of Ireland at the White House; the 1976 Eucharistic Congress in Philadelphia; St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City and a tour of Ireland in 1972; the Chautauque Music Festival in 1971; the 1967 Montreal Expo; and the New York World's Fair in 1965.

The chorus is hopeful of singing at a special 25th Memorial Mass, to be held in honor of Dr. Thomas Dooley, at "Our Lady of the Snows" Shrine, Belleville, Illinois (near St. Louis). They are currently searching for a sponsor to help pay for the travel expense.

The National Organizer's Corner

NATIONAL MEMBERSHIP DRIVE:

The National President Nicholas Murphy has designated March 1987 as National Ancient Order of Hibernians Awareness month.

For the next six months, an all out effort will be made to recruit new members into the AOH. The program will be conducted at the Division level with the cooperation of County, State and National Boards.

The goal is to double the membership by September 1987. We propose to award prizes to the Division that initiates the most new members; also a prize will go to the Division with the highest percentage gain for the same period, based on the 1986 annual report. Awards will be given to the three members who individually recruit the largest number of new members during the campaign.

The awards will be presented at the National President's dinner in October 1987. Any member who signs up five or more members will have his name and his Division's name published in the National Hibernian Digest in the Organizer's column.

SUGGESTIONS TO IMPLEMENT THIS PROGRAM:

Each Division President should write a letter to every member of the Division with a membership application enclosed. The President would request the members' support and co-operation with the drive and explain what is expected of each member. An award might be offered to the member who recruits the most new members. Every member must surely know a Catholic of Irish birth or descent who would qualify for membership.

The National Board will initiate a National advertising campaign during the months of February and March. Each Division should tie into this national program at the local level with an ad in the local newspaper or a number of Divisions could share an ad in the Catholic Diocesan newspaper, which has a wider circulation. Church bulletins might also be utilized with good results.

Or you might ask your pastor for permission to recruit new members outside the church one Sunday during the month of March. I am sure you can think of many other ways to reach out for new member. Let's give it our best shot.

Each President should formulate a plan of action and have it in effect by February 1, 1987. The National Directors and the Deputy National Organizer will assist and supervise the campaign. This is a team effort so let's work together for the good of the Order.

Michael P. Hession,
National Organizer

ARIZONA

Phoenix is on the move. Bob Field and John Savage have 38 men signed up and ready to organize a new Division. Watch the Irish move in Arizona.

DELAWARE

We have a petition from Vincent Scully, Delaware County, with enough names to start a third Division in that County. It will be called Black Jack Kehoe Division.

HAWAII

The Island State of Hawaii is alive with Hibernian activity. Division 50 is now being organized. Our contact and hard working go-get-them is Herb Coleman. If you know any Irish Catholics in the Honolulu area, please let me know. We have a place for them in the AOH. Bill Condon, Tom Gilligan, Joe Roche, and Jack Hassett are responsible for this new division.

TEXAS

The west's awake. Thanks to Larry Hogan, Harris County, a new Division has been formed under the leadership of Stephen Horgan, who is President. We need more in the Lone Star State; keep up the good work, boys. I had a nice year-end report from James Brown, Deputy National Organizer, San Antonio, Texas.

NEW YORK TORONTO, CANADA

Deputy National Organizer-at-large James Patterson also filed a three-page report of his activities for the past six months. It looks like Jim will soon have two new divisions, one in Brasher Falls, New York, and another in Toronto, Canada. Jim's profession requires him to travel a lot. Wherever he goes he gets on the phone and contacts any Hibernians in the area. He often calls the local Catholic parish pastor, inquiring about the Hibernians. If he gets a negative answer he gives the parish priest a sales pitch on Hibernianism. He has made many valuable contacts this way. Good work, Jim.

MICHIGAN

James O'Kelly contacted me recently with good news. Jim is also looking at the prospect of organizing a few Divisions in the vicinity of Windsor, Chatham, London and Hamilton, Ontario. I expect much progress in Jim's territory.

MASSACHUSETTS

National Director Mike Carroll is doing a fine job in his territory and has the situation well in hand. John Devlin of West Roxbury requested Hibernian Digests be mailed to Cardinal Law and 16 other pastors in the greater Boston area. The Digest is a means of introducing the AOH to the clergy with a hope of organizing new division in their parishes.

RHODE ISLAND

The Ocean State of Rhode Island is making good progress under the direction of State President William McEnery and Deputy Organizer Chris Behan from Newport. We expect big things from the Wee State; good work, fellows.

FLORIDA

Tom Gilligan, National Director and past organizer is making progress in the Sunshine State; a couple of divisions are in the works. Any Hibernians retiring and moving to Florida, please contact Tom Gilligan or myself and we will put you in contact with a division of the order in Florida.

Special Notice To All Newly Installed Presidents: Make sure your division has filed a Certificate of Election Form 9 with the national secretary, Thomas D. McNabb.

Happy Saint Patrick's Day. Pray for peace in Ireland. Slainte agus seol fada agad.

Immigration Act National Legal Counsel Plans Education Drive

On November 6th, Congress passed the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. The Act includes a provision which imposes substantial penalties, both civil and/or criminal, on any employer who hires any person not legally permitted to work in the United States. Elaborate verification and reporting requirements are now being established by the Department of Justice. The Act also provides for legalization ("amnesty") for certain undocumented foreign nationals, such as those who have continuously resided in the United States since January 1, 1982, and those who have worked in U.S. agriculture for 90 days between May, 1985 and May, 1986.

These and other recent changes in the immigration law may profoundly affect our brothers and sisters.

Under a section of the Act a provision allowed the issuance of 10,000 non-preference immigrant visas over a two-year period.

These visas were to be issued to nations "adversely affected" by changes made in 1965 in the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952 which precluded many would-be Irish emigrants to enter into the U.S. The State Department — at U.S. Embassies throughout the world — has stated how these visas will be issued.

The visas will be allocated in two blocks of 5,000 each. The first will be issued before September 30, 1987 and the second between October 1, 1987 and September 30, 1988. The visa program has been given a designation of NP-5.

The State Department has set up a registration system centralized in Washington by mail only. The department believes this will be the fairest system for potential applicants both near and far.

This act provides benefits and obstacles for those Irish emigrants who wish to reside in the United States for economic reasons. The AOH has a responsibility to assist those people from Ireland trapped by the procedures instituted by the U.S. Congress.

Please send me the name of any and all Hibernian lawyers (including honorary members) who would volunteer to assist those of our brothers and sisters who are caught in the legal maze. A network across the country will be set up to educate the lawyers in what has to be done. No fees will be charged under the program. Please write or telephone with the names of the volunteer lawyers.

Report from NATIONAL ADVERTISING DIRECTOR

We are saturating prospective clients with AOH advertising releases and we hope the returns for the National Hibernian Digest, through this effort and your help, will increase the newspaper's advertising pages for 1987.

In recent weeks, nearly 100 releases have been mailed to shops and stores throughout New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Massachusetts, New Jersey and other states selling Irish goods and products. A number of these shops and stores advertise in other Irish publications in the United States, and we think it is about time they place their advertisements in the finest Irish-Catholic newspaper, the AOH Digest.

Considering our advertising rates, it is a wonder that we are not flooded with advertising not only from Irish goods stores, but from all retail businesses in the U.S. and Canada, and Ireland, too. If you take the time to check out the rates for advertising in other publications similar to the National Hibernian Digest, you'll soon learn that you can't find a less expensive way to get good financial results.

Thus, when you, as AOH members, do business with shops in your area, check to see if they're selling Irish goods and tell them about the National Hibernian Digest, the best Irish-Catholic newspaper in North America.

Support Our Advertisers

Our slate of advertisers for the January/February issue of the National Hibernian Digest is not as bright as could be hoped for, in the light of St. Patrick's Day celebrations. Members must keep in mind that the financial health of your newspaper depends on the support you give it not only from reading it, but promoting the newspaper's fine advertising rates and circulation.

AOH members are the best salesmen we can find for the continued progress of your newspaper. Continually be on the lookout for prospective advertisers. Some of our members have done a fine job of sending prospects' names to me.

This time of year is excellent for getting new advertisers; with summer time not that far off, vacationers are probably planning where to spend a week or two to relax. Tap those sources of your pleasurable summer period to come and join the best advertisers in the country and North America.

Support Our Advertisers

It's always good to see new clients join our pages, and even better to have some of our 'old' advertisers indicate they're planning to rejoin us in the future.

Some of the new clients in the January/February issue are Ballbay, under the direction of Kevin Lynch, for fine Irish entertainment; for 'canned' enjoyment you might try material from Emmetsburg, Iowa, St. Pat's Association.

Then there is Irish Genealogical Services from Belfast, Ireland. The firm promises to handle a search for family histories with dispatch and accuracy.

It's always a happy time when we received letters from clients who indicate they are either renewing their advertising or plan to resume advertising in later issues.

That fine AOH member from McLean, Virginia, Roger Furey wrote us to keep his advertisement in the NHD for another six issues. Thanks, Roger.

Dr. Gerald P. Monks of Houston, Texas, tells us he plans to resume advertising for his Action Federal Bail Bond agency later this year. Finbar Enterprises owned by Virginia Brennan of Gardiner, N.Y., is also back with us.

Now, if we could only get Aer Lingus and Pan American World Airways and some of the other major air carriers carrying passengers to Ireland to advertise in the National Hibernian Digest, that would be a real coup!

IRISH-AMERICAN LEADERSHIP CHALLENGED

Dear Editor,

In the wake of a long series of disappointing results of U.S. Government responses to Irish-American interests with respect to Northern Ireland, I appeal to and challenge the Irish-American leadership, in all organizations, to critically evaluate the effectiveness of our activities; to present a long-term, well thought-out and coordinated plan for Irish-American political and economic assistance to Ireland; and, to present a plan for the education of Irish Americans in Irish and Irish-American history and culture.

Let us first address assistance to Ireland. Through the myriad independent causes that we identify and support, particularly political action with respect to Northern Ireland, I would hope that we are all addressing the broader, basic issues that apply to all of Ireland, namely:

- (1) Human and Civil Rights
- (2) Economic Opportunity
- (3) Political Independence

In what appears to be our typically reactive mode we tend to disguise these broader issues with specifically titled narrower causes that the reported 40 million Irish-Americans in this country may not understand or may perceive as controversial or even Communist-oriented. Most of these 40 million Irish-Americans are not properly informed about recent Irish history, of the true conditions in Ireland, nor of their Irish-in-America heritage. Concerning events in Northern Ireland, Irish-Americans have been and continue to be brainwashed by the media to believe that opposition to an oppressive government in Northern Ireland is akin to terrorism practiced in the mid-east. We must recognize that many of the specific and narrow causes are actually disconnected sub-sets of the identified basic issues, and, that we usually react to English initiatives when she jerks our chain. As a result we tend to work, often myopically and ill-prepared, for the quick fix of a single issue, and, with relatively narrow effective support. We continue to allow ourselves to be placed in a defensive position because we have no plan to pursue our goals. Why do we not heed the axiom that "The best defense is a strong offense?"

By no means have we been as effective as we proclaim, not over the past 20 years nor now. We must agree that England's wind still controls the sails of Ireland, directly in the North, indirectly in the Republic and indirectly in the U.S. Irish-American community; with U.S. Government support. Let us execute a well planned offensive by publicly focusing on the activities of England with respect to Ireland, north and south, over the past 100 years and particularly over the past 20 years, as these activities apply to the basic issues. Keep the English propaganda machine off-guard and on the defensive. Let us continually point our fingers at the collusion of the U.S. State Dept. and the English Government with respect to Ireland. The facts are on our side — let us use them properly and effectively. There is no need to fictionalize or exaggerate the situation.

At this point it is fitting to address the issue of the education of Irish-Americans on Irish history and culture. We must make them aware. We must appeal to their conscience and pride. We must stimulate their interest and energy. We need the masses to gain the clout to influence the U.S., and world, politicians. We must determine who our audiences are, present our well planned arguments frequently and broadly in the U.S., Canada, England and Ireland. We must penetrate the shield of the U.S. syndicated media. In particular, let us get the message, with historical and cultural perspectives, to the college campuses, to all State and Federal politicians, and to that potentially powerful Irish-American community; this latter group must be approached during the entire year, not just around St. Patrick's Day. Unfortunately, this uninformed audience is largely an uninterested audience. So, we must educate before we can effectively promote programs. Certainly, we should describe the history of the "Partition", from Home Rule to the present, and, of the history of Civil and Human Rights violations under English rule, from the Penal Laws to the present. Let us attempt to relate British and the Northern Ireland Protestant political powers' activities in distracting the successive Dublin Governments, since the formation of the Free State, from properly addressing their internal economic problems and from concentrating larger energies to more effectively compete in the world economic market.

In summary, how will we develop a meaningful long range plan to counter the collusion of the English and U.S. Governments with respect to Ireland? How will we coordinate this plan among the principle Irish-American organizations? How will we effectively educate the Irish-American community with respect to Ireland? How will we effectively distribute and implement this plan? How will we measure the effectiveness of the plan? Please, let us get better organized. While history is on our side, time is not. In another generation in the U.S. we will have a larger St. Patrick's Day Irish mentality and a smaller concerned and active contingent, and, over a longer time this ratio will increase.

RUMOR SQUELCHED

The Editor,
Hibernian Digest,
U.S.A.

A Chara,

It has recently been brought to my attention that accusations of involvement by myself in the burning of the U.S. Flag in Dublin earlier this year were circulating at the AOH convention in Buffalo in July.

While normally such accusations would not warrant the dignity of a response, I feel that on this occasion — given that the motivation for such baseless rumor-mongering can only be aimed at damaging support for the cause of Irish freedom in the United States — that one is required. This rumor has no foundation in fact and its source can only be attributed to those who wish to damage the struggle for freedom in Ireland.

Sincerely,
Gerry Adams, M.P.
President, Sinn Féin

FORD BOYCOTT

Dear Sirs,

It is my regret to inform you, that if your company continues its policy of secular and religious discrimination in its Northern Ireland based plant (Golden Inquiry, 1986), I, as a past and current owner of several Ford vehicles, will no longer be able to purchase any product which is manufactured by the Ford Motor Corporation. By the denial of equal representation of Catholics in the work force, you have become a contributor to the bigotry and social unrest that has brought about the economic and political strife in Northern Ireland. If you wish to avoid this type of re-occurrence, I strongly suggest that you implement the MacBride Principles as a guideline to the hiring procedures at your West-Belfast operation.

BOOK REVIEW

THE LAST POST, compiled and published by the National Graves Association, Dublin. Third enlarged U.S. Edition, 1986. Edited by Seamus MacCarrain. 192 pages.

Reviewed by Jack Flatley

The Last Post is a memorializing compilation of Irish patriots who gave their lives in the fight for Ireland's freedom and unity. It is a remarkably detailed chronological record of the deeds and fate of the many women and men, and young girls and boys who paid the supreme sacrifice for the ideals outlined in the Proclamation of the Irish Republic, Easter Monday, 1916. These honored dead truly believed the stirring words, "... In the name of God and of the dead generations from which she receives her old traditions of nationhood, Ireland, through us, summons her children to her flag and strikes for her freedom." And strike they did — these beloved heroes. This book covers the period 1916 through 1985. The alphabetized lists, by year of death, of 1440 patriots killed in action against the Black and Tans, RUC, British Army, UDR, and UDF is certainly an eye-opener. It describes the tragic story of each Irish soldier and where he lies today the MacBride Principles, which by the way, is now a law in several states that have financial holdings and investments in Northern Ireland.

Rockland AOH To Honor Bill Burke Feb. 28

Bill Burke has been named "Man of the Year" by the Rockland County, N.Y., AOH and will be honored at this year's Emerald Ball. The event will be held at the Quality Inn and Conference Center in Nyack, New York, on Saturday, February 28, 1987.

Burke is a Senior Vice President of the Bank of Ireland and is an officer and member of numerous Irish Organizations in the Tri-State Area. He is a native of Tubbercurry, County Sligo, and is listed in "Who's Who in Banking" and "Who's Who in Irish America." He is also an active member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians Division 1, Yonkers, N.Y.

Special Hibernians Honored by Division

Mrs. Anne McGrath and Mr. Michael Treanor were given special recognition by the Frank Fox Division 16, AOH, Mount Kisco, N.Y., for their tremendous contribution to the AOH in the area.

Newly elected officers of the division for 1987 are: Michael Hurton, president; Terry Moran, vice president; Peter McKenna, recording secretary; James Keefe, financial secretary; Jim McHugh, treasurer; Pat Ormond, marshal; Joe Hurley, sentinel; and John Flynn, Standing Committee.

in Ireland. The first section of the book is composed of biographical sketches of patriots buried in the U.S. There are photos galore, and the old Irish axiom, "Ireland's history is written on her tombstones," is evident. It is a splendid accounting of the tragic side of the history of Ireland's struggle for independence and will be a research source for years to come.

The orderly manner of presentation shows that the layout was well thought out, and the indexing is convenient. Irish historians will strike gold in this notable literary work. The National Graves Association, Clan na Gael, and Sean Fitzpatrick, who originally proposed the American edition, are due well deserved praise for their herculean efforts in compiling a segment of Irish history and presenting it in a concise, clear, and detailed narrative style report.

The Last Post may be ordered from: Mick Dawn, 162 Preston St., Ridgfield Park, N.J. 07660. The price is $12.50 plus $1.50 postage.

CLONTARF: (Dublin, Ireland) BLOODY GOOD FRIDAY

By WILLIAM MERYMAN

The sun, in slanting rays of rose and gold, flashed across the plains from the Irish Sea, reflecting from the silver shields and swords of the massed warriors. The breaking dawn revealed the somber battalions; face to face across the field at Clontarf and holding fast to their positions. The aged Brian Boru, King of all Ireland, looked across his brave thousands and beyond to the equally numerous foe awaiting the call to battle. One more struggle, the old king thought, one final blow to save his land. He signed wearily, recalling scores of battles past, regretting that he could no longer lead his troops into the fray. He was on the edge of eternity and he knew it. At any moment his son would give the signal at the head of his closely aligned Dalcaissians, and the answer would be returned across the field and the charge would begin. And so dawned Good Friday in the year 1014, the last sunrise that Brian and many thousands upon this field would ever see.

The drama about to be played out on the plain near Dublin had its beginnings in the dim mists of the ancient past, in and around the central European valleys of the Danube and the Rhine. There the Celtic tribes were born and grew, their seed gathered from Nordic lands, from the southern Russian steppes and the Clavic mountains — from wherever the winds came. Here gathered warriors, hunters, horsemen, and farmers, makers of iron weaponry, artisans and bards. Here, over many long centuries, they created their own language, worshipped their own gods, and extended their domain into Gaul and elsewhere in Europe, into Asia Minor. They traded extensively with the earlier established and further advanced peoples of Rome and Greece, all the while increasing in numbers and influence.

By 500 B.C. the Celts had become a recognized power in Europe. Their reputation as a warlike people was well earned, yet they were equally proficient in peaceful pursuits and, in particular, in the development of a highly trained oral tradition in lieu of written language. (It would be more than a thousand years before their descendants would gain any degree of literacy.) Some of the Celts of mainland Europe were similar to those who were soon to inhabit Ireland — fair, tall, and vigorous, lovers of good food, drink, and song, tellers of tales both humorous and heroic, and fiercely clannish. (Their women, legend tells us, were often as aggressive as the men themselves.) These were the Gaelic Celts, as opposed to darker, shorter tribes who had been settled in Britain a thousand years before the conquest of Gaul by Caesar, Celtic ancestors of many in present day Wales, Cornwall, and lowland Scotland.

As widespread as Celtic culture became in Europe, particularly in Gaul, their tribes or clans never cooperated sufficiently to form a strong centrally governed nation. In time Teutonic and Roman legions took advantage of the loosely connected and scattered Celts, and they never again became an identifiable force in continental Europe. By that time, however, a number of Gaelic clans had been long established in Ireland, and had spread their influence throughout the land, reducing native peoples to second class citizenship. They had partitioned the island into a half dozen or more Gaelic kingdoms which, still well before the Christian era, became happy hunting grounds for aggressive warrior chiefs.

This was the story for more than a thousand years in the Emerald Isle — a long and restless history of ambitious kings whose reigns were often brief and which nearly as often ended in violent death. There were few who were wise or powerful enough to maintain their realms in peace for any length of time, even after Christianity had become established throughout the land after 500 A.D.. Ireland continued to remain, as had earlier Celtic European settlements, almost entirely rural until the coming of Danish and Norwegian invaders by 800. After that time, largely under Nordic pressure, seaport towns were built around coastal harbors — today's Dublin, Cork, Waterford, etc.

In 980, Maelsechlainn became King of Ireland and managed a stable and progressive reign for more than twenty years. In 1002 Maelsechlainn turned his throne over to Brian Boru, King of Munster and hero of many a battle for Irish unity. Brian continued the wise policies of his predecessor and by 1014 had the country on a steady course. There remained, however, a large and ambitious segment of Danes in Dublin who were holding out for a Nordic Ireland. They soon found a powerful ally in the somehow disgruntled Maelmorda, King of Leinster, who envisioned a ruling partnership with the Danes. To this end he contacted foreign leaders he thought might see gain in the overthrow of Brian, and he persuaded them to send troops for that purpose. And so it came to pass on the morning of Good Friday Brian found himself on the plain at Clontarf, forced to match his national army against Maelmorda's Leinstermen and two large divisions of Danes and other foreigners out for his blood and for Ireland itself.

This was the scene upon which Brian pondered his fate in those brief moments before the onset of battle. Across the field he could see the Leinster legions, led by Maelmorda. They formed the second division of the enemy. On the right the first division of Dublin Danes was augmented by a battalion of Norwegians — a thousand of them clad from head to foot in iron mail. (Not another warrior on the field wore armor of any kind.) The third division consisted entirely of foreigners — men who had come in fleets of ships from the Hebrides, Orkneys, and along the Baltic, along with a number of Britons from Wales and Cornwall. Against this imposing array, aligned wide and deep under the rising sun, stood Brian's army — Irishmen all. His own beloved Dalcaissians — a large group of related north Munster clans — formed the first division, led by his son Murcadh and supported by his friend, the ex-king Maelsechlainn, and his warriors from Meath. The remaining Dalcaissians on either side of Murcadh included great numbers of skilled warriors led by their clan chiefs — the likes of Kellach, Maelmada, and Menma of the Clann Collein. The second division was composed mainly of men from Desmond (South Munster), led by their King Kian and supported by others from Meath. The third division was mostly from Connaught, led by their chiefs, their ranks completed by Munstermen. This was the lineup Brian saw before him — two massive armies primed for battle to the death, wielding long swords, spears and battle axes, nearly equal in numbers that totalled upwards of forty thousand men.

For a moment or two, suspended breathlessly in time, all was silence. Not a bird sang, and mounted troops sat on their motionless horses. Then, almost simultaneously, horns blared from both sides of the field in the morning air and wild cries rose to the sky. Charge! — the word sparked the action.

It was a long day, that Good Friday between sunrise and sunset.

The Boy Who Decided to Be A Brother of the Poor

By GERRY ANDERSON
From The Express And Star

The poor of five counties owe a great debt to an 87-year-old man who paid a flying visit to Wolverhampton, England, at the weekend.

Brother Matthias, founder of the order of the Little Brothers of the Good Shepherd, is the man who 35 years ago in New Mexico opened the first hostel for the destitute in two old shacks in the middle of winter.

Today there are 19 hostels in England, Ireland, Canada and America, including one in Wolverhampton. In honour of a life dedicated to helping the poor and the handicapped, the town of Waterford in Ireland bestowed its freedom on Brother Matthias, and last week named a street after him. He has also been awarded a doctorate by an American university.

Devotion

"I remember as a boy in Waterford seeing the poor people coming back from America in 1910-12, and I wanted to help them," says Brother Matthias.

"I've always loved the poor, and I had a great devotion for St. John of God, who used to beg in the streets of Granada in Spain to feed the poor.

"I decided that some day I would take care of the poor. I was 12 years old at the time. There was a St. John of God Hospital in London, and when I found out there was a branch in Dublin, I decided to join it, even though I'd been warned it was a lunatic asylum.

"In time I was sent to Lyons, in France, and then to Paris, where I learned to speak fluent French. Later I was sent to Canada with two other brothers to establish the order over there, and that was at the time of the depression in Canada.

"Then I wrote to the Bishop in Los Angeles, and he invited me to come to America. I went into town in Los Angeles with five dollars in my pocket, and when I saw all the poor people there I decided to rent a small place to take care of them.

"The Bishop gave me his blessing, but no money. I think he was testing me, so I went to the St. Vincent de Paul Society and they gave me ten dollars. Then I rented a house at 45 dollars a month and passed the bill on to the Bishop."

Working on his wits, he then went to Boston where he set up a home for elderly priests, but when he was ordered back to Ireland in 1948, at the age of 48, he was heartbroken, feeling he had not completed his mission.

He just wanted to be away from everyone, and he got his wish in a way he never expected when he was sent to New Mexico, where he opened another home for elderly priests.

Then the Bishop sent him to Albuquerque and told him to start a home of his own for the poor, and so in 1951 the first real Good Shepherd centre was born.

"I think we can be very proud of this Wolverhampton centre," he says. "I wish all our homes were like this one. It's a credit to the town and to the order."

The Wolverhampton hostel, in Thornley Street, was built in April, 1985, at a cost of 750,000 pounds, paid for by a Government housing association and the town council.

Counselling

It can sleep 48 men and accommodate 100 a day in the day centre. Constantly full, it has a big turnover of people, with Wolverhampton being a major railway town.

There is also a hostel in The Scotlands which can accommodate 18 men on a long-term basis.

They take in anyone at Thornley Road, and give counselling on alcoholism, drug-addiction and solvent abuse, referring people on if Words? Or Action!!

Statements made by Anton Acland, the British Ambassador to the United States, in his letter of response to Congressman Mario Biaggi (See Page One story) are difficult to comprehend. Stating that the ongoing situation in Northern Ireland "has resulted in tragic loss of life" and that the English Government is "committed to protecting the human rights of everyone in Northern Ireland" is so much double talk. The tone of this letter suggests that he is either unbelievably unaware or is pretending ignorance of the blatant bigotry perpetrated daily on the Catholics in every walk of life — behavior supported by his Government. He further states that "we are always willing to listen and talk to those who have a genuine concern about human rights in Northern Ireland." It is obvious that England's reference to those who have a genuine concern means only those who see things from their point of view. Common sense as well as the experience of world history tells us that bigotry with all its ugliness underlies his own brand of terrorism.

Where is England's credibility with the United States government where the Irish are concerned? Did the Stalker affair not provide sufficient evidence of English insincerity and indifference towards the lives and well being of Northern Ireland Catholics? Whereas the English government's whitewash of Inspector Stalker's investigation into R.U.C. assassinations of Catholics may fit into the English policy of an "acceptable level of violence" in Northern Ireland, such a conclusion is totally unacceptable to Irish Americans. An "acceptable level of violence" in Northern Ireland might be beneficial to England in ruling the country, but no moral-thinking person in today's world can tolerate this depraved attitude toward human life. The "terrorism" created by the Protestant majority's bigoted oppression, abetted by the English government's support, is a product of the deadly partnership's own making.

The day is not long in coming when the U.S. Congress will realize it must weigh the credibility of British statements concerning the Irish. Congress will have to confront the discrepancies and contradictions between the rhetoric around the Anglo-Irish accord and the regressive actions actually occurring in its name. It will have to weigh English sincerity about dismantling job discrimination affecting Catholics against hard evidence that it is actually happening.

The Ambassador's letter is America's first dose of English propaganda for 1987 and there will be more in 1988 and 1989 and into the future ad infinitum. How often have we heard that the English Government is trying to bring peace to Northern Ireland, that they are trying to end, sectarian discrimination against Catholics in Northern Ireland? We must continue to counter this whitewash strategy when it arises. 1987 presents a new beginning for Irish-American concerns. The momentum generated through 1986 has been carried over to step up our support of the 400,000 Catholics of Northern Ireland who daily face the two-headed monster of English-supported oppression and Protestant bigotry. We must display on a nationwide basis the same determination with which we achieved the Northern Ireland investment act in New York State. There is no doubt whatsoever that our elected officials who want our votes each election will listen to and address our concerns. We do not want American money subsidizing the billions of pounds the English Government spends annually in Northern Ireland to breathe and feed the "terrorism" status quo.

The Congressional Ad Hoc Committee for Irish American Affairs has added a new U.S. Senator and six new Congressmen to its rolls. If your Senator or Congressman is not aboard, write him or her and ask them to join. It is painfully clear that the English Ambassador's letter paints a rosy English picture of Northern Ireland for American consumption and comes across like the English Tourist Board selling Northern Ireland as a holiday camp for Catholics. This type of English mockery of the Northern Ireland problem no longer holds water for our American legislators who were duped into changing our extradition laws with England. The United States Congress is now more fully informed of English intransigence to Irish-American concerns.

Was the Irish-American vote responsible for the majority change in the U.S. Senate? Who's to know. We know the Irish-American vote is responsible for the growth of the Ad Hoc Committee. We do have some hard facts about one Irish-American who ran for statewide office in New York. Although relatively unknown outside Irish-American circles and with very meager resources, he garnered 1.3 million votes; and what makes this more significant, he pulled this vote with only 35 percent of voter turnout. To the English Ambassador and the electorate at large we say, "Truth will prevail." Action speaks louder than words.

Senator D'Amato Introduces Fair Employment Legislation

U.S. Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato (R-NY) has introduced The Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act, which would deter efforts to use the workplace as an area of discrimination in Northern Ireland.

"Last year, after heated debate over policy towards South Africa, the Senate overwhelmingly applied economic sanctions against a government that maintains a policy of rampant discrimination," said D'Amato, who is a member of the Congressional Committee on Irish Affairs. "Today, we have the same opportunity to fight the same, ugly discrimination in Northern Ireland."

"This legislation will incorporate the MacBride Principles, which are modeled after the famous Sullivan Principles, designed to apply U.S. pressure to change the system of apartheid in South Africa. It does not call for disinvestment, but for the cooperation of U.S. companies active in Northern Ireland in the campaign to force the end of discrimination in the workplace."

The MacBride Principles

The legislation would incorporate the following principles, named in honor of Sean MacBride, winner of the Nobel Peace Prize and co-founder of Amnesty International:

- eliminating religious discrimination in managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs and significantly increasing the representation in such jobs of individuals from underrepresented religious groups;
- providing adequate security for the protection of minority employees at the workplace;
- banning provocative sectarian and political emblems from the workplace;
- publicly advertising all job openings and undertaking special recruitment efforts to attract ap-

Fish Places Fair Employment Practice Bill on House Agenda

WASHINGTON D.C.—"Discrimination against Catholics in Northern Ireland must be addressed in the 100th Congress," Congressman Hamilton Fish, Jr., R-NY, said in reintroducing the "Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act."

"The Catholic minority has been denied equal treatment in the workplace solely on the basis of religion. My Bill would ensure that American companies who operate in Northern Ireland would not contribute to this discrimination," said Fish, representative of the 21st congressional district and co-chairman of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs.

The Bill requires all U.S. companies doing business in Northern Ireland to adhere to the MacBride Principles, a nine-point set of guidelines for fair employment in Northern Ireland.

plicants from underrepresented religious groups, and establishing procedures to identify and recruit minority individuals with potential for further advancement, including managerial programs;

—establishing layoff, recall, and termination procedures which do not favor particular religious groupings;

—abolishing job reservations, apprenticeship restriction, and differential employment criteria which discriminate on the basis of religious or ethnic origin;

—developing and expanding upon existing training and educational programs that will prepare substantial numbers of minority employees for managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical, and technical jobs; and —appointing a senior management staff member to oversee the U.S. company's compliance with the principles described above.

"One of the most prominent and painful means of perpetrating acts of discrimination is through employment," said D'Amato. "Improving the employment opportunities for the victims of discrimination will help factor out economic reasons for the current strife in Northern Ireland and, hopefully, will begin the process toward a peaceful resolution to the problems there."

"Most of these U.S. companies now directly or indirectly support the systematic anti-Catholic discriminatory practices in Northern Ireland. This legislation would end this shameful record. It not only will enlist these companies in the effort to wipe out discrimination in the workplace in Northern Ireland, but it also will help enlighten other nations which do business in Northern Ireland," concluded D'Amato.

The Ad Hoc Committee began 1986 with a renewed effort to see movement on certain bills and resolutions related to Northern Ireland. On the very first day of the session, I introduced two measures, House Concurrent Resolution 6 and House Concurrent Resolution 7. The first expressed the opposition of Congress to the indiscriminate use of plastic bullets by the British security forces in Northern Ireland. The second measure called on the President to designate a special envoy for Northern Ireland.

It became obvious that as we approached St. Patrick's Day in 1986 that there was clear and evident interest on the part of various sides on some type of post-Anglo-Irish agreement initiative. The most logical approach would be some degree of first-time, U.S. economic aid. I was proud to have authored, in 1983, the first legislation calling for such aid. In the 99th Congress I had authored a new bill providing $500 million over 5 years in economic aid religious and sectarian emblems in the workplace, actively recruit Catholics for employment, place qualified Catholics in management positions, and develop training and educational programs for the Catholic minority.

U.S. companies that fail to comply with the provisions of this Bill will be stopped from importing their products into this country.

"Ability, not religion, should be the basis for employment opportunity. As a nation based on equality, our companies in Northern Ireland must take the lead in eliminating religious discrimination in the workplace," Fish said.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD Biaggi Sums Up Ad Hoc Committee Work for 1986

WRAP-UP OF THE AD HOC CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE FOR IRISH AFFAIRS WORK FOR 1986.

HON. MARIO BIAGGI
Of New York

Saturday, October 18, 1986

MR. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be completing my ninth year as chairman of the bipartisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs. At the close of the 99th Congress, the membership of the committee stands at 115, and I wish to publicly thank each member for their participation in the work of the committee this past year.

1986 may be recorded as a watershed year for the entire Irish question. We began 1986 fresh from the completion of the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement between the Governments of Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland. I referred to the document at that time as a "fragile first step." Congress saw fit to adopt a concurrent resolution of support for the agreement late in 1985 and the accord had the full support of the President as well.

As we approach the first anniversary of the signing of the agreement, one cannot be buoyed by the early stages of implementation. There continues to be strong disagreement to the agreement from all sides of the political spectrum in Northern Ireland. In my mind the greatest flaw in the accord is its failure to make any changes in the political status quo in Northern Ireland, which to me seems a basic prerequisite for any real prospects for a lasting political solution in Northern Ireland.

The revised version, H.R. 4329, which I was proud to cosponsor, passed the House on March 11. The bill maintained the authorization level of $250 million over 5 years but established the following conditions. It guaranteed that the aid would be purely economic.

The bill called on the President to make every effort to ensure that there is U.S. representation on the board of the International Economic Support Fund which will distribute the U.S. aid; it requires the President to certify to Congress each year that U.S. aid is being dispersed "in accordance with the principle of equality and nondiscrimination in employment without regard to religious affiliation." The bill also requires the President to provide an annual report to Congress on the degree to which the United States aid "has increased respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all people in Ireland and Northern Ireland."

The importance of this action cannot be underestimated. The absence of any conditions associated with United States aid would have put us in the position of indirectly subsidizing continued economic discrimination in Northern Ireland.

Ultimately in terms of the authorization bill, the final version provided $120 million over 3 years but did maintain the conditions in the House bill. A separate measure providing $50 million in fiscal year 1986 supplemental appropriations was also adopted by Congress in 1986.

While I evaluate the passage of the economic aid bill with conditions as a positive development, there were other developments in 1986 that were less than positive with respect to Northern Ireland. Central among these had to be the ratification of the supplementary extradition treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

This supplementary treaty had been proposed in the summer of 1985. It was supposed to be given subject to the British Government declaring their intention to withdraw from the north.

The vaunted St. Patrick's Day initiative was unveiled on March 5 when the administration proposed providing $250 million in aid over 5 years to Ireland and Northern Ireland. That very day I was proud to testify before the Subcommittee on Europe and the Middle East to urge that any U.S. aid proposal contain specific guarantees to ensure that the aid benefits both communities. The administration proposal as originally submitted contained no such conditions.

In my testimony I urged that there be specific linkage between the U.S. aid and the MacBride principles of fair employment and non-discrimination. I also recommended that the aid be provided in full compliance with the human rights provisions in the Foreign Assistance Act.

In what proved to be perhaps the most significant action taken by Congress on the Northern Ireland issue, the House Foreign Affairs Committee under the leadership of Chairman Dante Fascell and the critical assistance of my colleague Ben Gilman of New York, basically rewrote the legislation.

The bill called on the President to make every effort to ensure that there is U.S. representation on the board of the International Economic Support Fund which will distribute the U.S. aid; it requires the President to certify to Congress each year that U.S. aid is being dispersed "in accordance with the principle of equality and nondiscrimination in employment without regard to religious affiliation." The bill also requires the President to provide an annual report to Congress on the degree to which the United States aid "has increased respect for the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all people in Ireland and Northern Ireland."

The importance of this action cannot be underestimated. The absence of any conditions associated with United States aid would have put us in the position of indirectly subsidizing continued economic discrimination in Northern Ireland.

Finally, one of the original members of the ad hoc committee, my colleague from New York, Mr. Fish, sponsored an important bill calling on American companies doing business in Northern Ireland to adhere to the MacBride principles of fair employment and non-discrimination. I was proud to join as a co-sponsor of this measure.

I wish to express my deep appreciation to all the members of the ad hoc committee for their help and leadership this past year. I wish to especially thank Mr. Gilman, Mr. Fish, Mr. Borski, Mr. DiGuardi, Mr. Manton, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Walgren, Mr. Traficant, Mr. Russo, Mr. Stratton, Mr. Towns, Mr. McGrath, Mr. Dellums, Mr. Edgar, Mr. Lantos, and Mr. Lent for special efforts they exhibited throughout the year. In the other body, I wish to salute the leadership of Senator Hatch, especially with respect to the extradition treaty, and Senator Helms. In addition Senator D'Amato of New York displayed a consistent degree of leadership throughout the year on all issues of importance to the committee.

Finally, as I have done at other times during the year, let me also pay tribute to those individuals and organizations in the Irish-American community who have worked so closely with the ad hoc committee during 1986. This includes but is not limited to the Ancient Order of Hibernians, their immediate past national president, Joe Roche, and their new president, Nick Murphy. In addition, the Irish National Caucus, led by Rev. Sean McManus, Rita Mullen, and Peter Burns O'Brien. These two organizations quick consideration in the other body. Yet there were sufficient enough concerns to have 55 House Members join me in a letter to Chairman Lugar of the Foreign Relations Committee to urge that a full set of hearings be held. This request was in fact granted and a total of four hearings were held on the proposal. I testified at the hearings as did several other members of the ad hoc committee, including Representatives Fish and Hughes. Following the hearings, I also authored a resolution calling on the committee to end their consideration of the treaty.

My objections to the treaty were based on the fact that it was unprecedented and served to eliminate the political offense exception to extradition which is common to more than 90 other treaties we are a party to. In addition, the treaty was made retroactive. I am confident that this issue will be revisited in the future.

The ad hoc committee was active in several other areas during 1986. Together with 15 other Members, we contacted the United States Air Force to terminate their contract with Short Brothers, Ltd., of Northern Ireland because of Short's continued discrimination against the Catholic minority in hiring and recruiting. The Air Force did advise me in an October 16 letter they they have agreed not to "exercise" an option to purchase additional aircraft from Shorts.

The ad hoc committee continues to be deeply concerned about the visa policy of our Department of State relative to political figures from Northern Ireland. This policy has resulted in the absolute exclusion of certain segments of political thought such as Sinn Fein while allowing others such as those of the Reverend Ian Paisley of the Democratic Unionist Party to have carte blanche access to the United States. This is a policy of indirect censorship directed against the Irish-American community which must be terminated.

Finally, one of the original members of the ad hoc committee, my colleague from New York, Mr. Fish, sponsored an important bill calling on American companies doing business in Northern Ireland to adhere to the MacBride principles of fair employment and non-discrimination. I was proud to join as a co-sponsor of this measure.

The ad hoc committee was active in several other areas during 1986. Together with 15 other Members, we contacted the United States Air Force to terminate their contract with Short Brothers, Ltd., of Northern Ireland because of Short's continued discrimination against the Catholic minority in hiring and recruiting. The Air Force did advise me in an October 16 letter they they have agreed not to "exercise" an option to purchase additional aircraft from Shorts.

The ad hoc committee continues to be deeply concerned about the visa policy of our Department of State relative to political figures from Northern Ireland. This policy has resulted in the absolute exclusion of certain segments of political thought such as Sinn Fein while allowing others such as those of the Reverend Ian Paisley of the Democratic Unionist Party to have carte blanche access to the United States. This is a policy of indirect censorship directed against the Irish-American community which must be terminated.

Finally, one of the original members of the ad hoc committee, my colleague from New York, Mr. Fish, sponsored an important bill calling on American companies doing business in Northern Ireland to adhere to the MacBride principles of fair employment and non-discrimination. I was proud to join as a co-sponsor of this measure.

I wish to express my deep appreciation to all the members of the ad hoc committee for their help and leadership this past year. I wish to especially thank Mr. Gilman, Mr. Fish, Mr. Borski, Mr. DiGuardi, Mr. Manton, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Walgren, Mr. Traficant, Mr. Russo, Mr. Stratton, Mr. Towns, Mr. McGrath, Mr. Dellums, Mr. Edgar, Mr. Lantos, and Mr. Lent for special efforts they exhibited throughout the year. In the other body, I wish to salute the leadership of Senator Hatch, especially with respect to the extradition treaty, and Senator Helms. In addition Senator D'Amato of New York displayed a consistent degree of leadership throughout the year on all issues of importance to the committee.

Finally, as I have done at other times during the year, let me also pay tribute to those individuals and organizations in the Irish-American community who have worked so closely with the ad hoc committee during 1986. This includes but is not limited to the Ancient Order of Hibernians, their immediate past national president, Joe Roche, and their new president, Nick Murphy. Yet there were sufficient enough concerns to have 55 House Members join me in a letter to Chairman Lugar of the Foreign Relations Committee to urge that a full set of hearings be held. This request was in fact granted and a total of four hearings were held on the proposal. I testified at the hearings as did several other members of the ad hoc committee, including Representatives Fish and Hughes. Following the hearings, I also authored a resolution calling on the committee to end their consideration of the treaty.

My objections to the treaty were based on the fact that it was unprecedented and served to eliminate the political offense exception to extradition which is common to more than 90 other treaties we are a party to. In addition, the treaty was made retroactive. I am confident that this issue will be revisited in the future.

Irish Media Reaction to Anglo-Irish Treaty

November 15th

IRISH INDEPENDENT

Today thousands of Loyalists and Unionists will march, talk, shout and sing. Spokesmen will denounce and threaten. And on the fringes the men of violence will be ready with their paraphernalia of destruction. The belief of all who take part in today's demonstrations in the North is that they can have the Anglo-Irish Pact buried if they do enough and make enough threats.

It is the historical tragedy of these people that such present tactics worked in the past, providing them with the conviction that they only have to say that they intend to do this or that and the opposing forces will back down and melt away. And there are many thousands of Northerners today who do actually believe that they will eventually get their way.

What they woefully fail to understand is that there are forces stronger than theirs working against them. A British Government has put its hand to the Anglo-Irish Pact, and its representative in the North, Mr. King, reaffirmed only yesterday the British Government's intention of going ahead with the Pact, no matter what bullyboy tactics are adopted.

Mr. King can make the reaffirmation since he knows that Northern Loyalists and Unionists have lost support in Britain because of their blocking tactics since the Pact was formed. It finally dawned on large sections of the British public that it is a joke to have a people who call themselves "Loyalists" going around acting in a very disloyal manner. The British now know that the Northern definition of loyalism is an exclusive one, meaning that whatever a Northern Loyalist decides is right is the only meaning that can be read into the word.

On our side of the Border we can only do two things in the face of today's demonstrations and marching. First is to intensify security everywhere, and that is being done. The second act on our part is to say once again that not one sentence in the Anglo-Irish Pact threatens any part of the Loyalist people in the North. Their rights remain intact, their beliefs are guaranteed and they have the assurance of the majority of people here that whatever solution is ultimately found for the North will be a peaceful one.

Anglo-Irish Treaty — A Year Later

IRISH PRESS, DUBLIN

In recent days John Hume, the SDLP leader, has been setting out his list of benefits which have accrued to the nationalist minority in the North as a result of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. As one of the chief architects of the pact, he is understandably eager to show it in its best possible light. But the reality, as he and his colleagues and the Government in Dublin well know, is that progress has been painfully slow and the benefits so far are very thin gruel indeed. The real test of this analysis is to ask if, in the heady days following the signing at Hillsborough, we had been told that a year later both governments would have achieved so little, would any spokesman for constitutional nationalism not have wondered what all the fuss was about.

We still have supergrass trials, even though Tom King, the Northern Secretary, offers some vague hopes about the future. We still have the Diplock Courts and here, despite strong pressure from Dublin and the fact that the issue was not a matter of controversy in the loyalist community, Mrs. Thatcher has sided with the ageing Lord Hailsham and the Northern judiciary and against the spirit of the Agreement. That, however Dublin, the SDLP or anyone else may care to dress it up, is a major setback. And now, on top of that, we have the threat of Loyalist bombs in Dublin.

To point out the promises that remain unfulfilled — and the list is a lengthy and much more formidable one than Mr. Hume's — is not to carp and cavil, or score political points. It is to reflect the feeling on the ground in the nationalist community in the North, which recognises that, whatever Mr. Hume and Mr. Barry may say, this particular emperor remains at best very scantily clad!

But nationalists in the North are also realists. They appreciate more than anyone on this side of the Border, the enormous symbolism of what has happened under this Agreement. Dublin voices in the corridors of Stormont, an Irish Government minister flying to Belfast to discuss the North as of

Bereavement

THE IRISH TIMES, Dublin

The Anglo-Irish Agreement is significant chiefly in that it registers a shift, even a turnaround, in British thinking on Ireland. Unionists are no longer to have an automatic veto on change in the Six Counties. They are not to be disfranchised or penalised or in any way deprived of their normal rights; but they are henceforth on a level with their non-Unionist fellow countrymen.

It is that shift which is so important. It is indeed possible to show that gains have already been made in this first year by the non-Unionist population, but they are not, in truth, great. What is vital is that in the Anglo-Irish Conference of Ministers there is an apparatus for careful monitoring, for adjustment of conditions, for righting of wrongs and for investigation. The conference already covers a broad field of activity between the two islands. That field can be enlarged.

The agreement is there and it is working. It will be there if Unionists step up their resistance; it will be there if they moderate their claims and resentments.

Psychiatrists and others involved in counselling recognise a variety of stages in the process of coming to terms with bereavement. And the Unionists do consider themselves bereaved. First, there is shock, then disbelief. Later comes anger — often anger at the person who has died. Sometimes there is an attempt to blame someone else for causing it. And then slowly there is a dawning acceptance of the new realities. Some of the family reach it sooner than others. Molyneux and his circle are perhaps beginning to do so.

Finally, there is acceptance that the loved one — or the person to whom one has become accustomed — is gone and that life must go forward. The Unionists will come to it and will get on with making a new life for their people, letting the dead lie with the dead.

right, are still powerful arguments in favour of the Hillsborough document. And the ever more hysterical cries of foul from Unionist politicians — who recognise that real equality means their days of hegemony are gone forever — reinforce the belief among the minority that, if it's that bad for them, then there must be something in it that's good for us!

The problem so far has been that Britain's special pleading for sensitivity in view of the continuing Unionist clamours of protest has meant that even minor reforms which should have been introduced within weeks of Hillsborough have been put back for what is deemed a more propitious moment. John Hume is right when he says that standing up to the Unionist veto on any political arrangement which threatens their position of domination lies at the heart of the Northern — and Irish — problem. So far the Thatcher Government has not given way on the Anglo-Irish Agreement per se, but it has shown very little evidence so far having the courage to follow through on what the Agreement was designed to do — end the alienation of the minority and create a climate for political progress.

The Fianna Fail leader, Mr. Haughey, has criticised the lack of

An Old Threat To the New Belfast

By ROBERT O'CONNOR
Newsday Special Correspondent

BELFAST, N. IRELAND: When young Protestants rampaged through Belfast recently, smashing windows and looting, they were not thinking of George Smith and his $60 bonus.

But he was thinking of them, as he watched nervously from the city center store where he works as a salesman.

Suddenly, he recounted, "a bottle came and smashed against the window," which had become a backdrop for attacks on two police vehicles. For Smith, the afternoon's work was definitely over.

George Smith is not his real name. He spoke on the condition that neither he nor his employer be identified.

Smith is a part of Belfast's urban renaissance, often the biggest surprise for visitors to this city. The violence of the 1970's, which sapped Belfast of much of its spirit, had an unexpected side effect on the retail sector. It created a commercial vacuum that brought the cost of doing business low enough to attract aggressive — usually European — entrepreneurs who set up chic restaurants and boutiques.

Now Saturday-night diners around Shaftesbury Square have a choice of establishments with some very un-Belfast-like names: Ciro's, Speranza Pizzeria, LaBelle Epoque.

Even the high metal security fence thrown around the main retail district to deter bombers created a mall-like pedestrian zone that encouraged relaxed shopping. The mass influx of day-trippers from the Irish Republic means a huge pre-Christmas boost to the local economy.

But all that — and more — is in jeopardy.

George Smith was looking forward to November 15, as a day that would help put his store over its monthly quota and earn him that extra $60, his share of a 15 percent bonus.

But it was also the first anniversary of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, which gives the Irish government a consultative role in the running of Northern Ireland. Militant Protestants, who fear the agreement is the first step toward a united Ireland, have engaged in escalating, frequently violent, protest in an unsuccessful effort to persuade the British government to scrap it.

"We probably lost 10,000 to 12,000 pounds ($14,000 to $16,800) in trade," Smith said. There was, he achievement under the Agreement, and his criticism is justified. He has pledged to renegotiate it when returned to power and, if he can do that, more power to him. But the important thing should be to build on the Agreement, not scrap it and try to start again. A constitutional conference on the future of this island sounds fine in theory, but in the present state of Unionist uproar can anyone see their representatives attending, even if the British agreed? At present they won't even talk to Tom King or go to Westminster.

It's not the Anglo-Irish Agreement which is not working — it is the politicians on both sides of the Irish Sea who are failing to make it work. It's time Dublin applied some real pressure to get things moving. Unionist cries of protest cannot be allowed to stifle decisions indefinitely.

added, no chance that the loss could be made up.

On November 4, Sir Charles Carter, chairman of the Northern Ireland Economic Council, warned that the anti-agreement turbulence of the last year had neither been good for the province's economy nor pleasing to the British government.

"There is impatience, I think, in Westminster (Parliament)," he said, "with a situation which seems to go on and on getting worse."

Carter was speaking at a press conference at which the council, an advisory body, released a pessimistic annual report. Next year, the report said, would bring "no absolute reduction in unemployment levels."

"The climate for new inward investment is likely to remain difficult," the document added.

Northern Ireland's economy, never the healthiest of entities, was traditionally based on such pillars as shipbuilding and textiles. Each has declined as the Third World has industrialized.

The view of the province from abroad as a place of unremitting violence has hampered the search for investment.

"We have lost jobs which we have not been able to replace," said a spokesman for the Northern Ireland Chamber of Commerce and Industry. "And we would have been in a better position to replace those jobs had we had a better image abroad."

In 1970, according to Arthur Luke, a director in the Belfast office of the international accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand, 170,000 people were employed in the manufacturing sector in Northern Ireland. By 1979, that figure had dropped to 140,000. It is now 96,000, and the trend continues.

In the past 12 years, unemployment has almost quadrupled to just under a quarter of the work force.

Any reversals growing out of recent disruptions, Luke said, must be measured against a long-standing picture that was already "pretty grim."

Any reversals growing out of recent disruptions, Luke said, must be measured against a long-standing picture that was already "pretty grim."

"The time lag between a demonstration and an effect is very obscure and it doesn't happen instantly," he said. "It's a long-term, drip, drip type of thing."

But he warned, "If it does continue, it will lead possibly to a continuous slow deterioration in the industrial base in Northern Ireland."

Big British department stores like Marks & Spencer are showing confidence, through increased investment. But some people have their doubts.

One retail clerk said that the sound of breaking glass brought brief thoughts of emigration. Another worried that if demonstrations continue, "you won't get a Saturday in which you get a free run."

FREEDOM FOR ALL IRELAND

Message from Freedom For All Ireland Committee Chairman

THANK YOU

On behalf of the prisoners' families in Northern Ireland, I would like to take this opportunity to thank all who contributed so generously to the Christmas Relief Fund. The monies realized from this collection have been forwarded for distribution to the families, and shortly I will have a picture for publication showing the presentation of the monies to the families.

Unfortunately, for one reason or another, some Divisions did not contribute, and for their benefit, please be advised that I will be happy to receive your donation at any time.

We of the AOH are pledged to help Ireland by all legitimate means to complete independence. This is one of the ways that we can be of assistance, and I know that you will want to be part of this worthy cause. Please, therefore, do not feel that because Christmas is over, that it's too late — your help is always welcomed and appreciated. Please try to take care of this at your earliest convenience.

Thanks again to all who responded to this appeal, and I look forward to hearing from those who forgot. God's blessing on us all for 1987.

Alter McCarran-Walter !!

Who should be denied access to American audiences? Can the mere beliefs of some foreigners be harmful to Americans? Is it a function of government to "protect" its citizens from exposure to the ideas or experiences of others? In part, the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act was passed in 1952 (over the veto of President Truman) to provide such protections. Deemed appropriate at the height of the Cold War era, some of its thirty-three provisions for excluding alien visitors and migrants are sensible, while others are out-moded.

In effect, the State and Justice Departments have become the beneficiaries of enormous discretionary powers. McCarran-Walter has enabled certain officials to exclude aliens whose ideas might not be acceptable to a particular administration or, even worse, simply offensive to a particular American ally. When the Reagan Administration denies an entry visa to Gerry Adams or Bernadette Devlin, it consciously manipulates honest debate by withholding information and ideas from otherwise uninformed Americans. Of genuine concern to Americans also should be the inherent risk of totally transforming the State and Justice Departments into White House/British lackeys.

The problem, then, is that the McCarran-Walter Act is too broad. Representative Barney Frank of Massachusetts, among others, has recently proposed legislation which seeks to limit the scope of McCarran-Walter without doing away with it. For our part, we should study any proposed changes, while at the same time informing our congressmen as to why we have been dissatisfied with past applications of the Act. What we should not do is sit back, silently brooding, only to erupt when a guest speaker is again denied an entry visa.

There well may be a need for a law which would continue to exclude those who would "endanger the welfare, safety or security of the United States." However, freedom of speech was one of the founding principles of our nation. Should we fear the views of others which we find offensive or different from our own? Spokespersons for Sinn Féin or other Irish nationalist groups do not have to be feared and therefore excluded simply because they describe reality differently from our American media. Or because what they describe may well be embarrassing for Britain and its supporters in the United States.

Quick Action Needed on Behalf of Joe Doherty

Since July, 1986, much has been said and written about the theoretical results of the new US-UK Extradition Treaty. Virtually nothing is being said about the real and human consequences that are being suffered by a young man, Joe Doherty.

Joe is the Irishman whose extradition to the UK was denied by Federal Judge John Sprizzo, who ruled that Joe was entitled to the protection of the time-honored "political offense exception" because the actions for which the British now want him arose from the ongoing war to oust British colonial rule from Ireland. Judge Sprizzo's ruling sparked a furor in Britain, culminating in a new extradition treaty that was written expressly to insure that Joe will never again prevail in an American court of law. During September, Joe consented to be deported to Ireland, preferring the prison sentence that awaits him there to more years of imprisonment in the US, where he is separated from his family and from his country. On September 19, 1986 a United States Immigration Judge ordered Joe to be deported.

Shockingly, our government has, at the behest of the British, refused to comply with the Immigration Judge's order. Our government now claims that deporting Joe to Ireland would be "prejudicial to American interests." This extraordinary claim, the likes of which was never made before in the entire history of American immigration law, was un-

Aide Endures Stormy Years In Ulster Post

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

Special to The New York Times
BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Dec. 1 — The sense of being under siege can be pervasive in Northern Ireland, particularly on a rainy day at Stormont Castle, where Nicholas Scott reigns in uneasy solitude as a kind of a British proconsul.

The rumpled, resolute politician is reviled by the Protestant majority and doubted by the Roman Catholic minority, the groups that seethe in divided communities out beyond the wet bastions and watchful troops.

"You know, it's nonsense, that business about the snakes and St. Patrick," said Mr. Scott, the British minister of state responsible for security. He carefully explained the scholarship holding that snakes were never here in the first place.

Perhaps few other puzzlements of this land are so easily fathomed by the long line of officials who have come as alien appointees across the centuries to serve what some term "time on the cross" in Britain's governance of Ireland.

This summer Mr. Scott broke a modern longevity record for British officials here: It had been five years since the instant when his wife, Cecilia, burst into tears at the news that he was being appointed to a job at Stormont.

This is normally a two-year stint far removed from the more promising career paths near Downing Street. But Mr. Scott, who spends roughly half the week in Belfast, commuting from his London home, has been deemed indispensable here, and the junior minister's term has been extended. He is second in command to Tom King, Britain's relatively new secretary of state for the province.

Some Serpents May Remain

Mr. Scott may be reluctant, but he is also wily and respected in serving through London's latest attempt to pacify the violent politics of its more unwilling subjects on this island.

"Looking around, I sometimes wonder if the snakes have left," he said, smiling. He was referring to unnamed antagonists as he persevered through the familiar mixture of political depression and religious violence, a mixture easily stirred by the latest mortar attack or midnight assassination.

In the year since a British-Irish accord was approved over the objections of the Protestant loyalists, their anger at Britain has grown. They remain shocked that London and Dublin could have agreed on a method for trying to force the majority to guarantee civil rights and some power-sharing to the Catholic nationalist minority.

The accord also focuses on cross-supported by any evidence whatsoever.

Joe Doherty is a kind, generous, gentle and highly principled man. His life and future are in your hands. Please call (or write immediately) to your Senator, your congressman, or the Attorney General. Demand that the Immigration and Naturalization Service abide by the order directing Joe's deportation to Ireland. Please do it NOW while there is still time.

Joe Doherty Defended Against Deportation to Northern Ireland

U.S. Senator Alfonse D'Amato (R-NY), in a letter to Attorney General Edwin Meese, urged that the Immigration and Naturalization Service allow Joseph Doherty, im-attempts to eliminate the retroactive clause. "The U.S. Constitution does not allow retroactivity for domestic laws, and we shouldn't allow it in our treaties," said D'Amato. "Regretprisoned in the U.S. for over three years, to be returned to the Republic of Ireland rather than to Northern Ireland, where his life may be placed in danger.

"It is incomprehensible to me that certain persons in the State Department insist on involving themselves on the side of the British in the conflict in Northern Ireland," said D'Amato. "In the case of Joseph Doherty, they have objected to his deportation back to the Republic of Ireland, the land of his citizenship, for one reason and one reason only. They are trying to buy time so that the British Parliament can adopt the new extradition treaty in the next several weeks."

The Supplemental Extradition Treaty, which allows for the re-trial of political offenders who have previously been exempted from extradition by U.S. courts, passed in the U.S. Senate, despite D'Amato's border measures to combat the Irish Republican Army's violent resistance to a divided Ireland. But the loyalists were never offered the veto power over the pact that they furiously demand.

"They never thought they'd be treated this way by a British government, least of all a Conservative government run by Margaret Thatcher," Mr. Scott said. "So often in the past, British governments have been confronted either by an I.R.A. campaign of terror or loyalist intransigence and violence, and then they've ducked away. People haven't yet appreciated we're not going to do that again."

An Optimist by Local Standards
"I find it inconceivable that you could 'solve' the problem in under 10 years, and I think that it's probably more like 20 years," Mr. Scott said. He was uttering a bit of relative op-tably, this treaty will change the political offense exemption that has been a cornerstone of our Nation's extradition policy."

Appealing to Justice Department
On September 16, Judge Howard I. Cohen of the Executive Office for Immigration Review granted Doherty an Order of Deportation. In a highly unusual and unprecedented move, the INS appealed Judge Cohen's order on the grounds that having Doherty deported to the Republic of Ireland would prove "prejudicial to the interest of the United States."

In an effort to block this political move, D'Amato and Congressman Mario Biaggi, Chairman of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, have appealed directly to Attorney General Meese to intervene in the case and grant Doherty his right to be deported to where he chooses. "We have demanded that the Order of Deportation issued by Judge Cohen be honored, so that Joseph Doherty is returned to the Republic of Ireland," stated D'Amato, who is also a member of the Committee.

Doherty, a thirty-one year old Irish citizen, has been held in the U.S. federal prison system for no crime committed in this country, other than entering the U.S. without proper documentation. He has expressed a desire to be voluntarily deported from the U.S. to the Republic of Ireland, even though he faces a prison term there. To Doherty, this is preferable to being deported to Northern Ireland, where he was born, as he believes his life would be in mortal danger.

The letter to Attorney General Meese was also co-signed by Congressman Robert A. Roe, Congressman Benjamin A. Gilman, Congressman Thomas J. Manton, and Congressman Joseph J. Dio Guard.

Ancient Map of Ireland Discovered

LAURI DELANEY-BOTTERI, of the Boston Graphics Society, with map of Ireland and compilation of names.

The Boston Graphic Arts Society recently discovered an ancient map of Ireland which sheds new light on Irish genealogy. The map, originally, drawn between the 16th and 17th centuries, outlines the origins of titled and prominent Irish families and points of historical interest. According to the society's director, Peter Bonfilio, the map lays to rest any doubts as to who really is a descendant of Irish royalty.

Scholars believe that the map was embossed on parchment by succeeding generations of monks. The reason the map was compiled is not known. One theory is that local priests compiled lists of what they considered the principal Irish tribes of families in their area. The information was then carried to the monasteries and abbeys where monks used crow quills to draw the map and insert names in the proper

Ireland's Oppressed Children

By HARRY MCGUIRK

Monsignor Brady, the pastor of St. Camillus Church in Rockaway Beach, N.Y., is a hero to all of us who work for the Jesuit Center for Peace and Justice in Ireland. It has undertaken the enormous task of "a rescue mission" to help the abandoned children of Ireland.

The first function on behalf of the Jesuits took place at St. Camillus' Springman Hall, Rockaway Beach, on November 26, Thanksgiving Eve, at 8 p.m. Monsignor Brady is unstinting in his support and encouragement for this worthy and noble cause.

The young Jesuit priest, Father Peter McVerry, a native of Newry, County Down, flew in from Ireland on Aer Lingus to be guest of honor at this function. He heads the rescue mission of unwanted Irish children from seven years and up who are sleeping out "rough" because they are homeless and have no place to go.

There was a hostel in Dublin which took care of these kids and was manned by voluntary workers. But the Irish Government took away the funding (the Department of Social Welfare) and the children have been scattered like human refuse to find their own salvation. Now they sleep in alleyways, abandoned buildings and cars, unwanted and uncared for.

Father Peter McVerry, S.J., is leading a crusade of awareness. Not too many years removed from the charges he has pulled off the lonely, midnight streets of Dublin, he and his co-workers, young seminarians, have children piled into every flat and house they can find to keep the kids away from the deprivation that any big city offers to a child that is cold and hungry.

It is an almost impossible task for one man, with unsurmountable goals. There are perhaps hundreds of children and even with the amount he now has on hand there is a crisis of funds and moral support for him. No one seems to care what happens to the children and least of all those departments of government in Ireland which have the responsibility for the good and welfare of children have closed all avenues of aid.

Can you remember when you were seven years of age in Ireland? That was probably the year you received your first Holy Communion and even though the people were poor in Ireland, they made sacrifices on behalf of their children. Consider the position of "these kids" without the love and affection of parental kind, no introduction to God, no church, no school, just like young animals scurrying for a shelter in the night in abandoned places. Ireland is no Disneyland to them. If we had little else in Ireland during our growing-up years, we had a warm fire on a cold winter's night and a bed. In the absence of an extra blanket you at least had your dad's heavy coat or mom's shawl to cover you. We loved our parents all the more for their kindness to us and their sacrifices. There were nine in our family and no one who needed a shelter was turned away from our door.

All State Hibernians are mourning the death of Brother Pat Sherwin, Bridgeport Division, one of the State's Hibernian elder statesmen. As Brother Lee Reilly eulogized, "A voice that spoke out loud and clear and often for the cause of Ireland's freedom was stilled."

The membership drive started in 1986 is continuing through 1987. Prizes are offered to those Divisions registering the most new members.

National Director and State Vice President Frank Kearney is leading a statewide drive to have "MacBride's Principles" supported and adopted in the State Legislature.

The final report of the First Annual AOH Golf Tournament revealed that 146 players participated. Unanticipated the attractiveness of this event, the Committee was forced to turn away a large crowd of players. Plans are being formed for the fall 1987 tournament, with hopes of accommodating a larger number of entries.

Newly elected officers of the New London Division are: President Ernest Muehlberger, Vice President John Hanley, Secretary Norman

Hotel in Asbury Park, New Jersey. AOH State Treasurer Ed Cosgrove and LAOH State Secretary Anna Cosgrove are co-chairmen.

All divisions have reported elections and installations. Past National President Marge Rust is working on revising the New Jersey constitution and by-laws. This should be ready for review at the 1987 convention in June.

LAOH State Board Vice President Mary Paglione presented to Lynn Brady a plaque naming her "Jr. of the Year" at last summer's national convention. New Jersey just wanted to say how proud they are of Lynn. Lynn's parents, Marie and John Brady are members of the Elizabeth Division. John is originally from County Mayo and Marie from Belfast.

Connecticut was well represented at the Tri-State Organizational meeting held in Worcester, Mass. Former National President Bill McEnery presided over the meeting. The discussions were open and engaging. A follow-on meeting is scheduled for late April.

The Danbury Division's St. Patrick's Day dance will be held on March 14, in the Danbury Knights of Columbus Hall. Ron Keenan is Chairman. The New London Division will also hold their dance on March 14. John O'Keefe is Chairman.

The State Board first quarterly meeting of 1987 was held February 1, in the Meriden AOH Hall. The next State Board meeting is scheduled for May 3, in Danbury.

The North American Currach Association is holding its annual meeting on March 7, in Philadelphia. Currently, eight clubs constitute this association. They range from Annapolis, Md. to Boston, Mass. and west to Pittsburgh, Pa. The 1987 currach racing schedule will be established at this meeting. A currach builder from Maharees, Dingle Peninsula, Co. Kerry, is in Philadelphia to build several racing currachs for the Philadelphia and Long Island, NY currach clubs. The Association solicits interest from other regions or organizations in forming rowing teams or clubs and in building these boats in the traditional style. Currach racing may also be attractive to the competitive spirit of young Irish-Americans. For information contact Jim Gallagher, 351 Boston Post Road, East Lyme, Ct. 06333.

Natl President Addresses New London Hibernians

The John F. Kennedy Division 2, AOH, New London, CT, held their annual Memorial Mass for deceased members and brunch following the Mass on November 23. George Ryan, of Waterford, CT, was Chairman of the event.

Mr. Murphy reported that it is generally agreed by all parties that the root cause of the intensely raw situation in Northern Ireland has been the fanatic discrimination against Catholics in every facet of society over the past 65 years, since the partition of the six northeast counties. He went on to suggest that the one-year old Anglo-Irish Accord is proving ineffective. Security on NATIONAL PRESIDENT Nick Murphy, left, with Connecticut State Secretary James Gallagher on the occasion of the John F. Kennedy Division's annual Memorial Mass for deceased members. President Murphy addressed the AOH members at the Brunch which followed.

AOH President Nick Murphy was introduced by State AOH Secretary James Gallagher. Mr. Murphy spoke about the cultural, humanitarian and political programs of the AOH. Specific cultural programs supported by the AOH include the Chair of Catholic Studies at Notre Dame Univ., the Chair of Celtic Studies at Catholic Univ., and the Irish Way Scholarship program. Concerning humanitarian activities, the Order recently erected an obelisk at Valley Forge, PA to recognize unclaimed U.S. Medal of Honor recipients buried there, many of whom were Irish. Also, Mr. Murphy and Ladies AOH President Sheila Clifford, of Waterbury, CT, joined to initiate a priority program of individual and family support for the badly needed reforestation program in Ireland. The Order is actively working to gain broad U.S. support for the MacBride Principles, to help combat discrimination against Catholics in employment in Northern Ireland. The initial thrust is directed at U.S. companies with unfair employment records in Northern Ireland and Britain's unenforced Fair Employment Act.

Prefacing his remarks on political issues Mr. Murphy cited his whirlwind activities during the past six months in meeting with influential government leaders in Britain, Ireland and the U.S. Using direct observations and information obtained during these meetings, he evaluated the U.S. news media's record in reporting events in Northern Ireland. To set the record straight, he said, there are no correspondents from the major U.S. newspapers or broadcast corporations operating in Northern Ireland. Rather, most of the news reported here is obtained from the British Broadcasting Corp. (BBC). Further, Britain's budget for propagandizing the Northern Ireland situation in the U.S., largely via visiting teams who directly brief media editors, publishers and direcboth sides of the border is being strengthened, partially funded by an initial U.S. allotment of 50 million dollars in support of the Accord, and thereby further solidifying the partition. Ironically, Britain's fiscal share in supporting the Accord is the cost of maintaining her troops in Northern Ireland. One hopeful note in all of this is that the U.S. Congressional Ad Hoc Committee on Irish Affairs is requiring accountability for the expenditure of funds supporting the Accord, particularly as it should serve to stimulate employment, to correct the many human and civil rights violations and to foster an equitable justice system.

During recent Accord negotiations The Dublin Government request to modify the Diplock Court system in the North, to provide for three judges instead of the current one judge no jury court, was rejected by Mrs. Thatcher. It appears obvious that the Accord is a typical British stalling technique and that she does not intend to correct the disgraceful governmental actions in Northern Ireland. Consequently, pressure from the American Catholic community, i.e., Irish, German, Italian, Polish, etc., on the U.S. Congress and news media is absolutely essential if Britain's propaganda activity and her policy of discrimination and repression against Catholics in Northern Ireland are to be negated. It is incredible that these conditions are being fostered in 20th Century civilized western Europe despite the worldwide trend toward greater civil rights, and that these activities are officially accepted by the U.S. Government.

In closing, Mr. Murphy emphasized that the "AOH is determined to use every legal means at its disposal to apply pressure on the London Government to accept its responsibility to improve the plight of the Catholic minority in Northern Ireland."

Junior Scrapbooks Guidelines Offered

It is important for the Juniors to understand the rules for the scrapbook before they spend their time and effort.

The scrapbook is to be presented to the National Vice President at the Convention in 1988. The exact time and place will be announced at a later date.

Each Junior Division must present a separate scrapbook. If more than one Division exists in your State, each Division must present an individual scrapbook if it wants to be considered for the Best Junior Division at the National Convention.

The general recommendations are as follows:

1. The size should not exceed standard large scrapbook or photograph album size.
2. Cover design and art work throughout the book is encouraged.
3. Material should show general participation in all listed projects — religious projects, Catholic Action Programs, mission activities, Promotion of Irish History, community involvement and social activities.

The work that a scrapbook involves cannot be put off until the last minute. Plan ahead, take the pictures, and experiment with layouts. It is fun and exciting to work on such a project when begun early and carried through according to a plan.

Junior Banner Contest Announced

The LAOH has announced guidelines for the Junior Division Banner Contest, whose entries will be judged at the 1988 National Convention, dates and place to be announced later.

The subject is: St. Brigid, Patroness of Our Order.

Three prizes will be awarded in the form of savings bonds of $100, $50, and $50 dollars. There can be one banner from each junior division entered, of a size not to exceed 16" by 24".

Banners must be received by National Vice President Mary E. Bradley no later than June 1, 1988. They will be judged on organization of the material and originality.

Because much time, study and thought must go into the design and preparation of the banners, announcement is being made early to allow for the development of some excellent work on the part of junior LAOH members.

Essay Contest Now Closed to Entries

The National Irish History Essay Contest, sponsored by the National Board, LAOH, closed on February 15, 1987.

All State Historians are reminded to submit, from their state, the two best essays from each level (Elementary Schools and High Schools) to National Historian Kathie Linton, 620 West Steels Corners, Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio 44223, by March 15, 1987.

Kathie also wishes to make clear that to include the Table of Contents is optional and will not be taken into consideration during the judging.

The results will be announced as soon as possible after the final judging is completed.

Division 9 held their installation on Sunday, January 4 at St. Michaels Church in Flushing. County President Anne Neville installed the officers with Mrs. Katherine Waldmer, past president of Queens County Board, as president.

Ladies Massachusetts News

Ladies Ancient Order of Hibernians of Springfield paid tribute to one of their members, Sr. Thomasine O'Connor, S.N.D., of happy memory. A memorial Mass was offered for Sister by Division Chaplain Father Francis Reilly, prior to their January meeting. Sister was chairman of Catholic Action for five years preceding her death, and was instrumental in establishing a Scholarship Fund four years ago.

Six lucky youngsters have benefited from Sisters efforts and in her memory the project will now be known as the Sr. Thomasine Education Awards. Under the direction of Sr. Patricia James, S.S.J., the new Catholic Action Chairman, this program will continue to flourish and the next Awards will be presented in May to students who are or will be enrolled in Catholic schools or colleges.

Congratulations to the following newly elected presidents in the various counties in Massachusetts.

Essex County: Division 8, Ita Donahue; Division 10, Maureen Kidney; Division 11, Diane Gregory; Division 14, Alice Lyons; Division 18, Claire Kane; Division 20, Katherine Shine.

Hampden County: Division 8, Frances Hamra. Middlesex County: Division 6, Margaret Davis; Division 14, Deborah Barrett; Division 21, Mary Morey.

Worcester County: Division 8, Elaine Patterson; Division 36, Eileen Lynch.

A new Division was just recently chartered in Lowell and the State welcomes the members of Division 19 of Middlesex County.

Middlesex County Board recently held their Annual Dance with Andy Healey's Band. The members of the County honored Miss Helen O'Leary for her contributions to the Hibernians over the years. A past president of Middlesex County and for many years a member of the Framingham Division before transferring recently to the Watertown Division, she is the sister of Past National President Walter O'Leary of Massachusetts.

Christmas was a busy time for all the Divisions as they gathered for special activities. Division 36 of Worcester held their Christmas Party on December 10, with Mass celebrated by Rev. James Champion, followed by a dinner at the Emerald Isle. Division 14's party was held at Hibernian Hall in Watertown; entertainment was provided by Joanne Marshall on the accordion. Division 8, Clinton held their Christmas Party at Lord Ben's in Sterling, MA, and included installation of newly elected officers. Division 8, of Springfield, held their Annual Christmas Party and Dinner at LIDO's where Santa appeared with small gifts for all. Chaplain Father Francis Reilly entertained with songs, accompanying himself on the guitar.

Essex County Board held their quarterly meeting on February 1 in Haverhill. The Mass. State Board will meet March 1 in Salem and the Middlesex County Board will meet in Weston on March 8. On February 27, Andy Healy will participate in a benefit for The Little Sisters of the Poor. Kathleen McMullen is chairlady for this affair.

Plans are well under way for many St. Patrick's Day celebrations. Dinner dances will be held by Marlboro on March 14 at the Best Western; by

National President

It is that time of year when we think of spring and hope that the winter will soon be a memory.

It is also the time when each of us should be looking for ways to increase our membership and to increase attendance at our monthly meetings.

How can we increase our membership???? We should encourage women to join the Hibernians. When they ask "Why should I belong?" "Why shouldn't you belong to the oldest Catholic Lay Organization?" Highlight the purpose of the organization as set forth in the Preamble to our National Constitution — to promote Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity; to foster the ideals and perpetuate the history and traditions of the Irish people and to promote Irish culture, etc. Highlight some of the activities — the Columban Mission Fund (note that at the 1986 National Convention a check for $47,000 was presented to the Columban Fathers); Catholic Action activities; Annual Irish History Essay Contest; Trinity College Scholarship and the Notre Dame Hibernian Fund, established to fund the Study of American Catholicism, especially the Irish influence, and many Hibernian scholarships at Notre Dame.

During the past year has attendance at your monthly meetings been dropping off? What can you do to increase attendance?

The President and officers should remember that a member will not sacrifice the time to attend a poorly conducted meeting or join an organization that doesn't offer a variety of activities.

Before a regularly scheduled meeting a President should prepare an agenda and see that the other officers are prepared to give reports. Our Ritual provides the Order of Business, but in order to keep the proper flow of business, an agenda is essential.

The President should conduct the meetings but not dominate them. She should be prompt in calling a meeting to order when a quorum is present. She should provide an atmosphere and framework in which the membership can choose its areas of emphasis. Other officers should be prepared to give complete and informative reports.

Responsibility for the welfare is shared by all members, not just the officers. At times, members do not agree with every decision, but should have the willingness to support decisions made by the membership.

All Divisions should set their goals for 1987, then establish a guide on how you are going to achieve them. The Hibernians offer many activities and programs; it is up to the Divisions to open the door when opportunity knocks.

Hibernian Trees in Ireland — A Magnificent Opportunity

The joint National Boards of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, have agreed on undertaking a project titled "HIBERNIAN TREES IN IRELAND". The project presents a noble opportunity to have a tree planted in Ireland — in your name, in your honor.

In 1183 Giraldus Cambrensis visited Ireland and described it as a "beautiful well-wooded land." By the year 1700, owing to its colonial situation, the country had been stripped of its forests. And an Irish poet could lament "Cad a deanfaimid feasta gan admad/Ta deiread na gcollte ar lar" (What will we ever do without trees/All our forests are destroyed).

Now, you can do something about it. By courtesy of the replanting program being undertaken by the Irish Government, you can have a tree planted in any county in the Republic — in your family name and in your honor. Also, your name will be enrolled in the register of the Irish Forestry and Wildlife Service at the particular forest center (where it may be seen during visiting hours).

In addition, your participation in this opportunity will be verified by a certificate from the Irish American Cultural Institute's "Trees for Ireland" program.

As the old saying has it "They who plant trees love others besides themselves." And what better way to express your affection and regard for a member of your family, or for a friend, than by planting a tree in his or her name? Instead of the conventional birthday card or thank you note, what could be more special, or more welcome, than the living gift of a tree in Ireland.

A $10 tax-deductible donation to the Irish American Cultural Institute's "Trees for Ireland" program accomplishes this for you — and provides you with a living connection with your ancestral culture.

LAOH Michigan State News

The new officers of the Rose Kennedy Division were installed on January 7 at a lovely candlelight ceremony. Congratulations were extended to President Sue Lauster, Vice President Patricia "Murphy" Martin, Recording Secretary Margaret Murphy, Financial Secretary Rosemary Hoffman, Treasurer Alice Foley, Historian Peggy Gouin, Missions, Peggy Boland, Catholic Action, Katie McIntosh, Mistress at Arms Barb Kelley, and Sentinel Doris Long. In late fall the St. Bridget Degree Team of Michigan conferred the major degrees to 10 division sisters and the memorial mass for all deceased LAOH and AOH members was offered by Father McGrath and Father Cooney at the Hibernian Hall.

Mass in honor of Patroness St. Brigid was celebrated at the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick Hall in Detroit on February 1.

The Ethel Kennedy Division also installed new officers. The leaders of the division for the coming year are President Agnes Gowdy, Vice President Nancy Mack, Secretary Betty Littlejohn, Financial Secretary Mary Ochab, Treasurer Nancy McCauley, Irish Historian Mary Jane Ryan, Missions, Lillian Hennigan, Catholic Action, June Flanigan, Mistress at Arms Ruth Minnick, Sentinel Melva Desmond, and Standing Committee, Garnet Fleming.

In November the division delivered bushels of canned goods and turkeys to the Capuchin Monastery for the Soup Kitchen's Thanksgiving dinners. Also in November the division manned a table at the St. Clement Craft Fair where Irish baked goods and Christmas items were sold.

One donation that really warmed our hearts over the holidays was being able to help our Past State Chaplain, Fr. Edward Farrell, who needed money for the installation of an elevator in St. Agnes Church for his elderly and handicapped parishioners.

LADIES Illinois News

November 1, 1986 marked the 90th Anniversary of the Chartering of Division 1, LAOH, in East St. Louis, Illinois. The occasion was marked by having Mass offered in the Church of St. Augustine of Canterbury, with the Most Rev. James Kelleher, D.D., Bishop of Illinois, as celebrant.

Some two hundred and fifty members attended and enjoyed a delicious Irish Buffet. Guest Speaker for the occasion was Bishop Kelleher. Everyone enjoyed after-dinner entertainment and Irish music provided by the Artie Stepping Orchestra.

General Chairman was Margaret Downey, assisted by Mary Jean Hemann, Mary K. Martz and Dorothy Keeling as co-chairmen. A large working committee made the event the huge success that it was.

timism by the measure of history and stressing that the pact was designed to outlive the changes of government in Dublin and London that loyalists are hoping for soon.

Mr. Scott, a 53-year-old survivor from the Conservatives' "wet" or moderate wing, concedes that history shows the "plain blame" of Britain at some crucial turns in dealing with Ireland. But he dismisses as "rubbish" the I.R.A. contention that underlying the ancient problem is a bone-deep British refusal to ever yield control.

"I think it is sad, direct rule," he said of the British presence that costs London $1,500 a year in subsidies for each of the province's 1.5 million people. "The basis of our policy is self-determination for the people of Northern Ireland."

As the loyalist politicians are again vowing civil disobedience and further boycotts of local governments, Mr. Scott continues to insist that some of them eventually will soften and use the pact's provisions for negotiating power sharing with the Catholic nationalists.

Meanwhile, however, he must deal with the resurrection of loyalist killing squads imitating the I.R.A.'s long resistance to British rule.

"It's all nonsense, this business of 'one man's terrorist is another man's freedom fighter,'" he declared. "We're all going down the drain if we adopt that attitude."

Trying to End the Violence
Ending the violence is the key to the pact. Its countermeasures, Mr. Scott said, have been helped by the world's growing revulsion against terrorism and by the decision of the Roman Catholic bishops in the United States to start an Irish charity effort to channel funds away from gun-running drives by militant Irish-Americans.

"But let's be honest, you can't wipe out the violence unless you have the support of the communities," he said.

In that regard, Catholic nationalists contend that one of the larger weaknesses of the accord thus far is the Thatcher Government's failure to change the province's court system, which allows trial by a single judge hearing the uncorroborated evidence of turncoat I.R.A. members. Mr. Scott said London saw substantial "practical difficulties" in enlarging these courts to three judges, as critics have recommended.

North American Feis: Buffalo Resolutions

The North American Feis Commission on October 19, 1986, at its Buffalo, New York Convention, adopted the following resolution:

WHEREAS: The Anglo-Irish conflict continues unabated even after eighteen years in the present campaign for human rights and Irish unity, making it the longest sustained operation in the over eight hundred-year-old British invasion of Ireland;

WHEREAS: The shoot-to-kill policy and coverup of same continues to be part of British policy in occupied Ireland as witnessed by the recent Stalker affair and now condemned by Amnesty International;

WHEREAS: Even after almost a year of the signing of the much ballyhooed Anglo-Irish Accord there still exists in British-occupied Ireland the shameful strip-searching of women prisoners in Maghera berry jail, the non-jury, one-judge Diplock courts, the internationally condemned supergrass trials where the only witness is a convicted criminal who is bribed with a large sum of money and a new identity in some part of the British Commonwealth, the harassment of the nationalist community by the acquisition of property overlooking large nationalist areas on both sides of the British-imposed partition;

WHEREAS: The fate of Joe Doherty in violation of the decision of the US courts is now being further delayed by a vindictive US State Department to further appease a vengeful British Prime Minister;

WHEREAS: The US Government and now the Canadian Government pursues a selective policy of exclusion by not allowing Irish Republican speakers to address Irish-American-Canadian audiences and allowing British Loyalists to freely come to both countries and get widespread publicity;

WHEREAS: Job discrimination continues to exist in the Six Northeastern Counties of Ireland by United States and Canadian companies as well as many others causing widespread distress and disillusionment;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED: That the North American Feis Commission in Convention assembled at Buffalo, New York, on this 19th of October, 1986, call upon our respective governments in the United States and Canada to use their influence with the government of the United Kingdom to end oppression, British terror and occupation of the Six Northeastern Counties of Ireland;

BE IT RESOLVED: That those same governments end forthwith their discrimination policy against the admission of speakers on behalf of the victims of oppression from Ireland;

BE IT RESOLVED: That the Governments of the United States and Canada insist on fair employment practices by United States and Canadian companies operating in occupied Ireland by adopting the MacBride Principles as a matter of policy, and that the millions of United States and Canadian taxpayers' funds in support of the Anglo-Irish Accord be spent in accordance with those principles;

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED: That the United States State Department observe the decision of the United States Courts in the case of Joe Doherty and cease and desist in aiding and abetting the vindictive policy of the Thatcher government regarding all Irish political prisoners;

BE IT FINALLY RESOLVED: That copies of this Resolution be sent to Secretary of State George Shultz and selected ranking members of the United States Government; to Senator Richard Lugar, Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and to other members of Congress; to the Minister for Foreign Affairs of Canada and other appropriate members of the Canadian Government; to the news media in the United States, Canada and Ireland, and to the official representatives of Ireland in the United States and Canada.

BINGHAMTON, NY

Happy New Year for the Staff of NHD! Let's hit those sidelines!

BASEBALL — Free Agents aren't faring that well with the owners. Not too many have been signed for large contracts in dollars or in years! The owners seem to be adamant in adhering to not throwing their money around! YR knows somebody that would be willing to sign a one year contract for less than $500,000/year. This guy hasn't much hair and what little is left is somewhere between white and grey. He wears glasses and he's already seen 50! Even for $250,000/year, he would be willing to go out everyday and make a fool out of himself! At least, the owners would be getting their money's worth. Speaking of which, Reggie Jackson is returning to Oakland. As stated earlier in this column, Gene Autry didn't seem to think that he got a very good return on his investment in free agents.

THE NFL — As of this writing, the teams are reduced down to 4! The Giants vs the Washington Redskins in the NFC. In the AFC, it's Denver vs the Cleveland Browns! Of the 4, the Giants, Redskins and the Browns have been part of the NFL for years. Denver is Johnny-Come-Lately! Yet, YR remembers when Cleveland played in what was called the All-American Conference which merged with the old NFL, many moons ago. Paul Brown owned them then. The sages have been gazing into their crystal balls and coming up with various combos for the Super Bowl! These choices go Giants vs Denver; Giants vs Cleveland; Washington vs Denver; Washington vs Cleveland! There aren't any other options. These guys are also saying that the Giants should go all the way. They are saying that the only team that has a chance of beating them is the Cleveland Browns. By the time you read this, it will all be history. You can check out how these guys did with their picks!

What happened with last year's champs? A combination of things! Egos and personalities played a major role in it! YR thinks a different type of motivation may be needed. Money didn't seem to do it! There was Walter Perry overweight, trying to catch the Redskins' QB as he rolled out of pocket and couldn't do it! This play should have resulted in a sack! It did not! Perry had a clause in his contract that he would receive a bonus in terms of dollars for making a specified weight. He didn't! So much for money as an incentive! Diet For Dollars!

NCAA — The big news is that the NCAA has reduced the number of athletic scholarships for football from 30 to 25. That's good and that's bad! On the plus side, maybe some of these schools will once again emphasize the academic side of college. Not that these kids should be geniuses but they should know how to read and write and comprehend after 4 years of college. On the minus side of the coin, the kid that will be hurt the most is the borderline athlete who is a fair student but needs the scholarship to attend college. He won't be there because they won't offer him the scholarship!

Speaking of the NCAA, Congrats to Joe Paterno and his Nittany Lions of Penn State for their fine showing in the Fiesta Bowl and on being named #1! Congrats also to Coach Paterno on being named SI's "Man Of The Year!"

SOUR GRAPES — To the banned player from Okla who used steroids and then made a public spectacle of himself all over the tube. YR feels sorry for his parents. Being a parent, YR knows the heart break a kid can cause. YR is sorry but he sees no need for the use of steroids or any other drug. YR speaks from his own experience!

KUDOS — To Dennis P. Long and Anheuser-Busch on their "Know When To Say When" ad campaign. YR would like to know if this was done by Darcy McManus out of St. Louis? Great commercial, guys!

ROUNDBALL — Haven't heard anything from the two guys that keep me informed about basketball in Ireland, Jim Larkin of Conn or Danny Doyle. Jim is involved with getting Irish girls scholarships to play ball in the U.S. Danny is involved with the Shamrock Games and other aspects of the Irish-American Sports Foundation.

The Big East is playing ball! Syracuse looks good this year! Georgetown has been upset already this season! Villanova appears to have come back! Rollie Massimino has his charges in good shape! Even the UConn looked good in losing to SU!

The Atlantic Coast Conf (ACC) is playing! Maryland seems to have as many problems on the court as it did off-the-court and in the court in the off-season!

ND hasn't been seen or none of the other Midwest Independents or the Big 10! But they usually come through with some great teams! YR expects nothing less this year!

The 3 pointer may make the difference in this game! YR saw the Louisville-Kentucky game where Louisville beat Kentucky by use of the 3 pointer. If a team has great outside shooters they can take advantage of this. If they don't have outside shooters and no height, they are still going to lose!

HS LEVEL BASKETBALL — The Binghamton Patriots lost in a tournament held in North Carolina over the holidays! They met their match with a team from the Big Apple and a team outside NY State! Then the Pats came home and were upset by smaller Oneonta! Their ratings plummeted with the NYS Sportswriters!

Haven't heard anything from Indiana. This is the state that YR would stay up late to listen to the HS Tournament Finals being aired by WOWO, Fort Wayne, Inc., when he was a mere brot of a boy! Indiana always has some fine HS teams! Basketball is big in the Midwest!

Speaking of basketball, Al McGuire has turned down an offer or offers to return to the ranks of college coaches. Al states he prefers the less-frantic and less-ulcer-prone job of being a Color Commentator! He does an excellent job!

By MARIO DEMARCO

The Medal of Honor is bronze, wreathed in green enamel held by a white starred ribbon of blue silk. It represents a great honor and privilege to the man who has won it — since he is in the company of the few heroes which have been honored by the Medal since it was first awarded during the Civil War in 1861. He who possesses the Medal of Honor is the owner of the highest military award for bravery that can be issued to any individual in the United States.

There are regulations to judge whether a man is entitled to the Medal, and there should be no shred of doubt when he is chosen. His act of bravery above and beyond the call of duty must have been witnessed by at least two people, must be made at the risk of his own life, and must not have subjected him to any justified criticism. A recommendation for the Medal must be made within two years of the date of the deed, and the award must be made three years after the date of the deed. Apart from the great honor it represents, the winner is entitled to certain conditions and privileges.

The above information is a condensed version of the Medal of Honor code and in my nearly 30 years of writing and illustrating famous personalities in different fields, I still admire the series of panels I portrayed back in the early 1940s, titled "The Highest in Honor" for the Navy Times, which ran for many years in this newspaper (and many of the original drawings are now displayed in different military museums in the United States and Hawaii).

I really took great pride in doing these panels, for in order to create each of them I read the original citation which was furnished to me by the different military branches of the service. I spent many hours carefully reading them, and would pause in amazement and wonder at the personal acts of bravery and hardships that these soldiers endured.

They were all outstanding, but there was one individual who stood above them all for he was the winner of two of these Medals, and after carefully reading his military exploits during World War I, I really believe he was justified in being awarded a third. This is hard to ever-his-name-is with Atlanta. This guy would be considered a hot dogger or a grandstander in YR's day. He has made slamming and dunking an art form! He is perfection!

YACHTING — YR's proposal about covering the 12 meter yacht races in Freemantle, Australia, didn't float. So it's back to the bath tub with his boat!

ODDS-ENDS — According to Frank Cull who writes a sports column for the Irish Echo, President Nick Murphy wishes to start a sports award program. YR will report more details on this once he has received them!

THINGS-TO-DO — By now you should have checked and redid your W-4 form; any IRAs or 401K plan you have. Check your medical insurance for coverage under what is called the Cafeteria plan! If you have done all this, have a good year! See you next time, on the sidelines! Until then, send those sport items to P.O. Box 166 ESS, Binghamton, NY 13904! Even Ed McMahon doesn't write to YR!

GUNNERY SGT. DANIEL JOSEPH DALY

believe since the conditions of the awarding of this Medal are so strict — but this was no ordinary military man. He possessed a certain "something" that separated him from the rest. I really believe he held no conception of the word "fear."

His name was Daniel Joseph Daly. Daly was born in Glen Cove, N.Y., in 1873 and when he became old enough he began selling newspapers in the heart of New York City. It wasn't too long before this skinny, wiry kid became adept with his fists, fighting countless battles with neighborhood toughs. When he reached maturity, he stood about 5 feet, 6 inches tall and weighed about 125 pounds soaking wet.

At the age of 26, he had hopes of getting into the Spanish American War. He enlisted in the Marine Corps on Jan. 10, 1899, but before his boot-camp training had finished, the war was pretty well finished, and he and his outfit were ordered aboard the USS Newark and sent to the Asiatic Fleet. In May 1900, they landed at Taku Bay, China, along with other Marines, and boarded trains for Peking.

At this period of time the Boxers were threatening the lives of foreigners in this country, which were made up mostly of traders, missionaries, and diplomats from Japan, Europe and America. All in all there were a mere 22 officers and about 400 enlisted men that made up the contingent from the countries of America, France, Russia, Italy, Great Britain, Japan and Austria-Hungary to protect them.

In mid July, the American Marines and Germans had been positioned on Tartar Wall, south of the American legation, but intense fire from the enemy had driven them from this key position. It was then that Captain Hall and Pvt. Daly mounted the wall bastion and after looking over the situation, the Captain asked Daly if it was possible for him to hold his position alone until dawn so that he could round up and bring back reinforcements and Chinese laborers to build up the break in the wall. The wiry private responded with a grin, and said that he would hold it. He had a single bandolier of ammunition and his Lee magazine.

At dawn when the Captain arrived with laborers to construct the damaged wall, he was rendered speechless as he viewed the numerous dead Boxers all around the area where Daly had spent the night, picking them off when they attempted to rush him, for he had managed to see them perfectly as they became dark silhouettes against the burning buildings behind them. Single handedly he had done the job required of him — and for this unusual act of bravery and gallantry he was awarded his first Medal of Honor.

Four years later, he was Gunnery Sgt. Daly, and wherever there was

Casement: Knight Against the Empire

Sir Roger Casement, one of the most intriguing and tragic figures in Irish history, went from a British Knighthood to the gallows in a space of five years.

Born in Co. Antrim in 1864, Casement enjoyed a comfortable youth as a member of the Protestant ruling class of Ireland. He originally planned a career in overseas trade, and made a strong impression on his superiors and acquaintances when he went to work for a trading firm in the Belgian Congo. (Among these, incidentally, was a young novelist named Joseph Conrad).

But though Casement was ambitious, he recognized that commercial success was founded on exploitation of the African people. His eloquent, moving letters to the British press describing the horrors of the rubber trade — murder, torture, and other brutal practices — aroused the interest of the Foreign Office. Before long, Casement was appointed British Consul in the Congo.

A worldwide outrage followed his 1904 report on the atrocities inflicted on the natives, resulting in many reforms. Casement followed this with an investigation into the mistreatment of Indians in Northern Brazil.

In 1911, Casement was knighted for his humanitarian work. He found this more of an embarrassment than an honor. Though his background was in the upper classes, Casement's first hand experience of colonialism had utterly changed his politics.

He saw his concern for the suffering people of the world as linked to his Irish origins. "I realized I was looking at this tragedy through the eyes of another race," he wrote, of people once hunted themselves, whose hearts were based on the root principle of affection at the point of contact with their fellow man, and whose estimate of life, was not something eternally to be appraised at the marketplace."

In 1913, Casement resigned from the Foreign Service to devote himself entirely to serving the Irish Home Rule effort. Irish hopes for a measure of independence were dashed when Home Rule was put in abeyance by the outbreak of World War I, and the movement took a more militant turn.

When Irish revolutionaries proposed a trip to Germany to recruit an Irish Brigade from among the ranks of captured British soldiers, Casement volunteered for the task. He reached Germany by a dangerous and circuitous route, going first to America and then back to Norway. He was accompanied in the last leg of the journey by a Norwegian confederate — who was, in fact, a spy in the employ of the British government.

Casement recruited few POWs to the cause. When word reached him that a rebellion was planned for Easter Monday of 1916, he quickly returned to Ireland with a shipload of armaments. Through a mix-up in communications, no one met him when he attempted to land on the coast of Co. Kerry. Casement was promptly arrested, charged with treason, and taken to the Tower of London to await trial.

His trial was a sensational affair. Intellectuals and civic leaders around the world begged for clemency in recognition of Casement's humanitarian efforts, but the English court was determined to make an example of Casement.

A series of diaries, widely believed to be forgeries, were entered as evidence. Casement was never allowed to see the diaries — which supposedly showed that he was homosexual, among other defamations — but copies were circulated among religious leaders throughout England to further discredit him.

More incredibly, the prosecution unearthed a law passed in 1351 which declared that "adhering to the King's enemies without (outside) the country" must be punished by death. Though the law was not on any current statute book, it made no difference. Casement's conviction was a foregone conclusion.

Casement was executed at Pentonville prison on August 3, and buried in the convict's cemetery. The full details of his trial and conviction will not be known until 2016, when the court papers will at last be made public.

In 1965, Casement's remains were removed to Ireland and reinterred at Glasnevin Cemetery following an official State funeral. Thousands gathered in the rain to pay their respects to Casement, who had been hanged nearly 50 years before.

Tracey to Lead N. Jersey St. Patrick's Day Parade

BERGEN COUNTY, N.J.: The Bergen Co. Council of Irish Associations has elected John Tracey as Grand Marshal of the 1987 St. Patrick's Day Parade of Bergen County.

This year the parade has been moved to Bergenfield and will be held on Sunday, March 15 at 2:00 P.M. The chairperson of the parade is Mrs. Tom (Marge) Kean of Dumont. Several hundred invitations to individuals, clubs, schools, and civic organizations have already been mailed by Mrs. Kean and her committee.

Tracey is a former Republican councilman of Demarest (1957 to 1960); "godfather" of the local Ambulance Corps; and was a Freeholder candidate in the 1965 primary. He was born in Saugerties, N.Y., of Irish and German roots. In 1977 he was named Grand Marshal of the Rockland County, N.Y. parade for his activities on behalf of the people of Northern Ireland.

In 1980 he established a division of the AOH with a base in Demarest. He served four years as president of the division and in 1983 was elected New Jersey State Secretary; and in 1985 he was elected N.J. State President.

In 1946 Tracey and fourteen other transportation executives formed the Delta Nu Alpha transportation fraternity dedicated to education in transportation, and the upgrading of the employment and compensation of those working in the industry. Today's membership is 15,000 persons, and Tracey has served in every national office — with two years as national president.

Tracey was nominated by the officers and membership of "An Cumann Cabhrach" (translated from the Irish to "A club of friends of oppressed persons") in Ireland.

The Grand Marshal, his aides, parade officers and officials will be installed at a festive ball to be held in St. John's Hall, Bergenfield, on February 7, 1987 at 9:00 P.M.

'Houston Is Irish Proud'

HOUSTON, TEXAS — Burke O'Rourke, a native Houstonian who served as an organizer of the parade in its early years, will be the Grand Marshal of the 28th Annual St. Patrick's Day Parade on Saturday, March 14. The parade series was started in 1960 by KPRC radio personalities Tim Nolan and Bob Byron.

A unique blend of the many cultures of the city, the parade theme this year is "Houston Is Irish Proud."

O'Rourke was named Grand Marshal by the St. Patrick's Day Parade Commission, a steering group composed of the AOH, and the Houstonians for Ireland, a local group with interests in the parade and the country.

O'Rourke, an independent oil operator here for 34 years, has a strong commitment to the ideals of his Irish cultural heritage. His grandparents came to Texas from the Ireland counties of Limerick and Tipperary. He is a charter member and past president of the Dick Dowling Division, AOH, and a charter member of the recently-formed Sam Houston Chapter.

Eight Divisions Installed

The Ancient Order of Hibernians of Virginia held a unique event on Sunday, December 14, 1986. At a most impressive and solemn ceremony the state president, Jerry Gorman, administered the oath of office to newly elected officials of five Hibernian Divisions from Arlington County, Fairfax County, Woodbridge, Virginia Beach, and Richmond.

Over one hundred persons witnessed the eight officers of each division pledge to support the Constitution of the United States and AOH Principles of Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity. State President Gorman congratulated each new officer and encouraged them to continue their displays of love for their fellow man, and urged them to further their endeavors to work together to increase membership and support the principles of the pledges just taken.

At an earlier ceremony in the same setting the ladies of the AOH were given their pledges by State President Anna O'Neill. President O'Neill urged the ladies to promote their charities and urged complete cooperation with the men's divisions.

After the inspiring ceremony the group partook of an excellent dinner of roast beef and all the trimmings.

necessary. The finance for this operation comes from a 70 pounds per head grant, plus a local authority topping-up grant on a yearly basis.

It is an operation that is desperately needed in the town, as the number of people who daily descend on the centre proves.

The hostel scheme has come a long way since that small boy sat in a classroom in Waterford and decided how he was going to spend his life.

And clearly, from his jovial and kindly manner, Brother Matthias has got as much out of his work as he has put into it.

Brother Matthias is a recipient of the J.F.K. award, the highest order the AOH bestows.

Hibernianism at Work in Georgia

DIVISION 1, SAVANNAH, GA, was host on December 6 at the second annual Christmas Dinner and Fund Raiser to benefit St. Mary's Home for Children. Guest speaker, Nat'l Director Tom Gilligan, spoke on the implementation of the MacBride Principles as a state law. Sister Alvin, administrator for the home, thanked the AOH for their generous donation, to help clothe the thirty-five children who live at St. Mary's. Dublin and San Jose "Twinned"

CITY HALL, SAN FRANCISCO: Acting Mayor of San Francisco, Supervisor John Maher, presented the key to the city to the Lord Mayor of Dublin, Alderman Bertie Ahern, T.D. The Honorable Mr. Ahern, accompanied by a high-ranking delegation from Dublin Corporation, had just concluded a very successful whirlwind promotional tour of San Jose and the San Francisco Bay area, which included finalization of arrangements for twinning the cities of Dublin and San Jose. From left to right are, John Moylan, president, American Irish Alliance; Mary Callanan, treasurer, city and county of San Francisco and past president LAOH; Lord Mayor Ahern; Supervisor Bill Maher; and Harry Gogarty, west coast manager, Irish Tourist Board.

to that small empty house which in childhood had been our temple of peace, happiness and love the memories flooded back, the Sacred Heart picture is still in the same prominent place in the livingroom. He was our protector, our guardian and he still is. Not so many blocks away though, were the hideous tenements of Sean O'Casey's writings and Brendan Behan's wrath. Those tenements were testimony to obnoxious British colonial rule in Ireland where tuberculosis ravaged people in their poverty, where starvation under the title of malnutrition decimated the population. The people rose in anger against the foreign rule which dictated that our own people should be poverty stricken or flee our native land. The leaders of 1916 produced a proclamation and in it was stated "the children of Ireland shall be cherished equally — all of the children."

Fr. McVerry flew in to explain the seriousness of this situation. We will not deny him or the children of Ireland a crust of bread. We particularly appeal to the leadership of the Irish-American community to take particular notice of this problem.

Questions and Answers

By Professor Robert T. Meyer, Catholic University

Note: Please forward questions to Professor Robert T. Meyer, Chair of Celtic Studies, Catholic University, Washington, D.C. 20064.

Q. Could you please tell me something of the name Kiernan? Bill Reilly, Staten Island, New York 10308

A. Originally the name was Mac Thighearnain, meaning 'son of Tighearnain,' which was a diminutive form of Tighearnain 'lord'. They were a branch of the O'Connors in County Roscommon, who are descended from Tighearnain, grandson of Turlough Mor O'Connor, King of Ireland. There are variants of the name: M'Kiernane, M'Kernane, Mac Kernan, MacKernan, MacCarnon, MacHarmon, Kiernan, Kernan, Kernon. Sometimes the name was simply replaced by the English Lord.

Q. Could you please tell me the origin and meaning of the name Kinerk? Eugene E. Kinerk, Sr., Prairie Village, Kansas 66208.

A. The name Kinerk was originally Mac an Airchinn, and it meant 'son of the erenagh' (Irish archbishop). In the middle ages the church properties, care, upkeep, rentals, etc. were in the hands of the laymen, leaving the bishops and priests free to devote themselves more fully to their sacred ministry. After a while these duties were taken over by the chancellor of the diocese, himself an ordained priest, sometimes the auxiliary bishop of the diocese. The erenagh then was a lay custodian of church property. Father Woulfe in his Irish Names and Surnames (Dublin, 1923) says that your family held considerable property in Clare and Limerick, but they lost it during the Cromwell confiscations. As you said yourself, there are several ways to spell your name: MacNairn, MacKinerkin, Kinarkin, Kinnark, Kinerk.

Q. Could you please check out Gilroy? I believe that we came from Co. Monaghan. Bryan A. Gilroy, Brooklyn, New York 11222

A. In Irish your name was Mac Giolla Ruidh, meaning 'son of Giolla Ruad, the red youth'. It probably had something to do with the color of his hair. Father Woulfe says that the name is common in counties Down, Cavan, Roscommon and Offaly. He makes no mention of Co. Monaghan.

Q. I would appreciate any information about the name Cannavan. Robert H. Cannavan, Kansas City, Missouri 64119.

A. In Irish your name was O Ceandubain, meaning 'descendant of Ceandubain, the black-headed one' probably referring to the color of his hair. This was the name of a West Connacht family, who according to MacFibris, the great 16th century genealogist, were physicians to the Murphy clan. At that time the name was prevalent in Co. Cork, but has since then spread through Ireland. Variants of the name are: O Cannavane, O Canavan, Kannafan, Kinavan, O'Kannavan, Cannavan, O Kinavane.

Q. I would appreciate any information on the history or origin of the name Goggin. It is my understanding that our branch of the family originated in Co. Cork. Merritt L. Goggin, McLean, Virginia 22101.

A. Originally it was a Norman name, de Cogan, meaning 'from Cogan' which was a parish in Glamorganshire in Wales. This surname came into Ireland with the Norman invasion in the twelfth century. Milo de Cogan was the first constable in Dublin. He received along with Robert Fitzstephen, a grant of the whole of County Cork from King Henry II. Later on the name was pronounced Goggin and is generally anglicized as Goggin in Muster. This quite agrees with your telling us that you were under the impression that the family did originate in Co. Cork. There are various forms of the name as Cogan, Cogane, Goggin.

N.B.: If you wish an immediate reply to your query, please send a stamped self-addressed envelope and a check for $10.00 (ten dollars) made payable to Prof. Robert T. Meyer, Box 255, Division of Celtic Studies, The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C. 20064. the world how they are going to save Ireland. But let us begin to "save the children of Ireland." Let us all work hard to accomplish this goal so that our pride as sons and daughters of Ireland will be maintained. Let us challenge those responsible who offend our dignity as proud Irish people from a proud land and a proud heritage!

The Fighting Irishman

any fighting being done, he would be in the thick of it. During the insurrection of Haiti, several U.S. Marines had been captured by Haitian bandits and were held in jail under heavy guard. Again it was Daly who came to the rescue. Alone, he managed to dig a tunnel under the wall of the jail, enter the building, take out the guards and liberate his buddies via the route he came.

On another occasion in Haiti on the night of Oct. 24, 1915, Gunnery Sgt. Daly along with three officers and 35 enlisted men were suddenly attacked by about 400 Cacos while crossing a river in a deep ravine concealed by bushes about 100 yards from a fort. The Marine detachment fought its way forward to a good position which they successfully held during the night although being subjected to heavy continuous fire from the bandits.

Bloody Good Friday

Brian Boru, seeing it all from the sidelines, ached as he had never ached before in all the battles he had actively led. The hardest of hearts could scarcely have remained unmoved by the slaughter that filled the many hours of that bloody day. Hand to hand and breast to breast the bearded warriors fought, hacking, slashing, thrusting — often one on one, where both would fall mortally wounded. The mailed Norseman, thought to have been well protected, soon found otherwise. Scarcely a single one of them lived through that gory fray. Back and forth the battle raged, deeper and deeper grew the piles of the dead and severely wounded. By mid-day there were few cries of exultation, only those of pain and despair. Men lay exhausted, only to rise and fight again. Others tried, only to find an arm or leg missing, and resignedly slump to the ground to die moments later. Strong warriors fell like cut wheat — nor were their leaders spared. King Maelmorda of Leinster lost all ambition, along with his life. Danish and other Nordic chiefs fell alongside their men. Although Brian probably never knew until the battle ended, his son Murcadh also died that gruesome day; and, it was recorded, other Irish chiefs and their sons as well.

By sundown it was all over. Sheer exhaustion would have ended it by darkness in any case. The result was clear cut, however. The foes of Brian fled as best they were able to do; and the bloodcrusted Irish, their ranks horribly thinned, dragged off the crimson field too worn to celebrate victory. At last it was Brian Boru himself who became a victim of the Clontarf carnage. The old king had retired to his tent in nearby woods, knowing of his hard fought and costly victory. Among the fleeing Danes a certain Bruadar, purely by chance, stumbled upon Brian's tent. The old man and his youthful attendant were no match for the frustrated Dane. As they died by the sword, so too did Bruadar soon afterward, it was said. This was, quite effectively, the end of the most massive and sanguinary battle ever fought on Irish soil — a soil that had soaked up the blood of countless warriors for centuries, the stage of a thousand battles. Of the nearly twenty thousand who died at Clontarf many were Brian's Dalcassian kinsmen. Maelsechlainn survived, however, and became again King of Ireland. After nine years he died a natural death — rare for an Irish king.

The effect of Irish victory, following a period of mourning for Brian and his slain followers was not readily apparent. Ireland had been saved from Danish rule, but this was at the time uncertain. And following Maelsechlainn's reign there were to be no more acknowledged kings of all Ireland. Once again provincial kings and chiefs vied for land and power. Nor was Irish unity assured even after much of the country came under Anglo-Norman influence. Without that Good Friday triumph, however, Ireland would certainly have become further colonized by Danes and Norwegians and perhaps ruled by them thereafter — which the later British were never quite able to do, despite long and persistent efforts.

Many Irish today, wherever they may live, are descended from the Dalcassians or from other old Gaelic clans, who were themselves direct descendants of ancient Celtic kings long before the time of St. Patrick. From Brian a number of clans were founded, including the Kennedys, the Regans (Munster branch), and of course the O'Briens, long the reigning chiefs of Thomond (now County Clare). From Menma came the MacNamaras, also leaders in Thomond; and the MacMenimans, some of whom, about three hundred years hence, would anglicize their name to Meriman or Meryman. (This had become a common practice, wherever Anglo-Normans ruled, simply for self-preservation.)

Brian Boru and his noble warriors of Clontarf earned their honored place in Irish history far beyond the immediate results of the battle itself. They gave to all Ireland a sense of national unity which, although it did not manifest itself completely for centuries, is surely evident today in the hard won Republic of Ireland; and in the ongoing struggle to consolidate the entire island under Irish rule. Pride alone cannot build or maintain a unified nation, but it is always a necessary ingredient. The spirit of Brian Boru has lived on for nearly a thousand years in free peoples everywhere.

At daybreak the Marines in three squads under the command of Captain Upshur, Lt. Ostermand and Gunnery Sgt. Daly began to advance in three different directions. Not only did they totally surprise the Cacos, but managed to scatter them in all directions. The irony of the situation was that if one squad had failed in their maneuver, not one man of the Marine party would have lived to tell the account. The most conspicuous soldier during the battle, Gunnery Sgt. Daly, was awarded his second Medal of Honor.

It was mentioned earlier that he should have been awarded a third Medal of Honor. During World War I in 1918, Daly was participating in combat in the Belleau Wood operations, and on June 5th, at the risk of his life, he extinguished a fire in the ammunition dump at Lucy Le Bocage. Two days later, while in the same sector his outfit was under one of its heaviest bombardments. He visited all the machine gun crews of his company, then posted over a wide section of the front, cheering his men. On June 10th, with his automatic pistol and grenades, he single-handedly attacked an enemy machine gun emplacement and managed to kill or capture the whole crew.

On that same date, during an enemy attack on the Village of Bouresches, he brought in several wounded men under heavy fire. It was Daly who led a platoon of Marines in an assault on German machine gun nests with the shout "Come on you sons of bitches! Do you want to live forever!" These daring words inspired his followers and later this dramatic phrase became one of the most widely quoted battle cries of all time.

When this war to end all wars was ended, Gunnery Sgt. Dan Daly emerged as one of the most decorated soldiers in any service — his decorations included the two Medal of Honors, the Navy Cross, Distinguished Service Cross, Medaille Militaire, Croix de Guerre with Palm and Fourragere; plus the fact that he had been wounded on three different occasions, plus he was awarded many other less important medals.

After spending 30 years in the Marine Corps, Sgt. Major Daly retired in 1929. His statement at this time justified his long-term service: "I can't see how a single man could spend his time to better advantage than in the Marines." Not one to boast about his deeds or medals, he was a model Marine and never drank. Daly was once acclaimed as the "Outstanding Marine of all time," by Major Gen. John A. Lejeune, and

Gen. Smedley D. Butler, another two-time winner of the Medal of Honor, called him "The fightingest Marine I have ever known." This was certainly great praise from brother Marines who knew and understood the great deeds of Daly.

When he left the service, Daly became a bank guard for Brown Bros. & Co. on Wall Street. He held this position for the next 17 years. Unmarried, he passed away on April 28, 1937, in Long Island, N.Y. For his exploits, a U.S. destroyer was named after this great fighter in the 1950s.

Daly's exploits in battle may never be duplicated again by any individual soldier — for this fighting Irishman surely deserved the title of "Devil Dog" Dan — the fightingest Marine ever.

Breakthrough Reported With Ford Motor Co.

National Hibernian President Nick Murphy announced a breakthrough after months of discussions with Ford Motor Company executives. "Ford Motor Co.," Murphy stated, "promised that the MacBride Principles will be used in an internal study they are about to undertake in Belfast and Ford will provide a MacBride Principles scorecard as part of that study when it is concluded in the fall."

A dialogue was initiated with Ford after a boycott resolution was adopted at AOH National Convention in July, 1986. "The main source of the violence and despair that comes from unemployment continues to be the blatant bigotry sponsored by the English Government at Harland-Wolfe, Sirocco's, the Electricity Board, Short Bros. and others which account for nearly 90 percent of the workforce in the north."

"We remain convinced," Murphy continued, "that the full adoption of the MacBride Principles will ultimately provide real hope to all in the North and believe Ford has met us halfway in agreeing to examine their policies and practices in the context of the Principles." Murphy stated further, "The North of Ireland needs real progress founded on the justice of the MacBride Principles and not the prospect of further economic chaos. While we remain doubtful that such progress can be achieved while England occupies and manipulates Ireland, we believe Ford has taken a small but significant step in that journey."

Ford agreed also to meet to discuss the progress of the study. "As a result of Ford's decision we

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Mr. Chairman and distinguished Members of Congress. My predecessor, Mr. Joe Roche, began a vigorous political education effort amongst our members and friends and on Capitol Hill in 1983 and I expect to aggressively continue that same policy. This is my second visit to Washington since the 100th Congress began and I, as well as other Irish American leaders, expect to be here quite often throughout this session. The adoption of the amended Extradition Treaty by the U. S. Senate was acutely embarrassing for us but more importantly was a contemptibly shallow and fearful demonstration of raw ignorance by our Senators.

Many of our supporters, Irish American and otherwise, were under an illusion that their Senators actually represented them and not Whitehall's latest aberrant nonsense. We were deceived — call us naive if you will — but I believe deceived is a more accurate description.

This description was made manifestly clear in the lobbying activity leading to the Extradition Treaty vote. Let me illustrate a part of this deception in order to explain further why I am here today. During the Extradition Treaty lobbying effort on the part of the Irish American community, more than one AOH person was arrogantly advised by a Senator or staff person that we had to get more mail to them in support of our position. A staff person for Senator Heinz, an Englishman from the wealthy Fraser family, insisted that this was a non-issue because they did not have enough mail on the subject. When asked how many letters from constituents Senator Heinz had received in favor of this treaty they admitted they had received none. When queried whether that would suggest he had little to fear in supporting our position he replied that the Department of State was pressing them on this issue. In other words, it mattered little to this elected official that he could take up a position advocated by his constituents that was not only morally correct, but legally defensible and historically accurate; his paramount concern was the foreign policy cabal are postponing any consideration of implementing a boycott of Ford's products but will prepare for that possibility when the study is concluded. We appeal to all Irish-Americans and all Americans of conscience to write Mr. Petersen and Mr. Pestillo at Ford to urge them to put the MacBride Principles to work in the North of Ireland."

at Foggy Bottom and the latest deal that had been cut.

We endured a painful lesson on the Extradition Treaty and will do our best to challenge and expose these myths about out elected officials responding to valid constituent concerns. The next Member of the House or Senate who tells us to take our reasonable and valid requests and begin a letter writing campaign will reveal how sincere he or she really is on this issue.

One need only look at America's overt or covert involvement around the globe today to know it is virtually devoid of any "constituent" input. I would suggest to you, for example, that Members of Congress have, by comparison, been deluged with mail on the Irish conflict as opposed to expressions of constituent concern for the Angolan conflict, the Granada invasion, the plight of the Falkland Islanders, etc. In each of these and other hot-spots there lies a contradiction to the current U.S. non-involvement in Ireland. It is our contention, amply supported by documentation, that this U.S. "neutral" position — in the face of English rule without mandate and through oppression — contributes to the violence, the economic stagnation of partition and the perpetuation of human and civil rights violations. If America sincerely demonstrated its concern for freedom, democracy, and justice in Ireland as it does elsewhere, the English government would have long ago shut down the last relic of a colonial era — the Ulster garrison. The Extradition Treaty debate and vote was proof positive of America's acquiescence in the occupation of six Irish Counties in defiance of democracy. More frightening was how precious little awareness there is among Senators regarding the facts of life for the Irish under English rule. We have learned to expect hypocrisy from the rulers and their surrogates but to witness the same insensitivity and hypocrisy from U.S. elected officials is patently offensive and absurd because it contradicts positions taken for years by the U.S. government. U.S.-U.K. Treaty A Tragedy

To The Senators of The United States:

Encouraged by your repeated assurances that you always welcome observations and contributions from your constituents, I am sure you must be waiting anxiously to hear the revealing details of my recent visit to London.

Since you gentlemen share the dubious honor of having approved a piece of legislation which constitutes an act of gross political expediency, surely you want to hear the results of your recent ratification of the amendment to the U.S.-U.K. Extradition Treaty.

In the early hours of October 20th, William J. Quinn was secretly spirited from his cell in the San Francisco Hall of Justice to Crissy Field, where a helicopter flew him over the scenic San Francisco Bay to Travis Air Force Base. He was then delivered into the hands of Scotland Yard men who escorted him, via a Royal Airforce military plane, to London and eventually deposited him in Her Majesty's Prison — Wormwood Scrubs.

The 'Scrubs' is a large Victorian prison originally built to house 950 men (it has at times held up to 1600 men). Little space remains within the perimeter due to the construction of additional buildings.

A report compiled in December 1981 (published in February 1983) would indicate that the quality of life for prisoners is the same as in all overcrowded prisons. Bill, however, is on 'remand,' designated as a 'Special Category' prisoner — which means he is isolated and confined twenty-three hours a day alone in his cell. "Other prisoners (the report continues) are not being held in conditions which ensure respect for human dignity."

When I enquired of my son the state of sanitary conditions there, he replied, "Oh, we have the most modern facilities — we have plastic buckets." The Chief Inspector states: "As recently as February '83, Wormwood Scrubs was described as having "an overpowering stench of urine." (Guardian, Feb. 24, 1983). "We regard reliance upon chamber pots, particularly in shared cells, and the associated practice of slopping out as thoroughly degrading."

On prison regime the Chief Inspector said that to be locked in a cell all

President's Message

Teachtaineac an Uachtarán
By Nicholas Murphy, National President

DISTRESS SIGNALS

The plight of Ireland is "most distressful" in 1987 for a variety of reasons, one of which is the economy. As a direct consequence of the mismanagement of the Irish economy over the past several years, massive emigration has once again become a way of life for the people of Ireland. There is, however, a major distinguishing characteristic which differentiates the experience of this generation of Irish emigrants from previous generations, and that difference is found in the plight of tens of thousands of young Irish immigrants in America.

It is not that there is no work in the United States; on the contrary, the American economy continues to live up to its legendary reputation of being able to employ a large number of industrious immigrants. The problem is that under the current immigration regulations, any potential Irish immigrant seeking only the opportunity to work need not apply. The result is that there are tens of thousands of Irish immigrants working illegally in the New York area alone. The great problem here is that such "illegals" have no benefits, no medical insurance, no protection, no opportunity to lead normal lives or to become American taxpayers, much less citizens. But still the problems at home are so desperate that they are willing to take the risk rather than fall back upon the dole.

Under the recent Coalition Government there was no cohesive policy in Dublin to help organize Ireland's natural ally, the Irish American population, to work for policies which would benefit the people of Ireland (and this in spite of the example of Israel working through a much smaller Jewish population in the US with great success). That government consistently refused to cooperate with Irish American organizations which seek to help Ireland. In the area of immigration reform, despite major efforts by Congressmen DioGuardi and Donnelly and their co-sponsors, the lack of "Irish government" support left the Irish with the peoples of some 35 other nations in a one-shot compromise scramble after a limited number of visas. In the 99th Congress, H.R. 4478, the language of which was endorsed by the 1986 National Convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, could have given Ireland some 4,008 visas every year. Over 150,000 Irish applications alone in the non-preference visa lottery bear testimony to the demand. That government failed to realize that Irish emigrants in America could, in addition to finding the dignity of honest labor, send money home and/or save the capital which would enable them to return home and invest in the future of Ireland.

It is not that we have no friends in Congress; we have many (now one hundred nineteen in the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs alone), but Dublin's representatives have often ignored them or even worked against them, preferring instead the occasional cocktail party with "Saint Patrick's Day" friends of Ireland, for whom being a "friend" of Ireland means nothing more than a pontificating statement on the Seventeenth of March followed by behavior for the rest of the day which can otherwise only be found in the caricatures of Punch magazine.

IMMIGRATION REFORM BILL INTRODUCED

The 1986 National Convention of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America issued a strong call for immigration reform to deal with a problem which has reached crisis proportions both in Ireland and in the United States. Virtually all of the reforms called for by the AOH (developed under the chairmanship of Tom Murray of New York) are contained in H.R. 1883 introduced into the 100th Congress on Saint Patrick's Day 1987 by Congressman Joseph DioGuardi of New York at the request of the AOH.

It is now incumbent upon each and every Hibernian to write or otherwise contact their Representative and their two Senators in Congress to request (firmly but politely) that they become co-sponsors of this legislation. Immigration reform is long overdue. H.R. 1883 would restore to the Irish the potential of receiving up to 4,008 visas (including preference and non-preference visas) each year.

As a separate, but related issue, we must address the problem of finding ways to normalize or legalize the status of the many Irish immigrants "illegally" in this country.

In all of these tasks, including our work for Peace, Unity and Justice (as Cardinal O'Connor put it) and for the freedom of all Ireland, our own labors can be more or less fruitful depending upon the attitude of the government of Ireland. We must therefore urge the newly elected government in Dublin not only to live up to the Constitution of Ireland, but to accept and even seek the assistance of Irish America in the quest to restore the sovereignty of the Irish nation over the entire island of Ireland, her islands and territorial seas.

JUSTICE DENIED

We need not look so far afield as the British or Soviet empires to see examples of injustice. Unfortunately we need look no farther than the Manhattan Correctional Center in New York City where a young Irishman named Doherty has been jailed since June of 1983 (except for some periods of several weeks when he was kept in solitary confinement at the Otisville, New York Federal Penitentiary).

You might wonder what law this man has broken to be kept locked away for so long and often under arduous conditions! It seems that he entered the United States illegally—he has been charged with no other violation of law in this country! In fact he has been convicted of no crime at all in any American court! Mind now, it's not that he hasn't been before any judges. He has many times—and they all found in his favor!

Joe Doherty is different; he is a political prisoner and American jails have become his Gulag. Joe Doherty is a former member of the Irish Republican Army who was involved in a military action in 1980 when a squad of British SAS troops assaulted an IRA position in Belfast; a British officer was killed and Doherty was charged by the occupation government with murder. Joe Doherty subsequently escaped to what was supposed to be retirement in America. He was later arrested in a case of mistaken identity, but once his true identity was learned he was held pending extradition proceedings to return him to the United Kingdom. Joe Doherty fought extradition in court time and time again—and he won; for all the good it did him, he is not a free man.

We see the government of the United States, in apparent flagrant disregard of its own Constitution and of its independent judiciary, persecuting this Irishman after prosecution has failed. And for what reason? Have we returned to the Empire?

After all the appeals failed and the government could not overturn the 1984 ruling of Judge Sprizzo that Joseph Patrick Thomas Doherty was not subject to extradition to the United Kingdom in that "the facts of this case present the political offense exception in its most classic form." (Matter of Doherty by the Government of the United Kingdom, 599 F. Supp. 270, 276 [S.D.N.Y.]).

What this means is that under law Joe Doherty was a soldier in a recognized political/military insurrection, not a criminal. It does not mean that you have to like Doherty or the cause he served, but what it does mean is that Joe Doherty has been denied equal justice under law. The British have yet to forgive Menachem Begin and the Irgun for the blowing up of the King David Hotel; yet when did you ever see the US government attempt to extradite any Israeli freedom fighter to England? Where the enforcement of Justice is concerned it would seem that no Irish need apply.

It is said that the English always play by the rules, until they start losing; then they change the rules. This time they got the US State Department and all but ten members of the US Senate (Jesse Helms and Al D'Amato among them) to change a lot of rules in order that they might begin again to extradite Joe Doherty to the UK. Every time Doherty prevails in court they invent a new obstacle. But this time they have violated the Constitution of the United States which prohibits

John E. Lawe, the International President of the Transport Workers Union, achieved the highest honor that can be bestowed on an Irish American when he was elected Grand Marshal of the 1987 New York City St. Patrick's Day Parade.

Twelve Aides to the Grand Marshal—nine men and three women—were also elected unanimously by parade delegates. For the first time, an aide from Orange county, New York, will march behind the grand Marshal.

At a press conference announcing his election, 1987 Grand Marshal John Lawe noted that his first day in America in 1949 happened to be St. Patrick's Day. Like everyone else he saw in New York city, he went to watch the big parade.

He had arrived in the Big Apple from Co. Roscommon, one of 10 children, and secured his first job in New York City as a bus cleaner for the Fifth Avenue Coach Company. He later became a bus driver and began active involvement with the Transport Workers Union.

New York State Hibernians' president, Jack Irwin, said in his nominating remarks of John Lawe: "He went from sweeping Fifth Avenue buses in the early 1950s to sweeping elections for the highest office of International President at the Transport Workers Union, which he accomplished last year."

Lawe became International

President of the TWU in May 1985 following the death of William G. Lindner. He was elected to a full four-year term in September 1986.

The one-time president of TWU Local 100, New Yorkers well remember Lawe from 1980 when the city's subway and buses were shut down for two weeks in April.

In addition to the TWU, Lawe also serves as a Vice President of the New York State AFL-CIO and is second vice president to the New York Central Labor Council.

John Lawe has been a member of JFK Division 9, AOH, for the past 30 years. He is also one of the founding organizers of MABSTOA Emerald Society in 1964.

Lawe is married to the former Mary Heaney, a native of Co. Longford. The couple resides in Bronxville, New York, and are the parents of three children: Desmond, Deirdre and Patricia.

The 12 Aides elected along with John Lawe include the following: Donald C. Smith (Manhattan); Daniel J. Dennehy (Bronx); Jack Cummings (Brooklyn); Maureen Gallahue (Queens); Martin J. Gillen, Jr. (Staten Island); William Casey (Nassau); Michael F. Quinn (Westchester); Kitty Allen (Suffolk); Patricia Ann (Toner) Dwyer (Rockland); Leo M. O'Grady (Orange); Manus Gallagher (United Irish Counties); and Denis Mitchell (Grand Council Emerald Societies).

The Two Canadas

By PAUL O'DWYER

A few years ago a group of Irish Canadians in the Province of New Brunswick put on a very impressive Irish Cultural Festival and issued a call to Irish Americans to help them. They got a very feeble response. The Tyrone Pipers did their best to salvage our honor. They traveled all the way to participate and were warmly welcomed by our brethren among our northern neighbors. The event was all the more significant because New Brunswick was the place of refuge for many of the Tories who fled the country during and after the American Revolution. The treatment they received here even after the Treaty of Paris was less than magnanimous. In fact, it was quite Cromwellian. We confiscated their lands and drove them off and in the aftermath some land grabbers did quite well. Understandably the memory of these events is still green among some of their descendants. I have heard them describe our Revolution as an irresponsible and unjustifiable rebellion. That may account to some extent for the rude behavior of some of their minions when delegates to the Irish American Unity Conference visited Windsor recently.

Windsor is spitting distance from our own Detroit and was selected by Dan O'Kennedy of our Detroit chapter. It was thought that irrespective of past differences between the governments on a variety of issues it would be good for Irish Americans and Irish Canadians to meet to discuss the problems of discrimination, brutality and harassment to which Irish Catholics are subjected in Northern Ireland.

The Canadian officials' performance got very negative reviews from all of us. We did not expect such hostility as we crossed into Canada. Nobody actually insulted us, but we got out first shock as the other cars were pulled by while we were directed to pull over to the side while our cars were searched. We were then put through an annoying visa application process which has been abandoned even by British authorities as one crosses the border into Northern Ireland. To put it mildly, we got the distinct impression that we were not welcome in Canada.

Most of the Easterners who are accustomed to being spied upon by the F.B.I. and the agents of the Tobacco and Firearms Division of the State Department and the C.I.A. were less sensitive to the rudeness to which they were subjected, but Detroiters, our hosts for the occasion, who frequently shopped in Windsor, were incensed at the behavior of the government and determined to have appropriate protests lodged with Prime Minister Mulrooney for what they regarded as insults leveled at their friends and guests. In the light of Mr. Mulrooney's surrender to the whims of Mrs. Thatcher and Mr. Reagan, I doubt if that protest will get a sympathetic response. Besides it seems Mr. Mulrooney has other personal problems these days which can be compared with those with which Mrs. Thatcher, Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Reagan are wrestling.

On the positive side Sean McManus, the Sinn Féin Party delegate to the meeting, was permitted to enter Canada and to speak at our meeting without any interference from the Canadian authorities as was Jim Kenny, representing the Workers Party. In that respect Canada showed a greater commitment to freedom of speech than did

WASHINGTON, D.C.: The first celebration of Ethnic American Day was inspiring.

The private lunch was held in the Banquet Hall of the DAR building, for the Honorary Committee, the National Advisory Board and the Honored Americans. There was ample opportunity for the leaders of the various ethnic American organizations to meet and become acquainted. The interaction promises increased cooperation between organizations and sympathetic support of each other's projects. The Honored Americans were met on an informal basis by those who were present.

President Reagan sent a message which was read during the celebration in Constitution Hall.

Of the 21 ethnic Americans to be honored, all accepted the award and were present. Only three found it necessary to send a representative due to a previous commitment.

The cultural program of song and dance consisted of 17 individual ethnic American organizations with 282 participants. The performers

President presupposes that George Washington was never born.

Notwithstanding all the negative aspects of the border incident and recognizing all the pressure the Canadian government was under from London and Washington, the I.A.U.C. owe a debt of gratitude to Canada. It was Dan O'Kennedy, our Detroit leader, who proposed that we issue the invitation to all the political parties and all shades of thinking in Ireland (the Six and 26 Counties), the United States and Canada, to send delegates to our meeting. Had the locus been on American soil it is doubtful if we could hope that our

During this Easter Season let us renew our faith in Christ, who suffered and died for the world's sins, and defeated death through his resurrection and ascension. Ireland too will be resurrected and united through its undying faith in our Lord, Jesus, who is our king, and our Holy Mother the Church, which is the body of Christ.

Please support: "Project Children", P.O. Box 933, Greenwood Lake, NY 10925; and "The Children's Committee 10, Inc.", P.O. Box 16133, Fresno, CA 93755—Programs and People striving hard to bring happiness to the hearts of Irish children in the troubled North through friendship, understanding, and mutual respect.

Please support: "Ireland's Oppressed Children Fund", c/o Harry McGuirk, 8400 Shore Front Parkway, Rockaway, NY 11693—a program to house, feed, cloth, and love the unwanted and homeless children of Ireland, whom even the Irish government has turned its back on. This program is run by our church's priests, and they desperately need our support.

It is said in the Bible that the greatest gift of all is charity, and I say that charity should begin at home with our own children and family. Well...these are our children, our Irish problem, and our Ireland. These programs need and deserve our fullest support. If we do not support them...then they will have to rely on outsiders' help. The Gaels, who have fought so hard for freedom, self-rule, self-determination...MUST TAKE CARE OF OUR OWN!!!...or lose their sacred right and honor of our heritage to claim Ireland as our motherland. If we do not...then we should bow our heads in shame, and submit our destiny to the subjugation of others.

Ben Franklin once said, "Those who will not defend their liberty and freedom deserve neither." The choice is ours...will we choose wisely? Ireland may be a poor country, but we are rich in our love for her no matter how far away or how many generations away from her. OUR HEARTS WILL ALWAYS BE IN IRELAND!!!

If you can't help financially, that's all right...but you can help by spreading the word to your friends, your parish family, etc. There is always a way where there is a will, and nobody has ever defeated the Irish will.

States has begged off involvement in the conflict because it is an "internal matter" and yet the same government found justification to even invade a Commonwealth Country, Granada, and provide aid to Her Majesty's government to face its darkest threat — the Falklands fiasco.

One wonders where America would be today if France considered our struggle for freedom an "internal matter." This argument is particularly galling to me. The Irish people have a constitution duly adopted by the people in 1937. That constitution conforms to the wishes of the Irish people freely expressed by them in the last general election in 1918. If Ferdinand Marcos chose to ignore the Philippine's election results and set up an armed garrison in the Northern provinces, would America now sit idly by mumbling "It's an internal matter"? That's exactly what America did when England chose to occupy six counties of Ireland. Our government should not now dignify this defeat for Democracy by falsely exalting this zone of Occupation as a form of sovereignty.

One of the principal reasons for the still called the Anglo-Irish accord is to keep America and Americans from advocating the single step that is likely to succeed in bringing an end to the conflict — the decolonization of Ireland. Unfortunately, many elected officials know so little of the history of Ireland and England's complete domination and manipulation of its politics, economics, media and culture. Many do not make the connection between previous non-solutions like the Sunningdale Agreement, the New Ireland Forum, and the latest public relations effort of the Accord. These same officials are content to point an accusing finger at the often helpless Irish government rather than show the way through leadership and moral courage.

We will do our part to improve the level of understanding. A number of Irish American organizations have prepared, adopted and are now distributing for endorsement, a single policy position which we believe should be the position of the American government. We seek your support of its objectives and its endorsement for distribution. While that position clearly remains the goal for all to achieve and work towards, we also have adopted three positions related to this goal which we believe merit your serious attention and action.

First, we seek a condition on Anglo-Irish aid and American contracts awarded to firms operating in Northern Ireland that affirms the MacBride Fair Employment Principles and upholds these American values through economic sanctions. We applaud this effort in South Africa and ask its extension to combat Irish apartheid.

Second, the denial of a U.S. visa to an elected Member of Parliament and an elected leader of a legal political party in all of Ireland should be abhorrent to all in the land of the free and the brave. We may not agree with all Gerry Adams has to say, but we will defend to the death his right to say it. Mr. Adams has taken his platform of armed resistance to the people and received overwhelming support for it. Can the same be said for Jonas Savimbi, Commander Zero and the hundreds of other arms sellers, gunslingers and would-be adventurers who freely make a doormat of our hospitality? The real danger in allowing Mr. Adams into the country is the response his message may receive. You can be sure that the day a visa is issued to Gerry Adams by the United States he will be the target of British MI-5 and SAS assassins. One might ask why then seek the visa that may be a death warrant?

The same could be said for many people who have the courage of their convictions — colonial felons like Anwar Sadat, Robert Mugabe, Mahatma Gandhi and Menachem Begin. We seek your vigorous effort to reverse this dangerous policy of the department of State. The Dept. seeks to hide behind the provisions of the McCarran-Walter Act knowing full well such provisions have and could be waived. They were for Oliver Tambo, a guerrilla leader, who, like Adams, has the strongest arguments for violent resistance — living under an amoral, oppressive and non-democratic regime.

Not Mother England, you say! Not the nation of common law, you say! You must understand that what England has stood for elsewhere and promotes in America has absolutely nothing to do with its organized colonial corruption in Ireland. Listen not to me but the European Court of Human Rights, Amnesty International, International Lawyers Inquiry, and the English opinion polls, the BBC and people like Gerry Adams, Bernadette McAliskey, Ms. Thatcher is so confident she has the U.S. in her pocket. She told the English people in a TV interview recently that she must be re-elected so that she can represent the U.S. after President Reagan's term. To this I would only say that in 200 years more Americans have died combatting English malevolence than have ever died combatting Russia.

Third, the five year detention and vendetta against Joseph Doherty in U.S. is a moral scandal. He has now spent more time in American prisons than any Nazi collaborator and his real crime is only believing Americans loved freedom and justice so much they would defend their very lives to achieve it. He fled oppression only to find that after two years of good citizenship here he was a victim of the new "criminalization" policy instituted by Thatcher. The same policy the U.S. Senate so warmly embraced in the Extradition Treaty. We ask for his amnesty and that he be permitted to remain in America. We believe you should give his case the same consideration you would give that of a Russian refusenik. We are presently preparing brief summaries of these positions and will circulate them to you in the coming weeks. Please keep in touch with us and advise us of your position and problems.

Finally, I would like to come to our Nation's Capitol and not have to argue for the freedom and justice for the Irish people. Our constitution commands me to do so until Ireland is a nation once again and so I will be faithful to that obligation. I would be remiss if I did not express my concern and that of my members for the flaws that remain in the Immigration Reform statute and failed to note our desire for amendments which will allow special consideration for those affected adversely by the 1965 statute — the non-preference visas are a beginning — and for nations adversely afflicted by conflict with another. The Irish government spends so heavily on security it finds it impossible to fund training schemes and to attract investment. We are seeking to join a coalition already formed to further advance these positions and hope you will support us.

Lastly, in his 1979 address to Americans from the elipse here in Washington, Pope John Paul II asked all who believe in the sanctity of life and who abhor the unspeakable crime of abortion to stand up and speak forcefully against it.

Our National Board, indeed that of the Ladies Hibernians, have adopted resolutions time and again and have forwarded thousands of letters to you expressing our shame and outrage that the destruction of innocent and helpless human life is promoted, funded and absolved by our Congress and our Supreme Court. An abortion is the supreme act of violence upon and the degradation of a woman. We ask you to not argue you are supporting the death penalty for children to help women or the poor. A nation that seeks to balance its social agenda by such orchestrated destruction of human life is not a nation worthy of our constitution, not a nation committed to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness of its people.

U.S.- U.K. Treaty A Tragedy

day "is a dispiriting experience which deadens intellect, paralyzes initiative and promotes bitterness and depression. All but the strongest will find that unemployment accelerates descent into institutionalization and dependency." At the time of the inspection the following facts were noted: The regime was found to be very limited; there was no physical recreation other than the one-hour daily 'yard' exercise; and association is very restricted. Because prisoners spend the greater part of their day locked in their cells, it was felt that the regime fell "far short of the standards" at other dispersal prisons.

A recent report claimed that a prisoner at Wormwood Scrubs could be locked in his cell for 148 hours out of the 168 in the week. (Guardian, Feb. 22, 1983).

In other areas it was noted that "there was much evidence of neglect throughout the prison", both internal and external. The internal defects included dampness, exposed and vulnerable electrical wiring and "heavy accumulations of dust adding to the general air of shabbiness. The bathroom and central area of the kitchen and bakehouse were in particularly poor condition." (Note: On January 15, 1987 the laundry area was completely razed by fire).

In conclusion, the Council of Europe Minimum Rules state:

"Imprisonment and other measures which result in cutting off an offender from the outside world are, by the deprivation of liberty, a punishment in themselves. Therefore, the prison system shall not . . . aggravate the suffering inherent in such a situation."

Inmates of Wormwood Scrubs suffer not only from their loss of liberty, but from squalid physical conditions, restricted access to decent sanitary facilities and deprivation of sufficient employment, education, association and physical recreation.

So, dear Senators, these are the conditions to which you have consigned your 'brother,' a fellow American, whose only offense was his dedication to freedom. These are the indignities he suffers daily, in spite of the fact that he still has not been brought to trial.

For five years he was detained in maximum security at the San Francisco Hall of Justice, denied his constitutional rights and finally extradited to England as a pawn in the political machinations behind the infamous raid on Libya. He was the token 'terrorist' Mrs. Thatcher demanded from Mr. Reagan. Together they (Reagan/Thatcher) conspired to commit a heinous act which resulted in the deaths of innocent children and civilians and which has heaped worldwide condemnation upon this country and its people.

As mentioned earlier, my son is being held 'on remand' (a term used for detention in prison while awaiting trial). A 'remand' prisoner must be brought to court every eight days until he is committed for trial. Because of overcrowded court calendars, a delay of six/eight months or more may elapse before a trial takes place.

During the course of my visit, I had an opportunity to witness the procedures which are followed in the performance of these court appearances. I have to admit here that I was not prepared for what followed.

As I approached the courthouse I found both ends of the street were barricaded and policemen posted there. On the roof of the building across the street were more police. In the opposite doorway of a building were more police and guard dogs. As I was about to enter, a helicopter flew over and I was informed that my son was approaching in an armoured van, with a police escort front and back. The helicopter flew over the motorcade as it transported my son from the prison to the courthouse (a distance of perhaps three to four miles).

Inside the courthouse, my purse was searched and an envelope (addressed to my son in prison) was confiscated and opened by a policeman. (I thought this highly unnecessary as the mail is opened and censored at the prison anyway). Then I was escorted by a policewoman into another room where I was told to remove my coat and where I was physically searched by her.

So, while our leaders undauntedly pursue their evil paths to destruction and go unpunished for their deeds, the lives of brave and bold young men are wasted in the prisons of England, Ireland and America. And the great pity is that, as history has revealed, this mire of spent lives and wasted youth may one day spawn some of our really great statesmen who may once again restore credibility to our depraved governments and lead us again on the road to peace through justice.

You, gentlemen, had a great opportunity to achieve historical fame by assuring the preservation of the long standing principles of our Constitution. Instead, you have managed to eviscerate what was once a proud legacy of our country's heritage. You have wrecked irreparable damage to its people, its image and its reputation as a symbol of hope to all peoples of the world. It remains now for others to rise above the political corruption and bring true justice to all who honestly seek and desire it.

The irony here lies in the fact that one American youth, imbued with the ideals of the 'American way,' seeking to obtain for his Irish brethren their right to live in a free and just society, has now lost those same liberties through the betrayal of his own 'brothers' — fellow countrymen who call themselves American statesmen.

While the Reagan administration openly supports 'terrorists' activities in Nicaragua, it constantly denies the Irish their right to independence and self-rule (in spite of the fact that American courts have consistently acknowledged that a legitimate political uprising is currently being waged in Northern Ireland, and that Ireland's struggle for freedom is still recognized as a popular revolt).

While this administration continues to condemn Irish and Irish-American Freedom Fighters for their commitment to the re-unification and independence of Ireland, it secretly and shamefully deals illegally with the leaders of a nation which advocates terror against the American people. (With such a President as Reagan, we don't need enemies).

An article I read in a local paper regarding our Constitution quite accurately stated: "Fears existed within the states that an ambitious leader, however contained by the Constitution, could sidestep the checks and balances, ignore the separation of powers and return the people to the controls of a monarchy. And if all of the allegations about Reagan and Irangate turn out to be true, we may be seeing an effort by this administration to take unto themselves powers not so given."

Now you have my report on the situation as it stands at this point in time. Be assured that I will continue to keep you apprised of all future developments.

Investing In Ireland

Ireland is going hi-tech. The image of the working Irish is changing. In 1962, 37% of the Irish labor force worked on the farms and in agriculture related trades. By 1986 only 15% remained in farming work. Services and industry now dominate the Irish working day. It is the rapid growth of Irish industry that is catching the eye of the foreign investor. Profits and productivity form the bottom line, and Irish workers and managers, backed by the Irish government, make it happen.

Ireland has 6500 product producing companies with a total industrial work force of 210,000. Included are 850 foreign manufacturing and service firms in Ireland today, employing more than 80,000 Irish workers and professionals. 60% of foreign investment is from U.S. based firms, providing 37,000 jobs. The annual gross product value from the U.S.-Ireland investment partnership is over 2 billion U.S. dollars. The average return on investment is 28.7%, which is more than twice the average for the EEC countries and the rest of the world. Today, Ireland and concessions from a generous, appreciative and stable Irish government.

John O'Brien spoke fondly of Ireland's greatest asset — the young Irish people at work. Half the population of Ireland is under 25 years of age, and the country has a projected annual population increase of 1.2%. Ireland's manpower (and womanpower) is young, intelligent, English-speaking, well educated and capable. The U.S. Department of Commerce recently reported that Ireland has the most profitable location in the world. While Ireland's location with respect to the EEC and world market is a fundamental plus, the young people of Ireland make up the strength of Ireland's new look.

There is good money to be made in Ireland today. Many young professionals who received their education in Ireland and then emigrated are now returning and are rejoining the developing economy. The IDA's most vital contribution has been the creation of desperately needed jobs for the Irish people.

Electronic companies in Ireland (numbering over 300), home-based in the U.S., Europe, and the far East, read like pages from the electronic "Who's Who." Electronic component, such as integrated circuits, microprocessors, semi-conductors, printed circuit boards, and various type connectors, are manufactured, and in many cases, designed in Irish plants. The component level work is matched by assemblies, such as, flex circuits, electronic sub-systems, control and display devices, instrumentation of all types, and automated test equipment. The production of computers, and main frame systems, software and floppy discs are a familiar part of the electronic scene in Ireland today. Data processing, and telecommunications for all purposes quite naturally evolved from successes in the electronic field, and Ireland's hi-tech proficiency has led to worldwide computer services utilizing wire, fibre optic, and satellite data link-ups to terminals worldwide.

Irish computer operators handle magazine and periodical subscriptions from Ireland for 77 million subscribers to such magazines as Vogue, Glamour, Money Magazine and many more. The distribution center for this service is in Boulder, Colorado. Irish computer operators in Limerick hit a release key and automatically print and mail hundreds of thousands of cards and renewal notices each day in the U.S. International computer data services in Ireland is expected to approach a billion dollars in total business in the next few years. Coupled with the electronic industry income, these are no small Irish potatoes.

Development (by the IDA) of Ireland's health-related care industry has achieved surprising success. Pharmaceutical, medical goods, and instrument and appliance companies abound in Ireland. Abbot Laboratories, Pfizer, Warner-Lambert, Bausch & Lomb, and Squibb are just a few of more than 60 companies now in production. The health care sector accounts for 16% of total manufacturing output and employs almost 20,000 people. Exports have been increasing at a 40% annual rate with no leveling off in sight. Again, the prime asset is the productivity of the eager young Irish.

Ireland's new image is the world of hi-tech business: industrial and research electronics; computers, peripherals, and telecommunications; environmental control, fluid and mechanical devices; electrical and power equipment; energy sources; shipping and transport; food; health care; engineering, science and research; and to Ireland's credit, education unmatched. The ingredients for industrial potential are all there — in Ireland. Modern day Ireland is moving. Jump on while you have the chance.

The IDA deserves a "well done" for a commendable job. Ireland's future is tied to a growing economy and is dependent on the growth of industry with lasting jobs and careers. Investing in Ireland brings the workshop, the laboratory, the office, and the business people to the most beautiful land on earth. It is the land of Yeats and O'Casey; the land of green hills and lovely towns; of lively music and Guinness on tap; the land of Dublin's fair city where the girls are so pretty; a place where wonderful people dwell; where the modern life style is tempered with the traditional moral stability of our Irish heritage. It is the place where someone enters the home and says, "God bless all here." You hear that in only one place in all the world.

'87 Hibernian Shamrock Run Attracts Over 600

ST. LOUIS — A field of over 600 runners competed in the 3rd Annual Hibernian Shamrock Run held March 7 in Forest Park, here. For many St. Louis runners the Hibernian Shamrock signals the start of the running season in St. Louis, and although a relatively new running event, it is fast becoming one of the most popular.

tually two runs. First, there is a 3K run for the recreational runners, which is followed by a 10K for more competitive striders, although some used the 3K as a warm-up for the 10K.

The honorary starter for the run was Jack Keane, past national president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians (1974-1978).

The event is monitored and officially sanctioned by the St. Louis Track Club. The run is co-sponsored by the Ancient Order of Hibernians of St. Louis and Anheuser-Busch Co. In addition to providing commemorative T-shirts, the brewery also donated refreshments for the post-run festivities. The Irish music group "Limmerick" provided entertainment following the run.

Proceeds from the run help support the St. Louis AOH Saint Patrick's Day Parade which is held

Irish Study Grant Offered By Notre Dame

SOUTH BEND, IND. — The Cushwa Center for the Study of American Catholicism at the University of Notre Dame is offering a research grant program for studying the Irish in the U.S., according to J. F. Dolan, director.

Funded by an endowment from the Ancient Order of Hibernians to further research in Irish American studies, the grant offers $2000 to any post-doctoral scholar in any field of education who will study the experience of the Irish immigrants and their descendants in the U.S.

"This is an excellent opportunity to do the type of research that is needed to understand and explore the experience of the Irish in America," said Dr. Eoin McKiernan, director emeritus of the Irish American Cultural Institute. "It is the type of scholarly activity that is needed among those who have contributed so much to the American nation and the Catholic Church here. We need to know our own history."

For applications, write: J. F. Dolan, Cushwa Center, 614 Memorial Library, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, IN 46556.

Conference Will Examine Some Stereotypes About the Irish

A conference "Ireland and the Irish: The Stereotypes Reexamined" will be held Friday, April 24, at The Catholic University of America's Center for the Study of Youth Development auditorium.

The program is in memory of Michael Kenny, CUA anthropology professor, who died in 1986.

The all-day conference will address a number of popular stereotypes about the Irish. Using records and other materials previously unavailable, new research completed by eminent scholars presents a more accurate picture. In the cases of mental illness and alcoholism, for example, the research disproves the stereotype, says conference organizer, Eileen Kane, head of the Department of Anthropology, St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, Ireland, and a visiting CUA anthropology professor.

Michael Kenny had a deep interest in European studies, says Professor Kane. "He was about to participate in an exchange visiting professorship at St. Patrick's College at the time of his death." She is fulfilling her part in the exchange.

teristics of ethnic and racial groups have fueled group conflict, justified prejudice and discrimination, and influenced literary works and popular humor for centuries, says Professor Kane. "Stereotypes about the Irish are no exception. What is disconcerting is that many of these assumptions about Irish and Ireland are now passing unquestioned into the social science literature."

Conference speakers presenting papers include Aileen O'Hare, Medico-Social Research Board, Dublin, on "Mental Illness in Ireland"; Dermot Walsh, also of the research board, on "Alcoholism and Irish Drinking Patterns"; Liam Ryan, professor of sociology, St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, on "The Social and Political Influence of the Catholic Church in Ireland"; Padraig O Riagain, An Bord Gaelige, on "The State of the Irish Language"; Patrick Commins, An Foras Taluntais, on "The Death of the West of Ireland"; and Ivor Browne, professor of psychiatry, University College Dublin and St. James's Hospital, on "Sexual Attitudes, Marriage and Family Life."

Monsignor Miceal Ledwith, president of St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, will also attend the conference. He will be a guest of CUA President William J. Byron, S.J.

The papers were commissioned for a book to be published after the conference.

The conference is sponsored by CUA's Department of Anthropology and The Center for Irish Studies.

Registration is required. The $15 registration fee will cover lunch. For information call Professor Joseph Sendry at 202-635-5488.

THEY'RE OFF! Runners are out of the gate fast at the start of the 1987 Hibernian Shamrock Run. The event, which attracted over 600 local competitors, signals the start of the St. Louis running season.

March 17. The remainder of the money goes to fund local and national AOH charities.

During the post-run party, many competitors commented that Hibernian Shamrock Run is one of the best and most enjoyable in the St. Louis area.

According to run organizer, Hibernian Dan Friel, "We are trying to keep this a fun, inexpensive event for the people. The assistance from Anheuser-Busch helps us keep the costs down and Forest Park provides a perfect backdrop for the run. I also have to thank Dan Sebben and Tom Eckleman from the St. Louis Track Club for helping us stage the Hibernian Shamrock."

But for AOH County Board Chairman Charles Putnam the biggest dividend is not the money raised or the fun, but the unity that events like the run and AOH parade have brought to the St. Louis Irish community. "In the past, the Irish community in St. Louis has been pretty fragmented, with each division pretty much doing their own thing. These events, and others, have really brought us all together with a renewed sense of cooperation and unity."

THE HONORARY starter for the 1987 Hibernian Shamrock Run, Jack Keane, models one of the commemorative run T-shirts provided by Anheuser-Busch. Jack Keane is a past national AOH president.

Congratulations

F. Robert Dougherty's Death A Great Sorrow

The death of Bob Dougherty on Sunday, February 1, 1987 was felt as a great loss by members of Division 2, AOH, Chester County, Phoenixville, PA. Bob was one of the founding members of the division and served as historian for many of his membership years. His memorable essay contributions to the early newsletters of the division were later incorporated in his fine book, The Enduring Gael. He was a columnist and writer for other publications, including the National Hibernian Digest.

Bob was chairman of the Freedom for All Ireland committee and a member of the Irish National Caucus. The list goes on. Active in the Knights of Columbus, affairs in his church, many civic organizations, Bob brought to them all his special insight and wisdom.

More importantly, he made a positive impact on those people whose lives he touched. It is the hope of his hosts of friends that the inspiration he provided to them will flourish, through them, in years to come until a realization of his dream, a world without oppression, is at long last, an actuality.

Charter Member's Death Mourned in Delaware Co.

William V. Kephart, 58, of Drexel Hill, died on Thursday following a long illness at the Crozer-Chester Medical Center, Upland.

Born in Philadelphia, he lived in Delaware County for 31 years and in Drexel Hill for the past four years.

Mr. Kephart was a supervisor for the Philadelphia Electric Company for 31 years. He worked in the T&D Department. He served in the Korean War with the U.S. Marine Corps.

He was also a member of the Marion Council of the Knight of Columbus No. 3753. He also belonged to the Cardinal Dougherty Assembly and was one of the founding members and a charter member of the AOH Division 2, Delaware County, and was also secretary of the Delaware County Board.

He was the son of the late William S. Kephart.

Surviving are his wife, Anne Coleman Kephart; two daughters Theresa M. of Norwood and Michelle M. Haney of Glenolden; two sons, William V. Jr. of Philadelphia and Robert M. of Drexel Hill; his mother, Mariam Kephart of Norwood; one sister, Betty Landi of Florida; and a sister, Nancy Miller of Philadelphia; and five grandchildren.

NICHOLAS J. FINN

Fr. Nicholas J. Finn died on Wednesday, October 15, and with him went a chunk of Minnesota's Irish-American history.

A member of the St. Paul Seminary Class of 1919, until his death Finn was the second oldest priest in the Archdiocese of St. Paul and Minneapolis. A classmate and friend of his at the seminary would later become widely known as Archbishop Fulton Sheen.

Finn served at St. Mary's Catholic Church in downtown St. Paul, in Montevideo and founded a parish in Plymouth.

He held his longest tenure at St. Mary's of the Lake in White Bear Lake, as head pastor for 28 years and after retiring from that post during his 80th year of priesthood, as an assistant for several years. He was also chaplain for the Minnesota Senate from 1973 to 1980.

Finn, whose signature as a priest was his rendition of "Danny Boy," requested that the last line of the song be inscribed on his tombstone. It will read "And you will come and kneel and say an Ave there for me."

Paul Tidmarsh
The Advocate, 12/17/86

Father Finn was a delegate to the 1962 (Pittsburgh) and 1964 (Albany) National Conventions. He nominated Thomas V. Reagan from Minnesota for vice president both years and his nominating speech for Bro. Reagan was so forceful that in 1964, his opponent, Walter O'Leary, an odds on favorite, beat Tom Reagan by only two votes. Fr. Finn was indeed one of the great old time orators.

WALTER BURKE

Walter F. (Ticky) Burke, 60, of Watertown, an accountant for 39 years, died of cancer February 5 in St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Brighton.

Born in Waltham, Mr. Burke was a 1943 graduate of St. Patrick's High School, Watertown, and a 1948 graduate of the Boston School of Accounting.

Mr. Burke served with the Army Air Corps during World War II and was a comptroller for the Army Materials and Research Center in Watertown.

After he left the center, he established his own accounting firm in Watertown, which he owned for six years.

Mr. Burke was a former secretary of the Ancient Order of Hibernians Division No. 14, a former junior vice commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Burnham-Manning Post No. 1105, and a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, Pequotette Aerie No. 1928, all of Watertown.

He leaves his wife, Jeanne M. (Boudreau); four daughters, Kathleen M. Cerrati and Maureen F. Burke, both of Watertown; Karen E. Elliott of Bellingham and Margaret A. McAdam of West Newton; a sister, Mary T. Carey of Watertown; and three grandchildren.

Pro-Life News

This past January 22, 1987, marked the fourteenth anniversary of the Roe v. Wade Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion on demand in the United States. Thousands of pro-lifers, including brother and sister Hibernians, went to Washington, D.C. to lobby their Congressmen. Those who made the trip this year were greeted with six inches of snow which crippled the city but did not inhibit those who travelled from Missouri, Indiana, or New York from joining the one and one-half mile "March for Life" which started at the Washington Monument and ended at the Congress.

One of two major issues in this year's session of Congress is the "Grove City Bill" (also known as the Civil Rights Restoration Act) which would amend Title IX (passed in 1972) and force religiously affiliated hospitals and colleges which accept federal funds to perform and provide for abortions. When you are writing to your Congressman on this issue ask him to support the Sen. Tauck/Cong. Sensenbrenner Amendment which would remove all pro-abortion requirements and make the "Grove City Bill" abortion neutral.

The other major issue in this year's Congress is the cutting of tax-supported funds to any organization, such as Planned Parenthood, which refers, counsels for, or provides abortion services. Since 1970 Title X has granted hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars to family planning programs in the United States and Section 1008 of Title X states: "None of the funds appropriated under this Title shall be used in programs where abortion is a method of family planning." Pro-abortion organizations like Planned Parenthood have played legal games with this funding by showing that they use their public money for family planning services other than abortion, while they use their private funds for abortion services. It is the thinking of many people, including people in the Department of Health and Human Services, that the intent of Section 1008 is to prevent monies going to organizations which advocate or foster a favorable attitude toward abortions.

With over 20,000,000 abortions performed in the United States since 1970 and your taxes going to support organizations like Planned Parenthood (which operate over 40 abortion clinics in the United States), isn't it time to do something? Why not sit down and write a letter to President Ronald Reagan and ask him in his two years as president to cut Title X funds to organizations like Planned Parenthood which refer, counsel for, and provide abortion services. Write to: President Ronald Reagan, The White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20500. Send a copy of this letter to: Howard Baker, Administrative Assistant to the President, and to: Secretary Otis Bowen, Department

The Irish American Almanac & Green Pages. Published by Pembroke Press, New York; Brian E. Cooper, managing editor. First edition. 288 pages. 9" x 6" paperback. $9.95 (add $1.50 shipping charge).

Reviewed by Jack Flatley

The Irish Almanac & Green Pages is a Hibernian literary idea long overdue. The contributing editors have compiled a diverse journal of historical and cultural information, and have added "Green Pages" directory of Irish products, services, organizations, and source references. To the researcher and the buyer it is a useful and pragmatic handbook with a plethora of Irish, and Irish American facts, data, and tradition.

The format is a two section publication, neatly categorizing interesting, encyclopedic-style information in the Almanac first-half section, and a comprehensive listing of sources for everything from cemetery plots to imported turf briquettes in the "Green Pages" second-half section. The few omissions and inaccuracies (Capt. Colin P. Kelly did not sink a Japanese battleship) are hardly noticeable and do not detract from this remarkable book. It is concise, yet thorough, and belongs on the bookshelf of all who have the Irish pride. A comment/additions tear-out form suggests future updated editions will be published.

Gems of information sparkle throughout. Laois is pronounced "Leash", or less often "Leeks"; Irish women won the right to vote in 1919, a year before their American sisters. Beethoven was fond of Irish music. Ireland ranks 4th among nations in percentage of bachelors with 28.3%. 5.6% of U.S. adult males are bachelors. Ireland ranks higher (14th) than the U.S. in Quality of Life Index (could there be a connection?). The contributing editors are: Martha Moore Battles, Ann Kathleen Bradley, John Vincent Cody, Karen S. Daughtery, Joan Moody, and Timothy Rogus.

On the local level monitor the talk of the opening of school-based sex clinics which are already operating in some of the cities (St. Paul, MN.; Baltimore, Md.; New York City) and towns of the United States. These clinics are often presented by the pro-abortion family planning engineers as ways of helping youth with their health problems when one of their strong reasons for existence is to lower the birthrates by sending young women to abortion clinics. These school-based clinics are not necessary. Work along with your local pro-life and pro-family groups to stop them.

Saint Patrick's Day 1987, a great day for the Irish or those who claim to be Irish is now history, but the real Irish American knows that the traditions and history of the Irish race is a fragile product that must be cultivated and nurtured 365 days a year.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians has pledged to foster the ideals and perpetuate the history and traditions of the Irish people. To promote Irish culture. To aid and advance by all legitimate means the aspirations and endeavors of the Irish people for complete and absolute independence. To encourage an equitable U.S. immigration law for Ireland.

These noble ideas are the reasons we are in the midst of a recruitment drive. In my last column I put forward some suggestions for increasing membership. I asked each division president to write a letter to every member of the division and enclose with the letter an application for membership. The member in turn was supposed to recruit one new member. I thought it a simple way of increasing membership. But to my dismay not too many division presidents picked up on the idea. We may have missed the prime season of the year for promoting anything Irish but all is not lost. The drive continues for six months.

Now let's settle down and concentrate on means of increasing our membership and next fall we can look back with pride and say we have done a good job, we have doubled our membership. It's within our grasp.

WASHINGTON D.C.

I have some exciting news to report: Matt Hannon has organized two new divisions, one at Catholic University and the other at Georgetown University. We have often tried to organize colleges and universities before but never succeeded until now. Congratulations, Matt, and thanks for your dedicated work on behalf of the order.

Matt Hannon has nominated John

Keeffe of Rockville, Maryland, for deputy national organizer.

CALIFORNIA

I received a report from State President Pat Bergin. He tells me things could be better in the golden state. Pat is sending me a nomination for deputy national organizer. We have a few divisions who have not paid their per-capita tax for 1985. We need a good recruitment drive to call attention to the work the AOH is doing all over this country.

MICHIGAN

National Director John McInerney called me on the phone recently and I was quite pleased with his report. We have a new division in Wayne County organized by Michael O'Hare, James O. Flynn and Deputy National Organizer James O'Kelly. Congratulations and good luck, and don't forget, men, even this new division is expected to double its membership during the next six months.

I have given a special assignment to Brother McInerney. It's an assignment I know he will deliver on. The state of Illinois is lagging behind all the states in the midwest as far as membership and organization is concerned. I have asked Brother McInerney to investigate the situation and recommend some course of action. We should have 50 AOH divisions in Illinois and 10 of them should be in Chicago. Our main contact in Chicago is Brother Hugh Gibbons of Division 52, Cook County. I would appreciate it if any Brothers in Illinois would write or call me and volunteer to help in recruiting new members or organizing new divisions.

ARIZONA

Tim Moynahan of the Wolfe Tone Division 1 has been nominated for deputy national organizer. Tim reports that Tucson is just about ready to come on line as a division of the Order. Arizona will soon be well represented in the roles of Hiber-nianism. The cause of Irish freedom and the preservation of the traditions of the Irish people are being advanced in the southwest.

ALASKA

Calling Anchorage, Alaska. Would any Brothers reading the Hibernian Digest please contact me by phone or letter. I need your help, and maybe you need mine.

NEW MEXICO

I had a nice greeting card from national chairman of the Council on Youth, Peter Moughan. We are anxiously awaiting news from Brother Moughan on the Youth Conference which is scheduled for this summer. Our youth must get a more active roll in the government and management of our order. I would love to hear from our young members who have ideas or proposal to put forward. If we are to advance in membership and prestige it will be through the vitality of our young members. Good luck, Peter.

CONNECTICUT

The state board has followed the suggestions of the national organizer and initiated a major recruitment drive. National Director Frank Kearney is doing great in Connecticut. Also State President Phil Gallagher is doing a fine job leading his state. My representative Frank Patterson is keeping me informed on the progress of the membership drive and good results are expected.

MONTANA

Deputy National Organizer William Harrington reported in this week and the news was good. Membership is growing and a couple of new divisions are just about ready to come on line. Brother Harrington requested and received 4 organizers kits and about 200 applications; also a supply of Hibernian Digests. We will hear more good news from John Kelly, state president, and Deputy National Organizer Bill Harrington.

If you have news of organizing activities at the division, county, or state level I would like to report it in the Organizer's Corner. Don't hide your good works; share them with the membership. You may mail reports to Michael Hession, 12 Buchanan St., Albany, N.Y. 12206. (518) 489-3144

Ideas for advertising products or programs come from various sources, and often develop from projects that many figure wouldn't have a chance to make it to the public. Just such an event has erupted for all Hibernians in North America, and for that matter, wherever else the AOH banner and principles are flown. National Organizer Mike Hession has come up with a program to increase the membership of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. It's a noble and necessary project, and needs the full support of AOH members.

Now for the advertising program: although Brother Hession has rightfully suggested that divisions try advertising in their local newspaper and/or their diocesan newspaper, why not try the National Hibernian Digest? Your newspaper provides a really inexpensive source to advertise a division's AOH objectives and all of the benefits obtained from becoming a member of the Order.

Copies of the National Hibernian Digest are not only distributed to AOH members, but also to many, many friends of Hibernians, including businessmen, members of State legislatures and the U.S. House and Senate. And no doubt copies of our newspaper are given to various libraries, where the National Hibernian Digest is easily read by prospective candidates for membership in the AOH.

Equally as important for the advertising program is expense. I can absolutely guarantee you that in no other newspaper to my knowledge can you get the truly inexpensive advertising rates offered by the National Hibernian Digest. It's a costly program to advertise in general interest newspapers, as members will learn. So, don't forget the National Hibernian Digest for your advertising!!!

On the subject of AOH members, divisions and state boards advertising in the National Hibernian Digest: at this time of year state boards are setting dates for their annual meetings. Advertise the dates and program in your AOH newspaper. You'd be surprised at how many Hibernians from out of your area would like to attend and see how a well-run state board meeting is held, and also meet new friends.

Division elections are over with for the year, but perhaps the new or reelected officers would like to thank those who supported them. Advertising in your AOH newspaper is an inexpensive way to say thank you.

It is also time for the many feis programs throughout the United States and Canada. It would be an excellent project for the chairman of such programs to let other Hibernians know when and where the feis is scheduled. Hundreds of Hibernians would more than enjoy to know of such events—and visit them, too.

As mentioned previously, you just can't beat the advertising prices in the National Hibernian Digest. And besides, you help the organization's financial program to maintain the high editorial and advertising standards in your newspaper.

One of the newest advertisers on the pages of the National Hibernian Digest is O'Brien of Bunratty, County Clare. Terry O'Brien is the proprietor of the firm which is offering some critical and beautiful photos.

If members have any ideas on how to improve our advertising programs, please take the time to drop me a note with your suggestion. Thanks.

The Book of Freedom

In recognition of the sacrifice of the many generations of Irishmen and Irishwomen, at home and in exile, we in America who are concerned with the freedom of all Ireland, have instituted a "Book of Freedom" for this purpose, and we offer this generation a means of permanently recording their participation.

To the many Americans who wish to identify with this noble ideal, the "Book of Freedom" offers a unique opportunity by reserving a page.

The pages in the handcrafted book are of the finest quality parchment and each donor's page will be uniquely illustrated in a full color Celtic design. A donor's page may include a quotation from an Irish patriot, a family coat of arms, or a memorial. The designs are based upon The Book of Kells and other Irish illuminated manuscripts.

Celebrate this Easter season with a lasting tribute to the accomplishments of those who bore arms in the 1916 Uprising and those who follow in their footsteps today. Be recognized as a supporter of Irish freedom during this crucial phase of her fight for complete independence.

A basic page is priced at $300, with $100 increments, in keeping with the Celtic tradition of recognizing achievements by the use of lavish color and intricate interlaced designs.

All proceeds will be forwarded to An Cumann Cabhrac, to aid the dependents of Irish political prisoners.

Reserve your page today!

Dear David,

A short note on the Madeline O'Hair item in the Jan.-Feb. issue of Hibernian Digest, page eight. I checked with Congressman Douglas Applegate, 18th, Ohio, on this resolution. I am told this resolution was thrown out in 1976. I had previously read that this thing has been distributed periodically for aggravation purposes.

Best of luck on the new membership campaign.

F.C.C. PETITION #RM-2493

Dear Brother Henshaw:

A few days ago I received the January/February 1987 issue of the National Hibernian Digest and came across the Madelyn Murray O'Hair article. This article matched one that I had received some years ago and again in 1986. I called the FCC and learned that this O'Hair matter was, indeed, an old one and that the FCC had responded with a communication on this matter as recently as November 7, 1985. I asked for and received a copy of this document.

Unfortunately, a number of well-intentioned people will get very upset by the content of the O'Hair article and will get involved in a great deal of "wheel spinning." However, it might be well worth the effort to keep the FCC diligent on this matter.

Hoping that this information may be of some interest to you, I remain

Patrick J. Mulrooney, President
Somerset County AOH, N.J.

FCC Not Banning

Religious Programming

In response to a revival of rumors, the FCC has reiterated that it is not considering, nor has it ever considered, a petition by Madelyn Murray O'Hair, or anyone else, to ban religious programming on radio or television.

The Commission emphasized that it is prohibited by the Communications Act of 1934 from censoring broadcast material and by the First Amendment from interfering with freedom of speech in broadcasting.

The FCC noted, however, that in 1975 it unanimously denied a petition by Jeremy D. Lansman and Lorenzo W. Milam asking the agency, to among other things, "freeze" applications by religious institutions for TV or FM channels reserved for educational stations. The Lansman-Milam petition had routinely been assigned the rulemaking number RM-2493.

Since that time the Commission has received over 16 million pieces of mail and a corresponding number of telephone calls on the mistaken belief that the FCC was considering, in RM-2493, a ban on broadcasting religious programming. Despite all efforts to advise the public of the action on RM-2493, the rumors still persist.

Thus, once again, in a further attempt to stem the rumors, the FCC is not empowered by any statute to prohibit radio and television stations from presenting religious programming, nor can it direct any broadcaster to present, or refrain from presenting, announcements or programs on religion.

Dear Mr. Henshaw:

The Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, of which I am a member, recently held its first meeting for the 100th Congress. Since I know you are concerned about the situation in Northern Ireland, I thought that you would appreciate an update on the Committee's plans for the next two years.

The major legislative initiative on which we will be concentrating is the Fair Employment Act, introduced by Rep. Hamilton Fish. I am an original sponsor of this bill, which seeks to apply the MacBride principles to American businesses operating in Northern Ireland. I will work hard with my colleagues to see that this bill is passed in this Congress.

Two other issues of great importance are the U.S. visa policy and the monitoring of U.S. foreign assistance to Northern Ireland. Rep. Barney Frank will be introducing legislation to deal with the whole question of denying visas to foreign political and cultural figures. I have supported this legislation in the past and I will do so again this year.

As you know, Congress has provided funds to be used in Northern Ireland and I am concerned that these funds be used properly. They should not be used to support programs which practice discrimination against Catholics. Strong Congressional oversight is necessary in this area and I support the efforts of the Committee to monitor these funds closely.

In the next two years, there will undoubtedly be other issues affecting Northern Ireland which arise in Congress and I will be happy to keep you informed of them. As always, I hope you will feel free to contact me if you have any questions on these or any other issues.

Member of Congress

AOH ENROLLMENT

Dear Editor:

In the November issue of the National Hibernian Digest a letter appeared asking our National President why the writers of the letter were not able to join either the Knights of Columbus or the AOH. Of course, the only answer forthcoming is that anyone can join either of the above organizations as long as they show that they are practicing Catholics. A practicing Catholic is one who goes to Mass each Sunday and Holy Day of Obligation, fasts and abstains on the days commanded; confesses his sins at least once each year, receives the Blessed Eucharist at Easter or within the time appointed; does not solemnize marriage at the forbidden times, nor marry persons within the forbidden degree of kindred; and contributes to the support of his church. The above is taken from the Ordinary Irish Catechism that I and millions of other Irishmen, women and children were trained in during our early years, growing up at home in Ireland. My answer to these people who want to join the Knights of Columbus and the Ancient Order of Hibernians would be to consult with the nearest Catholic Church closest to their home, or see a Catholic Priest with whom they are friendly.

The difference between the Knights of Columbus and the AOH is that you must have an Irish background to join the AOH. We are all aware that many of the great Irish Patriots were not of the Catholic Faith and were great fighters for Irish freedom and every Irish man reveres their memory: Robert Emmet, Parnell, and hosts of others. I don't imagine that I would qualify to join the Orange Order as a Catholic; and any Catholic who does so is not a Practical Roman Catholic.

Please don't think that the Catholic people are a bigoted lot. Nothing could be farther from the truth, especially when one reads of the sacrifices by Catholics over the centuries, fighting in the armies of many lands for the cause of freedom throughout the world bringing the love of Jesus Christ into the hearts of all people. During the present troubled time in the North of Ireland, we find many people, both Catholic and Protestant, trying to cooperate to relieve the suffering of those families regardless of religious background where we all have a common purpose: To do what we can to bring together those people who are struggling for justice to the end that they are all Irishmen.

POLICE FOUNDATION'S DECISION APPLAUDED

Mr. Hubert Williams
Police Foundation
10001 22nd Street N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20037

Dear Mr. Williams:

Thank you for exercising sound judgment in withdrawing your invitation to Royal Ulster Constabulary Chief Jack Hermon to participate in the Police Foundation's March 5th-8th Seminar.

Clearly, the Royal Ulster Constabulary does not exist in Ireland to protect residents there. Rather, it is there to preserve British interests. If the RUC could behave as it did on August 12, 1984, while the whole world watched, it takes no imagination at all to realize what the RUC does out of sight and in the dark of night within the nationalist community in occupied Ireland.

Once again, I applaud your wise decision to withdraw the invitation. I also ask that you make it a practice in the future to consult leaders in the Irish American community before involving yourself and your fine organization with Jack Hermon and his sordid, maniacal peers.

ST. PATRICK DAY CARDS

Recycled Paper Products, Inc.
3636 N. Broadway
Chicago, Illinois 60613
Attn: President Ray Neufeld

Dear Mr. Neufeld:

I was recently in a card shop in Baltimore and picked up two cards about which I must say, I was shocked and angry at the depiction of my heritage. The cards were disgusting in their content and drawings. They were St. Patrick's Day cards. It was very obvious that there is a large degree of bigotry in these cards. I would think in this day and age this would not be the case, but after studying these cards, I see there is.

Card No. 1 was an ugly dramatic cartoon man of obviously Irish heritage with the disgusting look of drunken stupor. Card was designed by one Keith Taylor; the number of same is #SP-476250. Above the man's head is the following: Corned Beef and Cabbage, Irish Stew, Irish Coffee Whiskey, Green Beer, Ale. Inside was, "No Wonder That Green Is

The Color Of The Irish." "Happy St. Patrick's Day".

Card No. 2 was designed by John Richard Allen, #SP-466384; again, this card depicting the Irish as alcoholics, drunks and disorderly. The front of the card states, "It's time for St. Patrick's Day Celebrations, so if you think you can be trusted to behave yourself, I might go out with you, with a picture of a cartoon woman standing in front of a house. Inside the card the woman is looking out the door from within; there is a cartoon smile, very large, with the caption: "However, if you want to get drunk and disorderly, I'll definitely be ready at 7:30".

The figures in both cards were distorted, showing the Irish as drunks and violent. There are 42 million people in the United States of Irish heritage, comprising the second leading educated group, and with numerous CEOs among the Fortune 500. For a small island we have given the world more than any other nationality in every endeavor. The cartoon images and bigoted thrust of your cards are using depictions 100 years old, when the slurs were used against the Irish immigrating to this country to prevent their getting jobs. I'm demanding an apology to my people and a course of action as to what you as the Chief Executive Officer of your company are going to do about the content and depictions of these cards.

THE WAY IT WAS

Dear Editor,

With reference to the recent big news item in the daily press regarding the great difference of opinion reported between the Pope and some Bishops and other professors of Catholic teaching, it seemed to me, a Catholic with no college education, to be "much ado about nothing."

When I was a boy going to school in Ireland, and learning my Catechism, one of the questions in the Catechism asked — "What is meant by the infallibility of the Pope," and the answer, word for word was — "The Pope cannot err when teaching doctrines of faith and morals to be held by all the Faithful."

So it seems to me that all the Pope had to do would be to exercise his prerogative and to remind those "Doubting Thomases" of their vow of obedience to the Holy Father and his power of papal infallibility. Since the Holy Father is called upon by Our Lord Himself to be His Vicar on earth and to teach His Gospel to all the Faithful, no one else has that power.

Anyone who questions that mission of the Pope is not a good Catholic.

You never would expect to find dissent to come from Bishops of the Catholic Church or from professors of the Catholic religion who think they know more than the Holy Father. Wonder why Our Lord did not pick one of them who know so much instead of John Paul.

I sincerely hope that this is the last time that a not-too-friendly press will be given the opportunity to create dissent in our holy religion among high officials of that religion.

SETTING THE RECORD STRAIGHT ON 'FRIENDS'

Dear Legislator:

It has come to my attention that you have been solicited to become members in what has been referred to as "New York State Friends of Ireland." I am familiar with the Friends of Ireland in Congress, whose charter this new organization would adopt, and wish to share my thoughts with you so that you might consider our experience.

I would like to state from the outset that the proposal does not recognize the tremendous contribution the NYS Irish American Legislators already have made towards the cause of peace and reconciliation in Ireland and toward developing a cultural awareness of Ireland's achievements amongst New Yorkers. No legislature can boast the twin achievements of New York in the Northern Ireland Investment statute and the Irish-American Cultural museum support. This proposal therefore surprises me and makes me suspicious.

The Friends of Ireland in Congress, since their formation, have made little effort to confront the State-sponsored terrorism of the Catholic community by England in the North of Ireland (see Shoot To Kill by the International Lawyers Inquiry and Security Forces in Northern Ireland by Amnesty International) and even less to combat virulent anti-Catholic discrimination there. We repeatedly have asked for the support of these Friends of Ireland on federal issues such as the extradition treaty and in using the MacBride Principles as a condition of Anglo-Irish aid provided by America. We have always been met with inaction and, in some instances by outright contempt and character assassination. Senator Moynihan waxes eloquently, if not coherently, on Ireland and his Irish heritage, but denigrates his constituents in lecture and letters for their concern for Joe Doherty of English government-sponsored anti-Catholic discrimination at Short Bros. He intimated at a labor breakfast that the most honored Irishman living, (or dead), Dr. Sean MacBride, was a communist because he was honored by the Soviets with the Lenin Peace Prize.

A great New Yorker, Governor Al Smith would often tell questioners, "Let's look at the record." I ask no less of each one of you. Examine the principal product of these Friends of Ireland — the St. Patrick's Day Statement, and ask yourself if you have not already done more for Ireland as a member of the NYS Irish American Legislators Society. You have gone far beyond their chorus of condemnation and put words into action.

I would suggest finally, that it is you, Members of the New York State legislature, that should extend the invitation to the Friends of Ireland in Congress to join in your efforts as a means to showing real concern for all the Irish people.

Thank you. If you have any questions regarding this please do not hesitate to contact me at (212) 637-1886 or Mike Cummings at (518) 489-0349.

We Have Obligations To Our Roots

By REV. JOHN P. McHUGH

(The author is Superintendent of Paterson Diocesan Schools in New Jersey and a Roman Catholic Monsignor)

Those of us in America who are of Irish descent should study the history of Ireland. Anna Nolan, who wrote a History of Ireland in 1904, said: "There is no omen more encouraging for Ireland's future than knowledge of Ireland's past." Even a cursory knowledge of Irish history leaves no doubt in the mind of a reader that the unfortunate people of Ireland have been savaged by the British for 800 years. There is no other example in world history to compare with the horrifying methods used on the Irish nation to dehumanize its inhabitants to the present day. The Mayor of Cork, Terrance MacSweeney, before he died on hunger strike, said: "It is not those who can inflict the most, but those who can endure the most who will conquer in the end!" Patrick Pearse, before the rising of 1916, prophesized at the grave ceremony for O'Donovan Rossa, referring to the British he said: "The Fools! They have left us our Fenian dead, and while Ireland holds these graves, Ireland unfree will never be at peace!" To the bravery of the millions of our ancestors who died of war, persecution, poverty and hunger strike, I dedicate the words of Longfellow: "I can resist no more, but I will not yield; this is no tournament where cowards tilt, the vanquished here is victor of the field."

What can and should we do as the descendants of these unfortunate but brave ancestors? Our first duty is to become informed, to know the truth about the past and present. To overlook, to varnish or to conceal truth is a disservice to justice and freedom. Given the British expertise at editing and twisting truth, our obligation to know the facts is even more critical. A classic example of the perfidy of the British editing of history to suit themselves is the great famine or hunger in Ireland between 1844 and 1847. (Read "The Great Starvation")

Get to know the truth, don't keep it, spread it. Too many American Irish are too timid about speaking out. They still regard themselves as second class citizens. Stigmas die slowly. Others, flushed by success, status, and affluence have no time for minority causes. Where are our American Irish business people, the number one richest group in America today, or our American Irish politicians, lawyers, law makers, professors, doctors and clergy? What do we hear from them in opposition to the blatant injustice in Ireland? A faint noise indeed! What a roar we could hear if they shed their timidity, their narrow interests and spoke out as one! What advances we could make for our homeland and freedom if only we raised our voices — all 43 million of us — not timidly, not sporadically, but loud and clear! I say to American Irish: "Wake up!" "Speak up!" You are a sleeping giant. It is a great tragedy for a giant to allow himself to be tied up, rendered useless by selfishness, inertia and by crafty British midgets adept in the art of twisting and hiding the truth.

Ireland will never be free unless the American Irish see to it that the United States intervenes in the cause of justice and civil rights. We surely cannot depend on the lackeys, now in power in the South of Ireland, who spinelessly bow and bend to Margaret Thatcher's every whim. They will live on in history as an opprobrium, a disgrace to the brave patriots and martyrs who for 800 years gladly died for Ireland.

I conclude by calling to action all Americans with Irish blood in their veins.

Nat'l President Addresses Connecticut Legislature

I wish to first thank the committee for the opportunity to address you on a matter of great importance not simply to Hibernians here in Connecticut, but to a great number of Irish-Americans across this nation. First I would like to explain that the Ancient Order of Hibernians is the oldest and largest Irish and Catholic lay organization in America, having first been established in New York City in May, 1836. For 150 years we have kept faith with the Irish people in moments of joy and sorrow and have enriched communities from Rutland, Vermont to Omaha, Nebraska by sponsoring Irish cultural, educational and charitable programs.

I note this for a particular reason. Last year I watched from the galleries of the state legislature in New York and listened to Black and Puerto Rican legislators speak passionately and convincingly for adoption of the Northern Ireland Investment Bill. Later I stood beside the first Italian-American governor of New York State, Mario Cuomo, as he addressed us and signed the statute into law. Few Irish American politicians have ever spoken with such courage and conviction regarding injustice. Fewer still have ever acted upon those convictions and given real hope to the persecuted Catholic minority as did Governor Cuomo. Finally, one of the most articulate voices against the systematic discrimination and oppression of Catholics in the North of Ireland was that of a Jewish man whose name is known to many here and whose reputation and integrity was respected by all. Almost to this day 15 years ago Abraham Ribicoff with unmatched rhetoric and reason argued before congress for an end to the Stormont Parliament which crafted the systematic exclusion of Catholics from every facet of life in the North, for an end to detention without trial, and for the withdrawal of British occupation forces. His vision will be fulfilled in our lifetime if you take the very small step we ask you to take today. This is not an Irish issue! This is an American issue — a test of America's willingness to extend a helping hand to those seeking to break the bondage of multi-generational unemployment and thus break the cycle of despair and violence that inevitably results. I emphasize this because we do not want you to weigh this issue and your vote in terms of the number of Irish-American constituents in your district. Instead if you would consider whether anti-Catholic discrimination in housing, voting and employment is a human rights and a civil rights issue which does concern your constituents!

There is explicit recognition in this bill as there is in all the others, that the systematic anti-Catholic job discrimination has fueled and has been an integral part of England's Irish apartheid policy since the garrison statelet was set up — without benefit of one Irish vote — in 1920. The New Ireland Forum report released in 1985 and prepared by Irish elected officials representing 75 percent of the population of Ireland states as follows: "... The Catholic section of the community for over fifty years lived under a system of exclusively Unionist power and privilege and suffered systematic discrimination."

The problem in Northern Ireland today is as real and devastating as ever. In August, 1986 the prestigious journal Equal Opportunities Review cited government statistics showing the unemployment rate among Catholics twice that of the Protestant community with 36 percent of the Catholic men without work. The unemployment figures in Catholic ghettos like Short, Strand or Ballymurphy are much higher. This unemployment data, when broken down by sex, religion and age profiles, reveals that the situation regarding equality of job opportunity is worsening for Catholics. Further analysis of this data by Osborne and McCormack, the Continuing Household Survey (1983-84), and the Labor Force Survey (1984-85) depict a recipe for social disaster if anti-Catholic discrimination is not forcefully and comprehensively addressed. It is an inescapable fact that the bulk of this religious discrimination is government-sponsored in public Protestant preserves like Shorts Bros., Harland-Wolfe Ltd., and the Northern Ireland Electricity Board where Catholics barely reach 7 or 8 percent of the workforce.

This problem is deeprooted, current, and will not be easily overcome. The largest employer in Northern Ireland, for example, the English government-owned Short Bros., recently reported that the proportion of Catholics in their workforce decreased from 17 percent in 1984 to 14 percent in 1985 despite an increase of 10 percent in applications from Catholics. Of 248 school leavers in Belfast employed by Harland, Wolfe, Short Bros., Mackies, Scotts and the Northern Ireland Electricity Board in 1984, only 13 were Catholics. In government training centers in 1982 only 2 Catholics were promoted to fill the 37 vacancies that occurred.

There are 24 United States corporations that currently employ approximately 11 percent of the manufacturing workforce in Northern Ireland. One of these, Ford Motor Co., was recently found guilty of anti-Catholic discrimination by the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Agency. Ford was the first American corporation to be so cited and indeed with a skilled workforce that is 91 percent Protestant the honor seems richly deserved. Our condemnation of this bleak situation is simply not enough. We ask that you act now in a manner that gives added dignity to your role as state legislator and new hope to future generations of Irish men and women.

The development of the MacBride Fair Employment Principles was intended to raise the consciousness of employers to problems of fair and equal opportunity employment. In the two years since their formation these principles have been adopted in state statutes and local regulations, by labor and fraternal organizations across the nation, and are currently before Congress as potential conditions of U.S. aid and contract awards. They have received the endorsement of every major Irish American organization and of civic, political and religious leaders from communities throughout this country. The British government shamelessly began a campaign of untruths and disinformation against the principles but this was recognized almost immediately by the media as shallow stonewalling.

Let me address some of the real and not-so-real criticisms leveled at this type of legislation. I must add these criticisms generally come almost exclusively from the British government and their surrogates like their roving ambassador — without — portfolio, Mr. Robert St. Cyr. The financial community in New York never once expressed criticism of the New York Bill and we believe this is primarily due to the investment rather than disinvestment focus of the bill.

Some have argued now that there is an Anglo-Irish Accord there is no need for this type of legislation. Those who take up this argument are simply unaware that this meaningless public relations stunt was crafted precisely to stonewall efforts like this in America. If it were anything more than a publicity stunt then there would be tangible evidence of efforts to combat government-sponsored anti-Catholic discrimination at Harland-Wolfe, Mackies, Sirocco's, Short Bros. or the Electricity Board. Those familiar with the results of this agreement must readily concur now regarding its failure even if they did not think so when the document was signed fourteen months ago.

Some argue that this issue is being addressed by statutory bodies in the North of Ireland. The existing Fair Employment Agency and its statutory powers were scrupulously crafted to be useless in combating discrimination. If the situation were otherwise, would it be possible for Harland-Wolfe, Short Bros., Sirocco and Mackies, Ford, Gallaghers, the Northern Ireland Electricity Board and the banking sectors to have nearly 90 percent or better Unionist/Protestant employment profiles? Does anyone suggest that the seven boroughs/councils that have to this day still failed to sign even the symbolic equal opportunity statement regard the Fair Employment Agency as anything other than a paper tiger?

Others argue that the MacBride Principles are not good for business and could contribute to economic decline and loss of jobs. From June, 1979 to June, 1986 manufacturing jobs in the North declined by 33 percent (48,000 jobs) — a rate of decline greater than that sector in England. The economic decline of six counties in Ireland has had a good head start long before the MacBride Principles and may be more appropriately attributable to the poisonous sectarian atmosphere of this war zone of occupation!

Others like the past Irish government argued that "there are unique — often unnamed — factors ... which militate against an easy solution to the unsatisfactory job situation." We do not ask your support of this legislation because it is a solution but because it is a basic step in the sojourn for peace. The AOH

The Connecticut AOH was well represented at the public hearing for a Connecticut Legislative Bill to require companies doing business in Northern Ireland and receiving investment funds from the State to support the MacBride Principles. National Director Frank Kearney, State President Phil Gallagher, State Secretary Jim Ballagher and John Mooney of the Stamford Division testified in support of the Bill before the Legislative Finance Committee. The State Treasurer also voiced support for the Bill.

The Fairfield County Board will hold their Convention on April 26, at the Danbury AOH Hall. The second AOH Tri-State meeting is also scheduled to be held on that date in the Worcester (Mass.)

The Norwalk Division is sponsoring its Annual Bob Johnson Memorial Golf Classic on June 1. Prospective participants are requested to call 846-9339.

The next State Board meeting will be held May 3, at the Danbury AOH Hall. The bi-annual State Convention will be held on June 6 and 7, in the adjacent cities of Naugatuck and Waterbury.

remains convinced that this journey of 1,000 miles can begin with the very modest step of the MacBride Principles which, at optimum, will affect less than 10 percent of the workforce.

The job situation in the North is not merely unsatisfactory — it is criminal! It would be so characterized in any court of law where human and civil rights were protected and promoted. We all know however, that Northern Ireland's only contribution to law is its incessant perversion.

There is nothing easy in this bitter climate of civil war. The implementation of the MacBride Principles to guide pension fund investment merely offers a slight ray of hope to those for whom despair and desperation have been all too constant a companion.

There may be some technical imperfections to this bill which I trust you will bring to our attention and we might work to resolve. We hope to develop bi-partisan support for a strong bill which identifies U.S. corporations not embracing the MacBride Principles and which prohibits further pension investment in those firms until they recognize the simple justice of this issue.

The distinguished Mayor of Boston, the Honorable Raymond Flynn, noted last January "that the U.S. must be careful not to become a part of the problem that British policy has been directly responsible for, namely the perpetuation of inequality." Governor Cuomo underscored this point at the bill signing. I would close however by quoting His Holiness John Paul II who remarked in his recent visit to India on the special gift of the spiritual leader and founder of that nation, Mahatma Gandhi. He stated "Gandhi showed the world how one could separate the struggle for justice from every form of hate." Hibernians see the MacBride Principles linked to pension fund investment as one such measure in the struggle for justice in Ireland.

National President Murphy Berates Hallmark Company

National President Nick Murphy criticized Hallmark for five of its St. Patrick's Day cards. "These cards are not simply in poor taste," Murphy states, "they are defamatory and insulting to any American." Mr. Murphy continued, "Each of these depicts the celebration of Ireland's national holiday as a feast day for drunken fools. Hallmark would not dare include stereotypes of Jews in Passover cards, of Italians in St. Joseph cards, or promote ethnic slurs of Blacks or Puerto Ricans. Why the Irish? I call upon Hallmark," he continued, "to apologize for these cards and to pledge it will not make St. Patrick's Day cards that are shaped like beer mugs and whiskey bottles and whose only theme is alcohol and drunkenness." Mr. Murphy indicated he will be forwarding letters to all major ethnic and Catholic organizations in America including the American Jewish Congress, the Arab-American League, the Sons of Italy, the Knights of Columbus, etc., to ask for their support in this endeavor.

"I further ask," Murphy concluded, "that Americans not purchase Hallmark Easter or Christmas cards until we have such a pledge from them and the Greeting Card Trade Associations."

CT Division Installs

The John F. Kennedy Division of the AOH, New London, Connecticut, conducted its installation of officers ceremony at the Morton House in Niantic, CT. Those installed were:

President, Ernest Muehlberger, New London; Vice President, Jack Hanley, Niantic; Recording Sec., Norman Glidden, Waterford; Financial Sec., Robert Shanahan, Uncasville; Treasurer, James Quinn, East Lyme; Sentinel, George McCarthy, Uncasville; Marshal, Jack Linicus, Waterford; Standing Comm., Joseph Coleman, New London; and Chaplain, Fr. Frank Sullivan, Waterford.

Jim Gallagher, state board secretary, and a past president of the local division, conducted the installation ceremony, which was followed by a dinner and dancing. Outgoing President John Moore of Waterford was presented a plaque of appreciation for his efforts during 1986. Joseph Coleman of Niantic was general chairman for the event which was attended by members, wives and friends.

In January the John F. Kennedy Division presented letters of appreciation and plaques to three members for contributions to Hibernian culture and ideals. Honored were Richard T. "Red" Shannon on the occasion of his retirement from the United States Coast Guard after serving a long career on the training ship "Eagle"; Thomas C. Gannon of Groton, who, at eighty-seven is the oldest active Hibernian in New London County; and Neil Shine of New London, who joined the Order in 1916 and holds the record for most years of membership of 70. Presenting the plaques were John Moore, president of the local division, and George Ryan, state director for New London County.

Senate and House Bills Call for Fair Employment Practices in Northern Ireland

S. 229. A bill to provide for adherence with the MacBride principles by United States persons doing business in Northern Ireland; to the Committee on Finance.

Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act

● MR. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to help correct a discriminatory injustice in another part of the world, Northern Ireland. Enactment of this legislation, entitled the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act, will deter efforts to use the workplace as an arena of discrimination in Northern Ireland. I first offered this legislation, cosponsored by my good friend the senior Senator from Arizona, in October of last year.

Last year, the Senate handed the President a rare foreign policy defeat by overriding his veto on legislation applying additional sanctions on South Africa. Congress overwhelmingly decided to follow rhetoric with action by applying economic sanctions against a government that maintains a policy of rampant discrimination.

Today, we have the same opportunity to fight discrimination in Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act incorporates the MacBride Principles, which are modeled after the famous Sullivan Principles, the incipient effort to apply United States pressure to change the system of apartheid in South Africa. The MacBride Principles are named in honor of Sean McBride, winner of the Noble Peace Prize and cofounder of Amnesty International.

This legislation does not call for disinvestment. It does, however, enlist the cooperation of United States companies active in Northern Ireland in the campaign to force the end of discrimination in the workplace.

One of the most prominent and painful means of perpetrating acts of discrimination is through employment. Therefore, it is at the workplace in Northern Ireland which can be used to either foster or eliminate discrimination, where we should focus our efforts to break the back of this awful practice. The unemployment rate for the area is hovering around 20 percent, 50 percent in predominately Catholic neighborhoods. Improving the employment opportunities for those discriminated against will help factor out economic reasons for the current strife in Northern Ireland and, hopefully, will begin the process toward a peaceful resolution to the problems there.

The United States is Northern Ireland's largest single investor. There are over 20 United States companies operating in Northern Ireland, and only 5 of them operate in Catholic sections. Most of these United States companies now directly or indirectly support the systematic anti-Catholic discriminatory practices in Northern Ireland. My legislation will end this shameful record. It not only will enlist these companies in the effort to wipe out discrimination at the workplace in Northern Ireland, but it also will help enlighten other nations which do business in Northern Ireland.

Mr. President, I truly believe that this body must address this important issue in the near future. I plan to fight to have this bill passed during this session of Congress, and I look to my colleagues to join me in this worthy effort.

Congressional Record

WASHINGTON, D.C. — "Discrimination against Catholics in Northern Ireland must be addressed in the 100th Congress," Congressman Hamilton Fish, Jr., R-N.Y., said in reintroducing the "Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act," House Bill 065.

"The Catholic minority has been denied equal treatment in the workplace solely on the basis of religion. My bill would ensure that American companies who operate in Northern Ireland would not contribute to this discrimination," said Fish, representative of the 21st congressional district and co-chairman of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs.

The bill requires all U.S. companies doing business in Northern Ireland to adhere to the MacBride Principles, a nine-point set of guidelines for fair employment in Northern Ireland.

Unemployment in some Catholic communities in Northern Ireland exceeds 50 percent. This figure is far greater than the 20 percent unemployment rate of the general population. About 18 percent of the employees of the U.S. manufacturing companies in Northern Ireland are Catholic, while about 73 percent are Protestant. That is disproportionate to the number of Catholics and Protestants in the general population. Catholics make up 38 percent and Protestants make up 62 percent of the population.

Under the provisions of the bill, U.S. companies must eliminate religious discrimination and significantly increase the number of Catholic employees, especially in management.

The bill requires that companies provide adequate security on the job for Catholic employees, eliminate religious and sectarian emblems in the workplace, actively recruit Catholics for employment, place qualified Catholics in management positions, and develop training and educational programs for the Catholic minority.

U.S. companies that fail to comply with the provisions of this bill will be stopped from importing their products into this country.

"Ability, not religion, should be the basis for employment opportunity. As a nation based on equality, our companies in Northern Ireland must take the lead in eliminating religious discrimination in the workplace," Fish said.

Co-sponsors of the fair employment practices act are the following Congressmen: Biaggi, Bentley, Boland, Burton, Bustamante, DiGuardi, Downey, Fauntroy, Feighan, Frank, Garcia, Jacobs, Kanjorski, Lent, Manton, McKinney, Moakley, Morrison, Mrazek, Schroeder, Straton, Towns, and Traxler.

Two Prominent Congressmen Join Irish Ad Hoc Committee

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY) today announced that U.S. Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy (D-Mass) has joined the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs.

Biaggi is Chairman of the Committee which is celebrating its 10th anniversary during 1987. The membership total has now reached 119 — one of the largest totals ever enjoyed in the Committee's history.

Biaggi said he was "delighted" that Rep. Kennedy has joined the Committee, calling him "a dynamic young leader of the present and the future." Kennedy replaced House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill, who retired at the end of the 99th Congress.

Biaggi noted that Kennedy becomes the second prominent Massachusetts House Member to join the Ad Hoc Committee in recent weeks. Earlier, Rep. Barney Frank (D-Mass) joined the Committee. Biaggi said, "Rep. Frank is the author of critically important legislation that I have co-sponsored to amend the McCarran-Walter Act to revise current visa policies. At the present time, certain segments of political thought from Ireland and Northern Ireland are regularly excluded from coming to the United States. This represents a form of censorship against the Irish American community, which must be changed."

The Ad Hoc Committee consists of 115 House and 4 Senate members at the present time.

HISTORICAL ASSESSMENT

An extract from the report of the New Ireland Forum graphically illustrates the misery and suffering of the people of the Northern Ireland since 1969:

"The most tragic loss is that of the deaths of over 2,300 men, women and children. These deaths in an area with a population of 1½ million are equivalent in proportionate terms to the killing of approximately 84,000 in Britain, 83,000 in France or 350,000 in the United States of America. In addition, over 24,000 have been injured or maimed. Thousands are suffering from psychological stress because of the fear and tension generated by murder, bombing, intimidation and the impact of security measures. During the past 15 years, there have been over 43,000 reported incidents of shootings, bombings and arson. In the North, the prison population has risen from 686 in 1967 to about 2,500 in 1983 and now represents the highest number of prisoners per head of population in Western Europe. The lives of tens of thousands have been deeply affected. The effect on society has been shattering. There is hardly a family that has not been touched to some degree by death, injury or intimidation."

To many people, the "Irish Question" is a confused mess of senseless violence, a religious feud between sections of the Irish people, with Britain doing her best to hold the line for decency and fair play. This image is reinforced daily through the media.

But can the crisis in Ireland be dismissed glibly as Irish people re-enacting the battles of the 17th century? Is Britain merely playing the role of honest broker between warring factions? The answer to these questions is obviously no.

But in order to understand the crisis and find a way forward, some knowledge of Irish history is necessary.

The crisis in Northern Ireland, involving deaths, violence and repression, is not new. Its roots lie in the long struggle of the Irish people to achieve an independent all-Ireland state, in opposition to Britain's claim to rule any part of Ireland. Ever since the first Anglo-Norman invasion of Ireland in 1169, the Irish people have resisted foreign domination. It took England four centuries to complete the conquest and the period since has been marked by regular uprisings.

An important feature of the conquest was the plantation of Ulster, the most northerly province of Ireland and this consisted of forcing the native Irish from their land to be replaced by settlers from Britain. These settlers differed in religion from the native Irish and thus religion became a badge of distinction, while in reality the differences were economic and political. These differences were submerged for long periods, only to re-emerge when it suited the ruling class to whip up sectarianism. This was done in the 1790s, when the Orange Order was created to counter the influence of the revolutionary "United Irishmen."

At the end of the 19th and early 20th centuries, Britain was faced with a determined national independence movement in Ireland. The response of the British Conservative Party was to stir up religious hatred and promote opposition to independence by fomenting sectarian strife. Eventually, when the movement for independence could no longer be contained Britain decided on partition in 1920. Limited independence was conceded to 26 of 32 counties of Ireland, with Britain retaining the 6 counties in the north-east, which had an area with an inbuilt majority favourable to her own interests. Thus partition was born and this "settlement" was imposed on a weary country under threat of "immediate and terrible war", by British Prime Minister Lloyd George. Ever since, the territory known as "Northern Ireland" is disputed. Under statutes enacted by the British Parliament, it is British. On the other hand, Article Two of the Constitution of the Irish Republic reads:

"The national territory consists of the whole island of Ireland, its islands and the territorial seas". From the British point of view, partition worked initially. Britain continued to exercise economic domination over both parts of Ireland, which remained within Britain's "sphere of influence." Neocolonialism was in existence long before the term gained wide acceptance when used in the 1950s to describe the imperialist powers "going but staying" in their colonies. The nationalist minority in the north were kept in their place by institutionalised discrimination and repression, and a civil war was engineered in the south, which stultified political development in Ireland for generations. Connolly's grim warning had come through — "partition would result in a carnival of reaction north and south."

In addition, partition enabled Britain to pretend that the Irish question, which had bedevilled British politics for years, had been resolved. On the surface, Britain seemed no longer to have any direct involvement. Both lots of Irish had got what they wanted, Mother England had done the best she could and any subsequent conflict was entirely the fault of the implacable Irish. This strategy succeeded for a time and for almost fifty years the Irish question ceased to be a major issue in British politics.

The FAILURE OF PARTITION
The weak link in the partition settlement was the nature of the devolved Northern Ireland "state". It included within its boundary, a large nationalist minority and the "state" could only exist by denying to that minority their political and civil rights. They were discriminated against in employment and housing; the elections in the areas where they were in a majority, such as Derry, were rigged by gerrymandering the electoral districts; the electoral franchise was restricted; repressive special powers were enacted and a sectarian armed police force and the paramilitary B-Specials were created. Throughout the decades there was resentment and opposition, until in new circumstances, the civil rights movement of the late 1960s exposed what the Observer newspaper called "John Bull's political shum".

The response of the Unionist administration in Belfast was traditional and predictable — let loose the B-Specials and organise programs — it had worked before in the 1920s and 1930s. But this time, the TV cameras were focused on events in Derry and Belfast. The brutal attacks by the Royal Ulster Constabulary on peaceful civil rights marches and the attacks on Catholic areas in Belfast by mobs, in many cases led by the RUC and B-Specials, horrified people around the world. The civil rights demands had exposed the contradictions within Northern Ireland, and with the Unionists demonstrating an unwillingness to make any real concessions, further conflict was inevitable. It must never be forgotten that the violence of recent years was initiated by the Unionists in response to the civil rights campaign, and violence beget violence.

For a time, the British Government remained inactive, hoping that the local administration at Stormont would resolve the crisis. In 1969 extra British troops were sent to assist them, but Stormont staggered from one crisis to another. Eventually internment without trial was introduced in August 1971; torture of prisoners became widespread and in January 1972, "Bloody Sunday" occurred — the murder of 13 peaceful civil rights demonstrators in Derry by the Paratroop Regiment. These events ushered in a new stage. In March 1972, the British Government dissolved the local administration in Belfast and instituted direct rule from Westminster clearly demonstrating where the responsibility for Northern Ireland lay. Thus, the Irish question was back in British politics with a vengeance. The Frankenstein monster had returned to haunt its maker!

BRITAIN'S ROLE

Far from being a referee between warring Irish factions, Britain has at all times had its own interests to protect in Ireland. The view of any section of the Irish people are of interest to Britain only to the extent that they help or hinder the implementation of British policy.

Partition was mooted not by any section of Irish opinion, but by the British Government. No single political party or organisation in Ireland supported it. But the effectiveness of British propaganda over the years has ensured that the attitude of the Unionists to partition at the time is now almost forgotten. As "unionists" they were opposed to any form of Home Rule for any part of Ireland. To them, the "union" was sacrosanct and any diminution would inevitably lead to the break-up of the British Empire. Hence the significance of The Solemn League and Covenant, signed by Unionists on 28th September, 1912. It read: "being convinced in our consciences that Home Rule would be disastrous to the material well-being of Ulster as well as to the whole of Ireland."

They then pledged themselves to: "use all means which will be found necessary to defeat the present conspiracy to set up a Home Rule Parliament in Ireland."

The exercise was not to exclude Ulster from the control of a Dublin Parliament, but to retain all Ireland within the Union.

In a speech in the House of Lords in December 1921, the Unionist leader, Edward Carson, bitterly denounced the Treaty, which gave limited independence to the 26 counties. He declared:

"I did not know, as I know now, that I was a mere puppet in a political game. I was in earnest, I was not playing politics. What a fool I was. I was only a puppet and so was Ulster and so was Ireland, in a political game that was to get the Conservative Party into power." Carson and the Unionists were blinded by their prejudices and were unable to perceive that Britain had decided on a new political arrangement, tailored to meet her requirements. However, they were correct in declaring that partition had no friends on one side of the Irish sea. It was solely a British creation.

PRESENT BRITISH POLICY
The stated policy of the British Government is that there shall be no change in the constitutional position of Northern Ireland without the consent of the majority of the people in Northern Ireland. However, this ignores the fact that the Unionists are a majority in an artificial state.

The line drawn across the map of Ireland in 1920 had no historical basis. It does not conform to the boundary of the Irish province of Ulster, three of whose nine counties are in the Republic, the other six comprising Northern Ireland. Thus, to equate "Northern Ireland" with Ulster is false. Furthermore, two of the North's six counties have nationalist majorities and the remainder have substantial nationalist populations. There is no distinctive physical feature delineating a border. In fact, it was a political division, the idea being to carve out an area sufficient to contain a unionist majority and then to regard that majority as sacrosanct. Britain conferred on a minority the right to frustrate the aspirations of the majority of the Irish people and then conceded to that minority a veto on any political change in the constitutional arrangement. This was not done out of any regard for the welfare of that minority but as a device to ensure continuing British domination over all of Ireland.

While it is irrefutable that imperial interest was the reason for partition, it has been argued that this consideration no longer applies and that Britain would be only too happy to withdraw from Ireland, if only she were able. Why then, does Britain still maintain partition?

Is it out of concern for the wishes of the Unionists? One would be hard put to find many on the Shankill Road who now believe this. They are aware of the many examples of those who gave "loyal service" to Britain, only to be jettisoned during the decolonisation process — Ugandan Asians, Tamils, and more recently, the Hong Kong Chinese, to name but a few. Self-interest is the only consideration in these situations and the Unionists suspect that if it suited Britain, they would be cast aside, like a child discarding last year's toy. This is one of the reasons for the break-up of the Unionist monolith in recent years and the outburst of unionist violence. They feel the icy wind of insecurity, now blowing stronger as a consequence of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. One must therefore look for other reasons for Britain's maintenance of partition.

Colonial conquest does not simply involve territorial claims or occupying armies. It is bound up with the social, economic, cultural and political expressions of power. These issues are particularly relevant in the case of Ireland, because of our geographical proximity to Britain. The two islands have been brought closer with the advent of modern communications systems. Accordingly, political events in one island have repercussions in the other. Born out of this situation is the deep belief that a united and truly independent Ireland represents a threat to the hegemony of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. This view is strongly held by many within the Conservative Party, including Margaret Thatcher, the born-again jingo imperialist and self-proclaimed champion of the union.

But the world today is different than 1921, when partition was forced on the Irish people. Britain is a declining world power, in hock to the United States. Thatcher's Britain is as obsessed with war preparation as it is with smashing the trade unions. Yet the continuing crisis in Northern Ireland makes Anglo-Irish relations precarious and draws world attention to Britain's dirty back yard. While the policy makers at Westminster search for solutions, they are not over-concerned about the continuing war situation in Northern Ireland. Indeed, it has its uses. Valuable military expertise is being gained, new weapons and tactics for urban situations are being tested, society generally is under computerised surveillance — all in the name of defeating the "terrorist". If they can contain violence at an "acceptable level", the deplorable expression used by former British Home Secretary Reginald Maudling, they hope to buy time to defeat vigorous opponents of British rule, while seeking out new political forces in Ireland, with whom they can reach an accommodation.

Returning to the argument that Northern Ireland is a military laboratory, the British miners, during the course of their heroic strike, encountered at first-hand methods of "crowd control", perfected in Northern Ireland. The former Chief Constable of the RUC, Sir Kenneth Newman has displayed some of the lessons learnt in that post, in his present role as Chief Constable of the London Metropolitan Police. Many police forces in Britain now carry stocks of plastic bullets and it is only a question of time before they are used.

THE ECONOMIC ASPECT

Despite the greater part of Ireland having been independent for 65 years British involvement in the economy did not diminish. In fact, with the advent of free trade and the expansion of multinational companies, it is probably greater than at any time in the past. Irish banks, credit companies, insurance and assurance firms are largely British dominated. Most of the property speculation in Ireland is British, and British supermarkets and department stores control a large slice of the market, despite the retention of Irish names. Protecting these financial interests is of concern to Britain and in this regard, partition serves a function — a divided Ireland is a weakened Ireland.

Obviously, in global terms, the economic significance of Ireland from a British point of view, should not be over-stated. Some might therefore argue that it is not worth the trouble. However, it must be borne in mind that any profit from Ireland goes to British capitalists, while the cost of the continuing crisis — the massive security bill — is borne by the British worker.

THE MILITARY DIMENSION

The fundamental reasons for the maintenance of partition today are military. Ireland straddles the western approaches; and in a conventional war, or a nuclear war preceded by a conventional one, Ireland could be strategically important. This was clearly expressed by Lord Windlesham, an Irish peer, during the debate of Britain's original application for EEC membership. In the House of Lords in 1961, he said:

"One has only to look at the map to see that the situation of Ireland, to the extreme west of the whole organisation, gives it a special position. Cobh has probably the finest inland anchorage in the world . . . the old naval base at Haulbowline in Cobh harbor still exists and is in excellent order . . . Then there is the great airfield at Shannon, the furthest west of any airfield or airport in Europe. Its potential for expansion is enormous, unlimited and incomparably greater than anything which exists in Northern Ireland . . . Then there is the projected Shannon deep-sea port, which if developed will take tankers of 100,000 tons and more into the Shannon, which in times of war might be of enormous importance and value, and again would be situated to the extreme west of the whole NATO set-up."

But for Britain, there is a problem. The Republic of Ireland is a neutral country and is the only EEC country not in NATO. On the other hand, Britain (and NATO) have bases in Northern Ireland and these must be retained, or alternatives obtained. The relevance of Ireland's neutrality, in the context of partition, was highlighted in a revealing speech by Michael Mates, Conservative Member of Parliament, in Dublin in October 1984. Mr. Mates, who is chairman of the Inter-Party Committee of Westminster M.P.s on Irish affairs, informed his Irish audience:

"You're asking unionists if they are prepared to give up their allegiance to their sovereign and their association with the United Kingdom. That might be difficult, but if enough wanted it we might give way. But if you say that you don't want anything to do with Western defence, you're actually asking them much more than to give up their allegiance to their sovereign. It has to do with two totally different attitudes to Western defence. Neutrality was at the heart of your Irishness, but it was alien to Britain and to the Britishness of unionism. There you have a stumbling block twice the size of any other."

One can assume that forward-looking sections of the British ruling class do not fear a united Ireland as such, but they fear it outside their control. Partition was imposed by Britain to retain her influence within Ireland and she will only undo partition when she is satisfied that all Ireland is securely tied into the Western military alliance.

Already, pressure from Britain and the EEC is being exerted to undermine Irish neutrality. As a consequence of new technological defence systems, the west coast of Ireland has taken on a new significance as a base for early warning systems. It is possible that methods of communications already exist there, linked to RAF (NATO) radar systems. Irish neutrality and what bit of sovereignty remains is being whittled away through foreign policy co-ordination and agreed "security" positions.

While the Irish Congress of Trade Unions, the Irish Labour Party, Irish CND and all Left and democratic organisations are unequivocal in defending Irish neutrality, forces in the Southern establishment would be prepared to trade it off in return for some form of "Irish dimension" in the North. This is central to the Anglo-Irish Agreement of November 1985.

At the time of partition, the most reliable agents and "junior partners" for imperialism in Ireland were the Unionists landlords and capitalists in the North. In return for "holding the line" for imperialism in Ireland, they were given a relatively free hand to run the North as they saw fit. They have now outlived their usefulness, as the dominant sections of the capitalist class in the 26 counties have abandoned any notion of independence and are prepared to settle for the "junior partner" role, as shown by the 1965 Anglo-Irish Free Trade Agreement and the joining of the EEC simultaneously with Britain in 1973. In contrast, the Unionists have now become an embarrassment to Britain. However, on the time-honoured principle of divide and rule, the British Government will not place all its eggs in one basket. Thus, we see the Anglo-Irish Agreement being sold to Irish nationalists as a major step forward, in that it gives the South a say in the running of the North, while the Unionists are being told that it guarantees that there will never be a united Ireland.

In fact, one of the first consequences of the Anglo-Irish Agreement was to further involve and institutionalise the Dublin Government in maintaining British "Security". In this area, there is now co-responsibility for a situation deriving from Britain's imposition of partition, against the wishes of the majority of the Irish people.

One thing is clear about the Anglo-Irish Agreement, it no more provides a solution than did the Act of Union of 1800 or the Anglo-Irish Treaty of 1921. Any solution that does not vest control of Ireland in the people of Ireland cannot and will not succeed. A solution must be found which corresponds to the wishes of the majority of the Irish people. Such a solution must also enable the working class movement to exert its influence over the course of events, thereby protecting its future.

Trade Unionists for Irish Independence (TUII) was founded in 1984 in Dublin, and is sponsored in an individual capacity by some 40 leading Irish trade unionists. It is not a political party, with policies on a wide range of issues. On the contrary, the sponsors of TUII are members of different political parties and organisations, or of none. They would probably all describe themselves as socialists, using the term in the broadest sense, who share a common view on the national question and partition, in particular.

He stated that his objective was "to break the connection with England, the never failing source of all our political evils." He then added, "to unite the whole people of Ireland, to abolish the memory of past dissensions and to substitute the common

THE MINSTREL BOY

By Jack Mahoney

There's a stillness now on Ireland's moors that shuns the charging sea; and mutes the throats of heroes gone to fill their destiny. From Patrick's well no water flows to tempt the jealous skies; but Sarah's tears have wet the clay where Emmet's body lies. O'Connell's golden words are dust beneath Glasnevin's shale; but fogs that dance on Ireland's moors renew the ancient tale. Phantom barpiests greet the night, shrouded clarions ring; saints and martyrs pause to hear the minstrel chorus sing.

"In dirge we followed warriors' blood from hill to ocean sand; a thousand summers could not heal the scarred and pillaged land."

"From glens we heard the voice of Truth as soft as forest rain, then borne on Celtic lachie achieve crescendo on the plain." "On Tara's grass, we saw your kings, before a bishop kneel; not Viking sword nor Druid mace could rend the Christian seal." Now heather fields on Ireland's moors must woo the morning star; but those who love the minstrel boy will listen from afar. From "Irish Coffee," Darrance & Co. Copyright 1974

Assurance Sought That Arms Embargo Stands

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D, NY) sought assurances from the state department they have no plans to lift an eight-year-old embargo on the sale of U.S. arms and ammunition to the controversial Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Biaggi is chairman of the Bi-Partisan 114 member Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs. An amendment Biaggi sponsored in 1979 led to a decision by the state department to suspend further sales of arms and ammunition to the RUC.

In a letter to the state department Biaggi noted, "The original basis for my amendment which led to the embargo was that sales of arms to the RUC violated United States law which bars the sale of arms to any nation or organization with a proven record of human rights violations. The RUC in the late 1970s had been cited by leading groups such as Amnesty International for inhumane treatment of prisoners in Northern Ireland. These findings were later confirmed by a British government appointed commission. At the present time the RUC is being investigated for an alleged 'shoot to kill' policy it employed in Northern Ireland. Again Amnesty International has been critical of the policy. They cited more than 35 separate shooting incidents since 1982 with more than half of the victims being unarmed. The RUC has been widely criticized for attempts to whitewash findings of an initial report highly critical of RUC policies. It would be most inappropriate to entertain any idea of relaxing or lifting the suspension at this time."

Biaggi also noted that the RUC has been cited for the "indiscriminate" use of plastic bullets against unarmed civilians in Northern Ireland which have resulted in more than a dozen fatalities since 1980, with more than half of the victims being under the age of 15. Biaggi said, "The Royal Ulster Constabulary is testament to the fact that there are two kinds of violence in Northern Ireland, civilian and official. Both are wrong and must be ended if there is to be peace in Ireland. The United States government must not in any way support either."

Observations

By PHYLLIS ZAGANO

This will be the twelfth or thirteenth St. Patrick's Day that Joe Doherty has spent in prison. He is 32 years old.

Joe Doherty was first imprisoned in Northern Ireland at the age of 17. He went to the Maidstone prison ship, and then to the Long Kesh prison camp. He had no trial. There were no charges. He was held then because it was "expedient" to "the preservation of the peace and the maintenance of order."

Joe Doherty, you see, belonged to Na Fianna Eirann, the anti-English youth group. Whether they be the troubadours or terrorists depends not on which side of the aisle but on which side of the Irish Sea your sentiments lie. And whether he, Joe Doherty, is troubadour or terrorist is somewhat irrelevant in the tale which has unfolded.

In 1981 he was sentenced to life in prison for the killing of a British soldier after trial before a "Diplock" court, in which only the British Army testifies.

Joe Doherty and his superiors thought America was the answer. And so he came, and so he lived for two years or so until he was arrested in New York as an illegal alien. Since June of 1983 he has been in New York federal prisons.

Joe Doherty might be in Ireland now, except for the fact that our three branches of government cannot seem to get their act together. In 1984 a Federal District Court judge ruled that Joe Doherty could not be returned to Northern Ireland because he was of the political exception category to our extradition treaties. But U.S. v. Dougherty was not to end so soon. Appeals and more appeals, each decision affirming and reaffirming the original determination that "the facts of this case present the assertion of the political offense exception in its most classic form." But the political offense exception has been rewritten.

Joe Doherty, it turns out, was the reason the extradition treaty was rewritten, and all the while his appeals were grinding down. By the time they finished, a new treaty had been written and ratified; expressly it would seem to retroactively deny Joe Doherty the political offender status an American court had granted him. This treaty, finally ratified in July of 1986, refuses to admit to murder as an offense with a "political character." Fair enough, but whether you judge the shooting of one military man by a member of a well-established although illegal opposing militia, murder is irrelevant to the problem at hand.

Joe Doherty, you see, found out in September, 1986 that a U.S. Immigration judge had ruled he could be deported to the Republic of Ireland. And while the appeals to that judgement cycled through the judicial mill, the British House of Commons ratified the extradition treaty. His immigration case came up February 11, and the judgement is not in.

Joe Doherty can only hope that someone has read the Constitution lately, especially the part in Article I, Section 9 which reads "No bill of attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed." To make the law fit the criminal precisely, and then establish it retroactively, ought to be more than even an American Anglophile can stand. Beyond, how can we retry Joe

Analysis/Northern Ireland

By FR. DESMOND WILSON
Director of Conway Mills, Belfast

Mr. Charles Haughey, who is likely to become the next Prime Minister (Taoiseach) of the Republic of Ireland, has made severe attack on the Anglo-Irish Agreement. The Agreement, signed over one year ago, was presented to Irish people by Mr. Peter Barry, Foreign Minister of the Republic, as a framework within which the "nightmare of Irish nationalism in Northern Ireland would at last be ended." But instead it has led to a renewal of sectarian killing in Northern Ireland reminiscent of the mid-seventies, a situation described with horror by the Roman Catholic bishop in Belfast, Dr. Cahal Daly.

Now almost thirteen months after the signing of the Agreement, the Irish Republic's government is trying hard to win some concessions for Catholics in Northern Ireland, who are virtually excluded from Doherty — or anyone — on the same question?

This St. Patrick's Day you may find Joe Doherty a troubadour or you may find him a terrorist. Whichever, he is undeniably a 32 year old human being presently in residence at the Manhattan Correctional Center as Inmate Number 07792054. Should he be granted political offender status, as the first judge allowed? Should he be extradited to Northern Ireland, as the later treaty implies? Should he be deported to the Republic of Ireland, as the immigration judge ruled?

It would seem that in America, we could at least abide by our own Constitution. No doubt on this St. Patrick's Day, Joe Doherty would agree.

government and from many jobs. Some politicians have made unwarranted claims that the Anglo-Irish Agreement has produced results for example that it was responsible for a British decision to demolish blocks of uninhabitable apartments in Belfast and Derry. That decision, however, was made after many years of agitation by the residents of the blocks themselves. It has also been claimed by Fr. Denis Faul, Catholic priest of Dungannon, Co. Tyrone, that the Agreement was a direct result of the pleas of Pope John Paul during his visit to Ireland. Mr. Mallon, deputy leader of the Social Democratic and Labor Party, has complained bitterly that the Agreement has not produced adequate results for the relief of Catholics in Northern Ireland. Mr. Mallon was not in favor of the Agreement up to three days before it was signed (November 1985) but was persuaded to support it by Mr. John Hume who promised that the resources of the party would be available to Mr. Mallon to secure him a seat in the Westminster Parliament. Catholic bishops and clergy have bitterly complained that the level of abuse by British military and police against Catholics in Derry, Belfast and Strabane (Co. Tyrone) has not lessened since the Agreement, but increased.

Against this background Mr. Haughey launched his attack against the Agreement at a commemorative meeting in Cork (October 12th). He complained about the increasing arrogance of British actions in N. Ireland and of their demands about the internal affairs of the Republic including the demand that the British government should be allowed to help frame a charter of human rights for the Republic and that the Republic should alter its Constitution to suit British needs.

Meanwhile, Mr. Sean MacBride, Nobel Peace Prize winner and statesman, has predicted that the British government will be forced to leave Ireland within five to ten years.

King Attacks Moynihan And His "Friends of Ireland"

Nassau County Comptroller Peter T. King today charged Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan with "attempting to divide the Irish-American community and sell out the Catholic nationalists of Northern Ireland" by forming an organization of elected officials which King said is "nothing but a front group for Moynihan's discredited pro-British appeasement policies." The organization which is to be known as New York State Friends of Ireland is modelled after the Friends of Ireland in Congress which was formed in 1981 by Moynihan, Senator Edward Kennedy, Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill and Governor Hugh Carey — the so-called "Four Horsemen" of Irish-American politics.

"Throughout his years in the United States Senate, Moynihan has been anything but a 'friend of Ireland,'" King stated. "Instead, he is an inveterate Anglophile who continually ignores British oppression of the Catholic nationalists in the occupied six counties of Northern Ireland. What is even more despicable is that he invariably attacks those in Ireland who fight for their freedom and against British injustice."

"Not surprisingly, that same pro-British elitist bias pervades the charter and policy statement of the New York State Friends of Ireland," King said. "Displaying a moral arrogance and self-righteousness that would do justice to the Royal Family, Moynihan and his group cavalierly condemn 'all violence' in Northern Ireland without once referring to the murders and systematic violence of the British Army. Instead they assail the 'bomb and the bullet' and other time-worn allusions. They claim they support Irish unity but by accepting the gerrymandered boundaries of Northern Ireland they serve as guarantors of partition. They oppose American support for the nationalist movement while forgetting that the Dublin government was only able to attain its measure of independence because of overt assistance from American groups such as Clan Na Gael."

King continued that "what is most arrogant about Moynihan and his fellow collaborators is that they would deny Sinn Féin the right to participate in negotiations involving the future of Northern Ireland. Considering that Belfast is the major city in the six counties, that Gerry Adams has been democratically elected to the British Parliament by the people of West Belfast and that the majority of nationalist representatives to the Belfast City Council are members of Sinn Féin, by what divine right does Moynihan disenfranchise the Belfast nationalists from the negotiating table."

King said he was "calling upon all elected officials to reject Moynihan and the quiescent Friends of Ireland. Freedom and justice will only come to the people of Ireland because of the men and women of the nationalist movement and the Irish-Americans who have the courage and sense of purpose to stand by them. As for Senator Moynihan, he and his ilk should at long last drop all pretense and spend St. Patrick's Day exchanging toasts with their kindred spirits at the British Embassy."

..... The Gate Theatre

By Liz Heade
Liz Heade is literary manager of the Gate Theatre, Dublin.
(This article appeared in the Bulletin of the Department of Foreign Affairs, Dublin, Ireland.)

The building that houses Dublin's Gate Theatre has been a centre of cultural activity since 1767 and has one of the liveliest histories in a city where each of a thousand buildings is associated with a famous statesman, writer or rebel.

It was originally a group of recreation rooms built adjacent to the Rotunda Hospital in order to raise funds for the medical care of poor women. In earlier days it was the scene of readings by Charles Dickens and recitals by the Irish composer John Field. It was where Henry Grattan first spoke of an Irish parliament independent of Great Britain. British soldiers were billeted in its rooms during the Rising of 1798. Nationalists Robert Emmet and Wolfe Tone made famous speeches from its stage and it has housed, inter alia, a concert hall, a palais de danse, a cinema and, of course, the Gate Theatre itself.

As the Gate Theatre it first became internationally renowned in the 1930s, under the direction of Hilton Edwards and Michael MacLiammoir, as one of the most adventurous and far-sighted playhouses in Europe. It was at the Gate that Dublin audiences were introduced to international theatre, to the work of Ibsen, Chekhov, O'Neill and Zola; there it was that the first performance of Wilde's Salome was seen—the play was proscribed in London; there also that the mighty Ballets Russes de Paris—performing Fokine's Spectre de la Rose—filled in for the young Gate company absent on tour in Egypt. It was here, too, that Orson Welles, James Mason and Geraldine Fitzgerald began their prodigious acting careers, and that MacLiammoir created his own definitive portrayal of Wilde in his one-man show The Importance of Being Oscar. It was at the Gate that innovation, energy and partnership brought Irish theatre out of an introspective Celtic twilight into the light of the dynamic new century.

During the 1940s and 1950s the theatre flourished under the directorship of Edwards—MacLiammoir and the Earl of Longford, a playwright and director and a man of immense tenacity and courage, who sold a great portion of the Longford family inheritance to keep the Gate open and operational in the face of severe debts. There is little doubt that without his great personal commitment the Gate would not have survived until today.

Throughout the 1960s Edwards and MacLiammoir enjoyed distinguished individual careers in the theatre and in film. MacLiammoir performed world-wide his one-man shows on the lives and works of great Irish writers, and Edwards became Head of Drama at R.T.E., the national television and radio company.

Recently, the Gate has re-emerged as one of Dublin's busiest and most successful theatrical venues, invited to tour on four continents and winning awards for its high standards of performance, direction and design. Under the direction of Michael Colgan, the Gate has regained its reputation as the home of adventure, originality and style. Among the writers and artists associated with the theatre in the last twelve months have been Samuel Beckett, Seamus Heaney, Brian Friel, Hugh Leonard, Thomas Murphy, Steven Berkoff and Joseph Brodsky.

The Gate started life as part of an international 'little theatre' movement in the 1920s. Two young actors, Hilton Edwards and Michael MacLiammoir, met while touring Ireland with Anew McMaster's Shakespeare Company and, finding a common interest in international drama and ways of staging it, set up a theatre company which they hoped might entertain those Dublin playgoers currently 'dividing their time between the Abbey and No No Nanette.' Their co-founders were Madame Bannad Cogley, the owner of a small theatre club, Gearoid O Lochlainn, who had been a considerable force in the Gaelic League movement, and the young actress Coralie Carmichael, who was to be the Gate's leading lady for many years.

MacLiammoir later wrote of the spark that had fired their and similar ventures throughout Europe:

"We honestly believed that the theatre was finding its way to freedom, mistaking, as so many new generations do, a welcome but essentially ephemeral shelter for the night for a permanent dwelling place."

Their first ephemeral shelter was the Peacock, a tiny studio attached to the Abbey Theatre, where they presented Peer Gynt in October 1928. They produced two seasons there, including works by Tolstoy, Elmer Rice and Karel Capek, with a good deal of optimism and some mild success.

But their permanent dwelling place for the ensuing fifty years was the former Assembly Rooms — then vacant — of the Rotunda Hospital which they noticed one day from a small hotel across the road in Cavendish Row. There they opened the Gate proper in 1930 with their version of Goethe's Faust. The small audience who had discovered them at the Peacock followed them to the Gate Theatre and started to grow.

In the first ten years, holding fast to the principle of one- or two-weekly turnarounds, the Gate company's repertoire stretched from Cyrano de Bergerac to Mourning Becomes Electra and from Agamemnon to Sweeney Todd and new work by MacLiammoir, Lord Longford and Denis Johnston. In that decade, they performed in London, Cairo, Athens, Belgrade and Sofia, as well as playing lengthy seasons at the larger Gaiety Theatre in Dublin. They began to attract the attention of the international press as an important complement to the already famous Abbey Theatre of W. B. Yeats and Lady Gregory.

It seems extraordinary that while Ireland had for centuries contributed so much to world theatre, international drama had failed to find a foothold in Dublin. But perhaps when a small country can produce so many of the world's greatest dramatists — Congreve, Sheridan, Farquhar, Boucicault, Wilde and Shaw — and establish one of the first national theatres in the world at the Abbey, it has no urge to look beyond its own shores for inspiration. The change began to happen in the 1920s, perhaps because Ireland, newly independent, finally had its political and economic destiny in its own hands, or perhaps because communications and travel made other cultures more accessible. In any case, Ireland began to look abroad — particularly beyond Britain — for new ideas and began to assess what it had in common with other cultures and what was uniquely Irish. It was in that atmosphere of enterprise and conceit that the Gate took its first steps. The Abbey Theatre was one born of the Irish renaissance at the turn of the century, while the Gate was influenced by the international movement of the 1920s. The difference was not merely one of years, but of outlook and style. The first became a national theatre, the second international.

The young Gate company toured extensively from the beginning and its work began to be influenced by contemporary European styles of theatre. Old-fashioned, pictorial scenery was giving way to expressionism and abstraction, to glorious new colours and textures and to revolutionary use of space and lighting. These in turn were opening up a whole new style of acting. MacLiammoir was a painter in his own right. Edwards, as well as being a great choreographer of actors, was one of the most skilled lighting designers of his day. To these gifts they added a very solid background in the theatre as touring, fit-up actors, so that the Gate was not simply a product of the European avant-garde but had a foundation in practical theatrical skills.

Nowadays the Gate is partly subsidised by the government, but in the 1940s the company had no such support. Lord Longford, an enthusiastic supporter of the Gate, began to provide the theatre with subsidies and later, to fill the gap left while Edwards — MacLiammoir were on tour, he established his own acting company at the Gate Longford Productions presented a mainly classical repertoire of Shakespeare, Sheridan and Shaw, and occasionally Longford's own adaptations of Moliere and Swift. Within a year the company was playing at the Ambassador's Theatre in London. The name of the Gate was already a by-word for success.

For many years the two companies shared the theatre, each producing a six-month season, with Longford subsidising both his own company and, almost unacknowledged, Edwards — MacLiammoir's, thus enabling them to continue to experiment and take risks and not suffer the price of box office failure.

The theatre closed in 1957 for structural repairs and might not have opened again but for the always — outrageous Longford, who collected on the streets, sold clothes and jewellery and even had a copy made of a painting — a valuable heirloom — so that he could sell the original.

When the Gate re-opened it was to present MacLiammoir's new adaptation of O'Flaherty's novel The Informer, Brecht's Mother Courage, the world premiere of The Importance of Being Oscar, and at the Gaiety Theatre, Orson Welles directing and performing in Chimes at Midnight.

Edwards and MacLiammoir were at that time in such demand elsewhere both as performers and producers that less and less work originated at the Gate. Dublin was in danger of losing them for good when the Irish government stepped in for the last time with a grant, both for the refurbishment of the building and the subsidy of the theatre's work.

Since 1969 the Irish government has given an annual grant to the Gate through the Arts Council.

Among them were National AOH Vice President Michael Coogan of Dayton, who congratulated the division on its many activities and as a forceful unit of Hibernianism in the state of Ohio.

MacBride Principles Resolution Adopted

At a special board meeting on Thursday, March 5, 1987 the new AOH Baltimore City Board President, John L. Shaughnessy, introduced a resolution to adopt the MacBride Principles.

They were unanimously adopted by all officers of the Baltimore City Board, the Maryland State Board and the Divisions presidents of Baltimore City and State of Maryland.

In attendance as their speaker on the MacBride Principles was Joseph A. Roche, past national president, now the national Political Education Committee Chairman.

A committee was immediately formed to explore the issue.

Massachusetts' Lynn Division Helps Homeless

Members of Division 10, Lynn, Massachusetts recently delivered two truckloads of clothing and shoes to the Pine Street Inn, Boston, MA.

The Pine Street Inn was founded many years ago to feed, clothe and house the hungry and homeless of the Greater Boston Area. It has expanded from small quarters to a large former firehouse with surrounding buildings owned by the Pine Street Inn Association. The surrounding buildings provide low-rent homes for the working poor. At the present time the Inn is in the process of opening another building to provide sleeping quarters for an additional 300 people.

Free meals are served daily at the Inn and bedding is provided for those unable to find decent places to sleep.

Clothing is an integral part of the Inn services and Division 10 has done its share in providing it.

The division's on-going program has delivered literally tons of clothing and shoes, both winter and summer, over the past several years. In addition, the Lynn Division has helped provide much needed cash to the Inn through various fund raising events.

Early Irish History

Cromwell's invasion, 1649-52, crushed the Irish. Soon, Catholic Ireland was owned by English Protestants. The system of wealthy, often absent English landlords and a massive, poor peasant class was well established. The Cromwellian government collapsed, and James II, a Catholic, became King of England. But James' English subjects turned against him. William of Orange was summoned from Europe, and James fled.

In due course both landed in Ireland and the "Cogadh an Da-Ri" war of the two kings commenced. When James and "King Billy" faced one another across the narrow Boyne river, James had 25,000 French and Irish troops and William had 36,000 English, Dutch, Danes, Germans and Huguenots.

In Ulster, the Battle of the Boyne is celebrated. 100,000 bowler hatted members of the Orange Order parade on July 12. The battle they celebrate, William's rout of James, occurred on July 1, 1690.

Actually the war went on, Patrick Sarsfield distinguishing himself as a cavalry leader and remaining one of Ireland's most beloved heroes. On October 3, 1691, Sarsfield surrendered the Irish stronghold of Limerick. He led 14,000 troops to the continent; the first of "the Wild Geese," Irish emigres to fight for foreign flags. At Aughrim a Dutch general named Ginkel defeated a French general named St. Ruth and Ireland was doomed to be oppressed.

"An Irishman could not speak his language, practice his religion, be educated, hold office or own a horse, secret masses, spoken in caves and open fields, the Protestant lease, a grave."

Soon even the Irish Protestants became restless. "We seem strange and remote to the English, they look at us at a distance, they have one impression, we are a disloyal and turbulent people, who could only be rendered harmless if we are disabled by poverty," wrote William Wood, a Protestant. Not until 1798 would open revolt come again, fomented by Wolfe Tone and aided by a French army, adding more martyrs and battlefields to the Irish earth. The French and a motley mob of peasants were defeated by Lord Cornwallis of Yorktown fame, and the gallows claimed the losers. Wolfe Tone was captured and condemned to death. He died in prison, probably by his own hand. He was 35 years old. At this time there was strong anti-English feeling by the Presbyterians of Ulster.

In 1802 there would be another uprising as Robert Emmet attempted to reorganize the United Irishmen. He had just returned from France, and hoped for help from Napoleon. In Dublin, his plan was to attack the castle and Pigeon House Fort. July 23, 1803 was fixed as the date. He expected help from the Wicklow rebel, Michael Dwyer, and more from Kildare.

By some misunderstanding the Wicklow men did not arrive, and the men from Kildare had no leader. With 100 men he started up Thomas Steet toward the castle. But a mob rose up and the march became a rampage. The chief justice, Lord Kilwarden, an honest man and friendly to the cause, was dragged from his coach and murdered. The noble Emmet, only 24 years of age, was horrified, and his attempts to quell the mob were hopeless. He was captured on August 25.

After a mockery of a trial, he was convicted and hung on Thomas Street on September 20, 1803 after what history calls a few words. But those words were:

"When my country is free from foreign intervention, when my country joins its place among the nations of the world, then write my epitaph."

During his two year term of office, Martin Shea spearheaded the very successful 150th Anniversary Ball held at Roseliff Mansion in Newport. Congratulations and a "tip of the green hat" are in order for Brother Martin Shea.

The award is presented each year on parade day by a group of past recipients of the award to a member of the Division who has done the most to promote the ideals of the national organization.

Act Now to Plant A Tree in Ireland

Are you a part of the "Hibernian Trees for Ireland" program? Have you placed your order for a tree to be planted in Ireland? What better way can you be assured of owning a bit of the Emerald Isle and emphasize where your "Roots" are, than by arranging for a tree in the County of your choice.

If you have not already done so, send your name and address; in whose name the tree will be dedicated; and in what County. Give this information to your local Division or State or send it, along with your check for ten dollars

Hibernians Mourn Death of M. Josepha Ahern

New York State Hibernians mourned the death on January 7, 1987, of that "darling girl from Claire," M. Josepha Ahern, New York State President from 1983-1985. "Jo" was much loved throughout the State, not only for her many contributions to our Noble Order, but also because she was a dear and lovable woman. It can be said without fear of contradiction, that Jo Ahern never had an enemy and never uttered an unkind word about anyone. She truly lived the Golden Rule.

Jo joined the then LAOH in 1955. Her dedication to the precepts of our Order and to its aims and aspirations were evident from the very beginning. Because she gave of herself unstintingly, she was elected to every office in the County and in 1983 achieved the highest office in the State of New York.

As Suffolk County President, she witnessed the growth of Hibernianism in that County. Certainly, the "Mother of Suffolk County," as she was affectionately called, will be remembered for so many things in Hibernian circles, but one goal that she achieved which gave her great satisfaction was the organization of the Suffolk County Degree Team. It was her "baby" and one that thrilled her when she saw it reach fruition. She was justifiably proud of "her girls" who received so many accolades whenever they conferred the Degrees because of the proficiency of their work and beauty of their costumes.

When the University of Notre

M. JOSEPHA AHERN

Dame Fund was established after the National Convention in Ireland in 1978, Violet Forcica appointed her East Coast Co-ordinator. She pursued her work with great diligence and witnessed the fruits of her labors in the growth of donations to the Notre Dame Fund.

During the wake in Kings Park, L.I., where she had been a resident for more than fifty years after leaving her native Ireland, Jo's friends filled Clayton's Funeral Home. Visitor after visitor spoke of her kindness, her lady-like attributes and her genuine love for people. Her son William, who spoke at the end of Mass, mentioned what this meant to his sisters and himself. They knew their mother was wonderful and they were pleased to know all that she was, was recognized by others.

The Suffolk County AOH Choir sang the Mass at St. Joseph's. During the distribution of communion, they rendered the hymn, Golden Rose, Queen of Ireland, the hymn to Our Lady of Knock. As her body was led up the aisle, Miss Elizabeth Harren, a Suffolk County Piper, played Amazing Grace. This was most fitting because Jo Ahern epitomized gracefulness in everything she did. Despite the downpour that morning, more than 400 people filled the church. The readings were done by her granddaughter, Mrs. Jane Tranel. The pallbearers, in accordance with Jo's wishes, were her six grandsons.

It will be strange to attend Conventions without her. "Jo, we will miss your smiling face at those sessions and miss your intelligent assessment of the subjects under discussion. You have been a most valued member, a most honored member. You can be proud of all you did to make the LAOH a force with which to be reckoned. You have left us with a "terrible void." You will live forever in the hearts of your family, just as you will in ours. We pray God will grant you Eternal Peace and a very special place in heaven which, by the life you led, you have richly earned."

Connecticut's Division 66 Celebrates 25th Birthday

At the February meeting of the LAOH Division 66, Waterbury, a double celebration was held. It was the 25th Anniversary of the Waterbury Division and also a tribute to the Feast of St. Brigid.

The meeting was attended by many members and several past presidents. Past presidents that attended were: Anna Tehan, the Division's first President; Helen Meehan; Frances Kearney; Sue Sweeney; and National President Sheila Clifford.

During the past twenty-five years the division's membership has grown to 200. It's been an extraordinary quarter century, one which saw Sheila Clifford move from City to New Haven County, to State and finally National office. At the present time she is serving as National President of the LAOH. She was the sixth president of the local group and the first National President elected from Connecticut.

President Ann Harmon welcomed Fr. White, from Immaculate Conception Church. Father started the evening by offering Mass for the deceased members and for a successful year for the new officers of 1987.

The next several months will be very busy ones for the membership. Among the events planned is the March 14th Annual Charity Fair at the Naugatuck Valley Mall. The LAOH will sell Irish Soda Bread and the profits will go to the Columban Mission Fund. The members will also march in the St. Patrick's Parade in the Washington Hill Section of Waterbury.

LAOH Pennsylvania News

Across the State of Pennsylvania, the twenty-one LAOH Divisions attended the serious business at hand of the election of officers. Then their attention turned to holiday activities. The Divisions celebrated in varying ways with parties, luncheons, and dinners.

Scranton Division 2, Lackawanna County, held a formal installation of officers. Mary E. Cawley was elected president and the other officers are: Joyce McGraw, Lois Cavezza, Loretta Ludvici, Mary Morgan, Catherine Holtham, Jeanne Goffney, Alice Ackroyd, Mae Goffney, and Catherine Kearney.

Carbondale Division 3, Lackawanna County, chose Lois Speicher as the new president. The Annual Communion Breakfast was held at Crystal Lake Hotel with Rev. Neil McLaughlin, S.J., celebrating the Mass. Dr. Fenton Cavanaugh of Marywood College was keynote speaker. Rita Brennan was chairman and Betty Dempsey served as toastmaster. A Day of Recollection was held at St. Gabriel's Retreat House at Clarks Summit, with Rev. Bernard Tierney, C.R. as director. Mary Purcell, Catholic Action, was in charge of arrangements.

Wilkes Barre Division 1, Luzerne County, elected Ann Brown president. Twenty-four teachers from Ireland, who spent the summer at Kings College in Wilkes Barre, returned to their homeland with memories of a gala "Going Back Home Party". They were entertained in true Hibernian style at the Knights of Columbus Hall.

Allegheny Co. Board, with Mary Margaret Maurath as president, hosted the county quarterly meeting, which included two very special workshops, preparing the Annual Financial Report and Christmas customs and celebrations of our Irish ancestors.

Division 1 in Harford County has chosen Forward Step, a home for women in crisis, as their main local charity. Forward Step, a 24 bed residential facility, provides shelter, counseling, job training, and other services. Division 1 donates clothing, toiletries, and money on a regular basis.

Things are moving right along for the May Mission Festival plans. The annual tribute to St. Brigid will be on April 26 at Saint Martin's Home. Nominating committees are busy compiling slates of officers for the County and State Conventions.

In anticipation of the next National Convention in Cleveland in 1988, Arlene Callahan, Division 1, Anne Arundel County, has begun preparations for the State Scrapbook for competition.

The Ladies will again be attending St. Patrick's Day Mass at St. Patrick's Church. A fire, which caused extensive damage, interrupted this annual event for three years.

LAOH Jewelry Finally Arrives

Despite our predictions that LAOH jewelry was available, circumstances beyond the control of Chairman Sue Sweeney proved otherwise.

It is reasonably certain and safe to say that by the time you read this article, the supplies will have arrived and Sue will be happy to fill all your orders.

Among the items available will be the new officers medallions ($12.00), bow knot pins, bracelets, charms, necklaces and stick pins, all with the crossed flag and LAOH emblem. Also paper weights, pen sets, and award plaques. These will also carry the same emblem.

Your patience has paid off. You will enjoy the new items.

Sheila M. Clifford

Now that spring is here and St. Patrick's Day activities are behind us, Hibernians are planning for their County and State Conventions. New officers for 1987-1989 will be elected at that time. The officers are designated in the National Constitution and State By-Laws. Elections should be carried out as dictated by our Constitution. Please follow it.

Remember that the Organization will be as strong as its leaders. All officers have duties that must be performed on a timely basis. The State Board Officers are the link between the National Board and the Counties and Divisions; and the County Board Officers link the Divisions with the State Board. If a link is weak, it could cause communication problems.

Many divisions, Counties and State Boards have sent in donations for the "Hibernian Tree Project." If you have not, please do not hesitate to send your donation to the National Vice President, Mary Bradley. If you have family or friends that wish to donate, please mail their donations to Mary.

As you are planning for your State Conventions, remember that a Catholic Action Report should be prepared and submitted to the State and National Chairmen of Catholic Action.

During the past several months, National Chairman of Missions, Dorothy Fowler, has sent you information on the videos and on the prayer cards that are available from the Columban Missions. If you are interested in either of these, please contact the Columban Missions.

A Keepsake

Several of the Passes were resurrected and distributed as keepsakes. "I will number it among my souvenirs," said Frances.

EILEEN REYNOLDS
WALLENHURST

Ohio State Convention will be held in Akron on July 9, 10, 11. Great things will be happening in preparation for Cleveland '88, National Convention. The LAOH will be well represented on the Convention Committee, as Eileen Reynolds Wallenhurst has been named to Co-Chair the National Convention.

Eileen started her "Hibernian Career" as a Junior at the tender age of 10. She has been a member of Division #5, Cuyahoga County, Cleveland, since 1970 and has served her sisters very well, holding offices of County President, 1979; 1981; State Vice President, 1981-1983, and finally to the top as State President from 1983-1985.

She also served as recording secretary to the Cleveland Convention Committee, planning the State Convention in 1979. A delegate to the St. Patrick's Parade Committee in Cleveland for the past seven years, she was elected as the Parade Co-chairman in 1988.

Eileen is a graduate of St. Joseph Academy and Providence Hospital School of Nursing and has been employed as a registered nurse for the past nine years at Benjamin Rose Institute, an agency which serves the elderly in the community. Being the dedicated person that she is, she is also a member of the Greater Cleveland Nurses' Association and Ohio Nurses Association.

By the time this news makes the Digest, Eileen and her husband Jim may be the proud parents of a new Hibernian. The date is April 1987 and hopefully it will be a member of the LAOH who will follow in her mother's footsteps.

LADIES Minnesota News

Mary Douvillen, Minnesota State President and National Chairman of Catholic Action, is recovering from recent surgery and, happily, is improving steadily.

On March 8 a St. Patrick's Day Tea to benefit the Bursar Fund was held at the Corcoran Hall of St. Michael's Church, Stillwater. The benefit was sponsored by the LAOH and was quite successful. The Bursar Fund helps young men studying for the priesthood.

Members of the Minnesota LAOH will attend Mass on March 17 to be celebrated in the Cathedral in St. Paul at 9:30 a.m. A brunch will follow the Liturgy.

retroactive laws (ex post facto) and legislative acts directed against a person (bills of attainder). They have made and ratified, after the fact, a treaty whose only purpose is to present the head of Joe Doherty to Maggie Thatcher on a silver platter.

For too long have we relied upon the independent judiciary to do justice; now the scandal is that after justice is done in court, it is not enforced by the executive. We must petition for redress from both the executive and the legislative branches of government; we must demand Justice for Joe Doherty.

The New Supplemental Extradition Treaty made it obvious to Joe Doherty that the petition for political asylum would never be granted by an administration preoccupied with currying favor in London, therefore he withdrew that petition and informed the court that he would consent to deportation to the Republic of Ireland, where he is a citizen and welcome by law. Doherty's deportation to Dublin was ordered by Immigration Judge Howard I. Cohen of the Executive Office for Immigration Review in New York on September 19, 1986. Joe Doherty is still in jail and the US government continues to dishonor and disgrace itself by persisting in the persecution. Will the new government in Dublin ask for the repatriation of Irish citizen Doherty?

This case is an insult to all Irish people; it is an insult to Justice itself and a dangerous precedent threatening the destruction of civil liberties. All Hibernians must take pen in hand and demand justice for Joe Doherty, TODAY!

We must make the United States once again, as we would surely have Ireland as well, "one nation, under God; indivisible, with Liberty and Justice for all."

Ladies New Jersey News

The LAOH of Passaic County announce their two major fund raising projects for 1987. Saturday evening, April 11, the Ladies will present the Bobby Byrne Show. This concert will be held at St. Anthony's Parish Center in Butler.

On Saturday, October 24 the Ladies will present their fifth Annual Celtic New Year Dance at Holy Spirit Church in Pequannock. Music will be provided by the Willie Lynch Trio.

As the Ladies of Passaic County are committed to these two dates for 1987, they suggest that all Irish organizations in the Bergen, Passaic and Morris Counties join together and form a calendar of events to eliminate conflict among activities.

For information on either of these events, contact Ann Aldrich (201) 838-2397 or Pat Duffy at (201) 838-3258.

LAOH Washington D.C. News

In view of the extreme weather and the worst snow storm that Washington has experienced in fifteen years, St. Brigid's Day Mass was truly a test of faith. The largest crowd, ever, attended the services. Washington is not equipped to handle fourteen inches of snow and it was really a hardship for members to attend — but attend they did.

Following the St. Patrick's Day Mass, celebrated by Archbishop James A. Hickey, members gathered at Arlington Cemetery and placed some shamrocks on the grave of George Washington Parke Custis, a wreath on the grave of President

On the evening of March 17, the AOH and the LAOH co-sponsored a dinner dance at the Kennedy Warren Hotel. Principal speaker for the evening was Jerry O'Leary, while John Barry, owner of the Irish Inn, acted as Shanachie (Irish story teller). It was a Caed Mile Fálte to all.

A Gaelic Mass, sponsored by John F. Kennedy Division AOH and LAOH, was held March 25 at Holy Family Church. It was well attended and climaxed a month-long celebration of all that is Irish.

Hibernian Sports

Mike Heslin

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans! Let's go to Press!

NCAA TOURNEY: By the time you read this the NCAA Tourney will be history. A few comments on the 64 teams picked. Out of 64 teams, there are only 6 Catholic schools. This may be good or it may be bad. Schools such as Georgetown, Notre Dame and St. John's are usually powerhouses in roundball. DePaul is back. Two teams that YR doesn't remember being invited prior to this are Xavier of Ohio and Marist.

This could mean that Catholic schools put more emphasis on the academic side than the sports side. On the other hand, like Catholic High Schools, perhaps Catholic Colleges do not have the money to recruit and indulge in some of the other arenas associated with colleges. YR shall not pontificate on the evils of the existing system. You have read about the abuses to and of the system here and other places. In case you haven't, YR suggests that you acquaint yourself with SMU case.

YR wishes all the teams well. His sentimental favorite, The Fighting Irish! Due to Digger Phelps NY connection. YR's dark horses; Marist and Xavier of Ohio. Longshot; DePaul! YR's Favorite, Georgetown, in memory of one of his classmates, who played for Georgetown long before it became the powerhouse it is today. Everybody else's choice; UNLV!

Have not heard anything about the NIT! YR knows they're out there!

Baseball: Spring training is off and running! Now, with some of the free agents playing for other than the teams where they made their mark, this baseball season should be interesting. Will they do as well with their new teams? Will they fade into the woodwork? It almost sounds like a soap opera! Then again, for the amount of bucks being paid, it is hard for YR to feel real sympathy for some of these players. There are those players who deserve the big bucks. There are those who don't. Predictions? YR doesn't have any! He doesn't think that Boston or the Mets will repeat, however!

Football: The NFL is thinking about staging another pre-season game in London. Last year's was a money-maker in more ways than one! A long-range effect is that it expands the TV market for the NFL to a global market. Simply stated, the larger the market, the more money generated. Do not be misled, professional football is not a sport, it's entertainment and it is Big Business!

Yachting: Now that the 12 meter races from Fremantle, Australia, are over and the Cup is back in the U.S., albeit on the West Coast rather than in NYC, personalities raised their heads during the parade for the crew in the Big Apple. Donald Trump, the real estate tycoon, who has his name on many buildings and projects in and around Manhattan, offered to pay half the cost of a ticker-tape parade. Mayor Koch finessed him into picking up the tab for the whole thing. From there, it was all down hill. Trump did not wish Hiz Honor on the same float that he and D. Connor, the Captain, were on. Kock supposedly stated that the Capt. and he would share a float sans Trump. YR didn't see the parade so he really doesn't know who, if anyone, won this battle! As YR doesn't have the bucks to join one of the racing syndicates, he'll keep his boats and rubber ducky in the bath tub!

Lacrosse: Mickey Giblin of Div. 1, Broome County, NYS, has two sons involved in this hard-hitting, fast-paced sport. YR and Mickey were supposed to get together for an article. Due to YR's involvement with the local St. Patrick's Day Parade and all the associated functions, they haven't got together! YR promises that his next column will contain a piece on Lacrosse!

Odde-N-Ends: Who won the Indiana State High School Tourney? YR listened to part of a game on WOWO one night! For those of you readers who live in caves, Indiana is a hotbed of basketball. Basketball is a big sport throughout the Midwest. Locally, congrats to King Rice of the Binghamton Patriots. This HS senior has made his mark not only locally, not only in the conference in which Binghamton High School plays; not only in NYS, but now he has been cited nationally. There are rumors that the McDonald's chain will name him to their High School All American Team and also Gatorade will name him to something. Do we have any other players, male or female, who should be recognized? Send the facts, YR will put them in his column.

YR would like to mention an old friend, Tom McCarthy, who is now a Fire Medic in Chicago who has just published a book about the Chicago Fire Dept., We Got A Hit! For those Hibernians in Chicago, if you know Tom, say hello! If you don't, meet him. He's a really fascinating guy!

That's it for this time! Until the next time on the sidelines, send those bonnets to PO Box 156 ESS, Binghamton, NY 13904.

guests from Ireland would have received landing cards. In Canada we were able to hear from the minority voices of Sinn Fein and the Workers Party. The Canadian press and the rest of the Canadian media published their interviews quite objectively. Many people unfamiliar with the issues were enlightened and the concept of giving a hearing to all shades of thinking meant that the Irish American community had, somewhat belatedly, come of age.

But with all respect to our Detroit chapter if we ever choose Canada again, and I hope we do, my vote goes to Quebec, the heartland of French Canada. Even though Ontario and Quebec are two provinces in the same Federal Government I doubt if either the Province or the City of Quebec would have tolerated even the appearance of a slight to a group dedicated to the end of British presence in Irish soil. But even if that were not the issue French Canadians (and the Irish Canadians being among them) have a sense of good manners which would not permit something like that to happen.

It would not matter whether our visit there was in early February during the Winter Festival which outpoints the New Orleans Mardi Gras in display if not in style. The Quebec bash compares with our recent national extravaganza commemorating the birthday of the Statue of Liberty which did much to remind us of what our nation owes to France for the invaluable aid given to General Washington.

But Quebec's history and the Irish struggle for survival are historically and permanently entwined. In reading the various books of the Great Hunger of 1847-1849 I had seen some passing reference to tragic events that took place in Canada. Frank Durkan, in a visit to Maine two years ago, had sought to get information about it but he was less than successful. Then a book on the subject was published two years ago giving the details of the French Canadian connection with the Irish Holocaust. Pat and I were in Quebec on the day the book was to be launched and we met the author, Marianna O'Gallagher, a third generation Canadian of Donegal extraction. She had gone back over the records and traced the descendants of many of the survivors of those who were literally cast ashore in Canada. For anyone who had read the other books on the Famine, which include Liam O'Flaherty's Famine, Cecil Woodham Smith's The Great Hunger or more recently, Thomas Gallagher's Paddy's Lament, the O'Gallagher book Grosse Ile is required reading.

Grosse Ile is an island located in the St. Lawrence River several miles up river from Quebec. It was an obvious place for the Canadian Government to set up a quarantine similar to Ellis Island. Emigrants from Europe through the last century came by the thousands and many carried with them the communicable diseases rampant in Europe at that time. In 1847 the lumber merchants of Europe and Canada imported to Europe the kind of timber it could no longer supply. The ships were returning empty. Then the rush of hungry immigrants from Ireland in 1847 gave these entrepreneurs a golden opportunity. They turned their vessels into illegally, cramped passenger ships and indiscriminately housed the sick and the dying on board at so much a head. A goodly percentage of the passengers were buried at sea. The rest came to the facilities in Grosse Ile which were totally incapable of accommodating so large an influx. French and other Canadians working in the facility did the best they could. The refugees died so fast they had no time to bury them. Over 8,000 were buried in a common grave. Many Canadians tending to them also lost their lives in the charitable effort.

Canadians discontinued the use of Grosse Ile as a landing place for immigrants in the early part of this century and it became a testing place for animals being brought in from Europe. It was and still is operated by the Department of Agriculture and in this century little attention was paid to Grosse Ile except among Irish Canadians particularly those and their descendants in French Canada. To their credit be it said the A.O.H. in 1904 placed a 50 foot Celtic cross on the island to the memory of the victims and to mark the events of Irish-England history which was responsible for the imposed hunger in a country which at that very time had ample foodstuff to feed all the people.

The Canadian Government has lately decided to turn over Grosse Ile to the Parks Department. When the transfer is completed regular excursions will be scheduled to this historic spot. But in the meantime, Marianna O'Gallagher has arranged for groups to go there by private boat all through the summer. It is a full day's outing with lunch provided on the island at a very reasonable cost. For those interested, Marianna O'Gallagher may be reached at 860 Tremoy #204, STE FOY (Quebec) G1X 3Z2, Canada.

In September last Frank and Monica Durkan joined us in the excursion into history we had known so little about. We were met by many Irish Canadians, all bilingual, and some had been the children and grandchildren of Famine survivors and others had come from the Irish Societies in Montreal and Toronto. We were treated with great warmth and courtesy. We were glad to see that the side of the common grave was well kept as was the Celtic cross which was placed on the highest point of the island and dominates the St. Lawrence. We left Marianna and her Irish Canadian friends, who by this time were also our friends, with fond memories.

Maybe it's not possible for the Hibernians or the Irish American Unity Conference to make that excursion, but the St. Lawrence in August and Vermont are probably the most beautiful places in the world (except for Bohola of course). On the basis of our experience I could guarantee them a warm and friendly reception by French Canada and Irish Canadian kinsmen, and if they got there in the winter I know that Bonhome (good man), a frozen fat little fellow and the kind of Santa Claus of Quebec, will greet each of them personally. Canada is entitled to another chance.

AOH Origins in the U.S.A.

It is a proud fact that our venerable Order has celebrated 150 years of continuous existence in America in 1986, and the date May 4 the agreed upon anniversary of the Order's establishment in America. However, few Brother and Sister Hibernians are familiar with the origins of the Order in the homeland, and its founding here in the United States and Canada. Thanks to Bro. John T. Ridge, past president, and his excellent source of valuable Hibernian information, Erin's Sons in America: The Ancient Order of Hibernians, we can better understand what Hibernianism's roots are.

Because of the cruel oppression of the Irish people by the British, and their attempted crushing of the Roman Catholic faith in Ireland, particularly during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the Catholic Church was under seige by the forces of Protestantism, our priesthood brutally tortured and martyred, our language and dress banned from use, and all the traditions of the Irish, from games to Catholic devotions, forbidden by the Crown. Churches, chapels, convents, and monasteries were sacked and burned. Our clergy were forced underground, our people placed under the heel of the tyrant.

In a period of such persecution of our race and our creed, the origins of The Ancient Order of Hibernians can be traced. To protect the priest and to guard the celebration of the Mass, often held in the hills, ravines, and among the hedgerows, numerous secret societies were organized, with names still remembered with pride. The Defenders, often listed as the first Hibernian society (History of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and Ladies' Auxiliary, John O'Dea, 1923), the "Terry-Alts," the "White-Boys," the "Rapparees," the "St. Patrick's Boys," and the "Ribbonmen," all served as sentinels for protecting the illegal celebration of the Mass. The groups also fought to avenge the injustices of the Protestant landlord system. The Protestant landowners held almost all of Ireland, frequently owning estates the size of baronies, and made hundreds of thousands of Irish homeless in their insatiable lust for more land. Secret societies, oath-bound to each other, sought to right the many wrongs by nocturnal raids on the homes and property of the landlords, in order to punish these cruel men for their heartless treatment of the Irish peasantry.

These societies were in existence throughout Ireland, operating on a parochial level in total secrecy, traced back as far as 1585. They used secret grips, or handshakes, passwords, recognition signs, and as in the case of the Ribbonmen, a badge as an emblem (two pieces of ribbon, green and red, tied together). By the use of these, they ensured their safety, and the continued success of their organizations.

Eventually, many of these societies, not categorized as Ribbonmen, adopted a public name, such as the "St. Patrick's Boys," the "Sons of the Shamrock," the "St. Patrick's Mutual Benefit Society," and so forth, and branches of these societies were established in the Irish communities of England and Scotland by the early 19th century. They began to operate as fraternal societies, providing sick and death benefits for their members, as was a popular activity in the British Isles at that time. British benefit societies, such as the Ancient Order of Foresters, the Ancient Order of Druids, the Order of Odd-Fellows, the Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, and a host of other organizations, were founded in the 1700s, and also provided mutual aid for their members. Numerous Irish societies began to adopt similar titles, eventually choosing Ancient Order of Hibernians from the literary Latin name for Erin, "Hibernia," to emphasize their antiquity, as well as their patriotic love of their homeland.

Branches of the Ancient Order of Hibernians could be found in Ireland, Britain, and Scotland by the early 1800s, coordinated by its governing body, the Board of Erin. As was the tradition of secret societies of this period, its members could be recognized by grips and signs, and secret passwords, taught to the Brothers in the event of traveling to other jurisdictions. Often a warrant or certificate of membership was issued to members of these organizations (George Washington carried with pride his warrant of membership in the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick throughout the American War of Independence), eventually evolving into today's "Traveling Card."

Thanks to the immigration of the Irish to America during this same epoch, Hibernians were to be found in New York City. Little is known, sad to say, of those pioneers of Hibernianism, the founding fathers of America's branch of our Order, but we do know that they communicated with the Board of Erin, applying for a charter or dispensation to organize a Division, or lodge, in America. In the basement of St. James R.C. Church, on James Street in New York City, a group of anxious Hibernians warmly greeted a visiting Brother who bore a charter sent by the Board of Erin. It read:

"From the Brethren in Ireland and Great Britain to the Brethren in New York, Brothers, Greeting:

Be it known to you and all it may concern that we send to our few brothers in New York full instructions with our authority to establish branches of our Society in America: the qualifications must be as follows: First: "All members must be Roman Catholics and of Irish descent and of good moral character, and none of your members shall join any secret societies contrary to the laws of the Catholic Church and at all times and at all places your motto shall be 'Friendship, Unity and True Christian Charity.'"

"You must love without dissimulation, hate evil, cleaving to good, love one another with brotherly love, without preventing one another; let the love of brotherhood abide in you and forget not hospitality to your immigrant brother that may land on your shores, and we advise you, above all things, have natural Charity among yourselves."

The charter was probably read aloud by its recipients, perhaps even with solemn silence from the listening Brothers. It went on for three more sections regarding instructions on the establishment of the Order, protection and aid for all Irish women, including those not of the Roman Catholic faith, and for the fidelity of the new branch to the Church. It concluded with:

"Hoping that the bearer and this copy will land safe, and that you treat him right, we remain your brothers in the true bonds of Friendship, this fourth day of May, A.D.,

Namesake Division Recalls Major Quinlan's Battle Bravery

When Division #3, Ancient Order of Hibernians was organized in the town of Warwick, Orange County, New York in 1984, they did not have far to look for a name for the division. They chose as their name, The Col. James Quinlan Division. The wife of George Quinn, the division's financial secretary, is the great-granddaughter of the Colonel. Quinlan, Commander of the 88th New York Regiment, was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor during the Civil War.

Col. Quinlan was born September 13, 1833 at Clonmel, Tipperary. He emigrated to New York City in 1851. He enrolled at Cooper Union College and graduated with a degree in Engineering in 1856. As a boy in Ireland he had met Thomas Francis Meagher. When Meagher arrived in NYC in 1853, after he escaped from "Van Diemens Land", they renewed their friendship. James Quinlan enlisted in the 69th Regiment in 1853. Upon graduating from Cooper Union, he obtained a commission and was made Co. Commander of the engineering company.

In 1860, when the Prince of Wales visited NY, Col. Corcoran, the Regimental Commander of the 69th Regiment, was ordered to parade the regiment in the Prince's honor. As a member of The Royal Irish Constabulary in the 1840s, Corcoran had seen the horrors of famine. He informed the Governor that almost all his officers and men were Irish-born and under no circumstances would they parade to honor any member of the royal family. In this he had the enthusiastic support of Captain Thomas Francis Meagher and Captain James Quinlan.

Col. Corcoran was about to be court-martialed for disobeying an order. However, before the court-martial, the Civil War broke out and the Regiment was ordered to Virginia. They were there to fight the first Battle at Bull Run (1861).

While the Regiment was engaged in fighting with the rear-guard, Col. Corcoran was captured. Corcoran was one of five colonels promoted to Brigadier General by President Lincoln. One of the others to be promoted was Col. William T. Sherman, who became famous for his campaign in the West.

Because of the 69th Regiment's gallant conduct on the battlefield, it was decided to form an Irish Brigade within the 69th, and the 88th Regiment of NY, and an Irish Regiment from Massachusetts. The command of the Brigade was given to Captain Thomas Francis Meagher, who was promoted to Brigadier General. Captain James Quinlan was transferred to the 88th and promoted to Major.

The following excerpt "Most Brave and Intrepid on the Field" is the story of the action at Savage Station for which Major Quinlan won the Congressional Medal of Honor. At the end of the war, he was promoted to full Colonel and given the command of the Regiment.

MOST BRAVE AND INTREPID ON THE FIELD

"On the morning after the battle of Gaines Mills, Va., the colonel and lieutenant-colonel of my regiment, the Eighty-eighth New York (Meagher's Irish Brigade), of which I was major, reported sick and went to the rear, the command devolving on me.

"The afternoon of that day we took up our march for our new base, which, we were informed, would be Harrison's Landing, Va. Harassed all the way by the enemy, fighting each day and marching at night, Sunday morning, June 29, we arrived at a place called Savage Station, Va., and were ordered to halt and make ourselves as comfortable as possible. Early that day the enemy appeared in force at Tyler's and Nelson's farms. My regiment and the Twenty-ninth Massachusetts, under Colonel Pierce, were ordered into action at both places. The fighting was pretty severe, but the enemy were repulsed, and we were ordered back to our original position.

"The army under General McClellan was crossing the White Oak Swamp on its retreat. Our turn came to move, as the corps of General E.V. Sumner, to which we were attached, had the rear of the whole army. As we neared White Oak Swamp a Confederate Battery of six guns, supported by a large column of infantry under Generals Magruder and Huger, opened a terrific fire, which caused Sumner's Corps to halt. General W.W. Burns, U.S.A., with his brigade, was sent to silence the Battery, and being unsuccessful called for re-enforcements. Several regiments were sent to his assistance, notably, the First Minnesota, under the gallant Sully, but still the fire of the battery kept up. General Sumner sent for the Eighty-eighth Regiment, and when I reported to him he said: 'Quinlan, what formation have you?' I answered: 'Double on the center.' 'Good,' he said, 'I know your regiment well, and they can deploy at the double-quick.' He ordered me to report to General Burns, who ordered me forward at double-quick to charge the battery. As we started, the enemy's guns ceased firing, and when we got within the range that suited them, their six guns were discharged simultaneously. But the Eighty-eighth did not falter. They pushed on and silenced the battery."

In addition to Major Quinlan's account of the charge, the official statement of one of his superior officers is as follows:
"The conduct of Major Quinlan on that occasion was that of a self-sacrificing soldier. He dashed into the very face of death, so far as he could know, thereby relieving the troops massed in a cul de sac from the battery's devastating fire, and probably discouraging the enemy for the day, for the fighting was not renewed after the silencing of their guns until past nightfall. Major Quinlan deserves the badge of gallantry to be awarded to the most brave and intrepid on the field."

New York State Board Scholarship Exam in June

The New York State Board of the AOH is happy to announce that the Austin V. Carew Scholarship examination will be held on Saturday, June 27, 1987 at various locations throughout the state.

Eligibility Requirements

1. Applicants must be students who will be graduating from high school in June 1987, and who are either members or the son or daughter of a member in good standing of a New York State Men's Division of the AOH or if the father is deceased, was a member in good standing at the time of his death.

2. An official application must be filed and postmarked no later than May 31, 1987.

3. Applicants must have taken the Scholastic Aptitude Test and have had an official school copy of the SAT math and verbal scores submitted no later than the day of the examination.

4. Participate in the competitive examination on Irish and Irish-American history, culture and geography.

Scholarship

The winner will receive $500.00 for the first year of attendance at a university, college, school of nursing or seminary approved by the Scholarship Committee and $500.00 for each of the second, third and fourth years when he or she submits a transcript of the previous year's grades to verify the maintenance of a satisfactory academic standard.

Computation of Scores

The scholarship examination and the candidate's highest SAT scores will each be weighed 50% in determining the winner.

Subject Matter

The scholarship exam will be based on information about Irish and Irish-American history and Ireland's geography and culture. It is expected that each candidate read at least one book on the development of the Irish nation from 1750 to the present and be familiar with its folk songs, where much of Ireland's culture is preserved. Candidates should familiarize themselves with Ireland's current events by reading recent issues of the National Hibernian Digest and other Irish-American newspapers.

If your son or daughter is eligible, please have them complete the application and mail it by May 31, 1987.

Applicants who will be graduating on June 27th or have an equally legitimate conflict with the date should notify the Scholarship Chairman in order to make proper arrangements to prevent exclusion from this opportunity. If there are any additional questions, contact the chairman at (718) 317-1081. Specific bibliographies have not been developed with a view toward exam preparation. Students are encouraged to frequent Irish bookstores and public libraries to secure materials for their preparation.

Since the Scholarship Chairman expects that a member of his family will be an applicant this year, he has requested the State President to appoint an Examination Chairman. President Irwin has appointed Assistant State Secretary Richard M. Rogers as Examination Chairman of the Scholarship Committee.

Brother Rogers' responsibilities will include developing, reproducing, distributing, collecting and grading the examinations and determining the 1987 recipient of the Austin V. Carew Scholarship. At his own request, Brother O'Connor will limit his role to administrative functions this year.

American West Britons

As I have moved about in the U.S., I often have run across blinkered and intellectual species of Irish that evince an interest in Irish "culture" but repudiate the politics of Irish nationalism. No doubt this same sort of pseudo-Irish exists in many American communities.

This type of Irish will promote and discuss Irish music, song, dance, ancient history, accomplishments — everything but the national political aspirations of the Irish people and the appalling conditions that repress them. Brooch the subject of the nationalist struggle and they will tell you that they are non-political and the subject is not welcome. They wear this political cloak as if it were a badge of liberalism and, under that shelter, find no difficulty tolerating anti-Irish stances in the areas and activities they profess to support. They become examples of the "faith an' begorra" caricatures. Devoid of the spirit of Irish national pride; blinded by their own superficiality; and with nothing to guide them individually or collectively, they feel impelled to fill the roles that have been created for them by others. Thus they often perpetuate the stereotype of the drunken and irresponsible Irish. Some even consider that role-playing as the avenue to acceptance in an Anglo-American society that views them only as clowns.

Just as one cannot select just a few characteristics of an individual and conclude that is the whole personality, so it is with a people and their heritage. The language, mores, values, historical experiences, and the social and political relationships are all elements of the same tapestry of development that have made that nation unique — a people distinct from others. Ignore one or more of those elements and the people to whom they apply gradually diffuse into the greater indistinguishable mass of humanity. By thus "chipping away" at those characteristics that give a nation identity, a people is absorbed and their nationhood extinguished.

A people's music, song and story evolve from their historical and political experiences, interacting with each other to provide the matrix of the national heritage.

During its eight centuries of suffering, Ireland may not have produced world-recognized classics in music. Nevertheless, as with all peoples, in the song and story of the ordinary Irish there is imaged the remembrance of a golden age; the suffering that accompanied the invaders' pollution of the land; the long struggle for self-determination as a nation; and the tributes to heroes who gave their lives for the national ideal. One wonders — if the Irish were to discard the traditional music and story that have political implications, just what would be left?

Of course, these American West Britons fool no one. We know their "non-political" stance is determined by self-interest and is intended — like their stereotyped role playing — to assure their acceptance in an Anglophile society. When the freedom and unity of Ireland is achieved (as it surely will be) and the fact is acknowledged by the world, those same American West Britons will be there to claim credit for an accomplishment they not only failed to support but that they actually impeded. Meanwhile, for the amusement of the Anglo, they perform their "dancé macabre" on the graves of Irish patriots.

Irish-Americans

Toward the end of the war an Irish color bearer, Mike Scannel of the 19th Massachusetts, got ahead of his battle line at Petersburg and was captured by a Confederate officer. "Hand over those colors, Yankee," he said, pointing a pistol at Mike and reaching for the flag. "Yankee is it, now," said Mike in slow wonder. "Faith, I've been twenty years in this country and nobody ever paid me the compliment before." And he was forced to hand over the flag. That was it. The Irish had gone into the Civil War the helots of the nation — alien, Catholic, clannish, unlettered, and poor. And now they were Americans: Yankees. A hundred and forty thousand of them had picked up arms and fought for their new country and their country had now adopted them. They had fought to preserve the Union and they now had become part of that Union (McCarthy: 1968).

The above anecdote describes but one of the ways that many of our ancestors became Americans. Some of them quickly merged into American society; others held on to their Irish identity for generation after generation down to the present day.

Many scholars see the Irish-Americans as highly assimilated in American life so that many of them are "Irish" only on St. Patrick's Day. And even those who are more aware and proud of their heritage do not make an impact on American life. We used to be considered "outsiders," but now are "insiders".

From the perspective of maintaining our Irish heritage and defending and promoting the Catholic Church — the primary goals of the AOH — we are losing our clout. The slight drop in membership is only a sign of the future; the liberalization and apathy of members' Catholicism is a shadow of the "Faith of our Fathers."

What we need to pray for and work for during this St. Patrick's season and every season, is zeal. We need to stir up our enthusiasm for our Irish heritage and for spreading the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

Read and learn about your past. Read and learn about what is happening in Ireland today. The Irish-Americans are the living hope for freedom in Ireland. Become concerned that the freedom won for us in preserving the Union of the United States of America might also be the possession of the Irish people in the united Ireland.

Promote Hibernianism. Promote the Gospel of Christ. Invite your Irish Catholic relatives and friends to join the AOH. Invite your non-Catholic friends and neighbors to attend Church with you. When converts are asked why they did not join the church sooner, the most common answer is — No one ever asked me to join!

Don't be a no-one; be a proud Irish Catholic on March 17th and everyday.

May St. Patrick and all the Irish saints pray to the Lord for you today and always.

which pays for the running of the building, while each production must pay for itself. As a result of the grant, in 1971 the Gate was completely restored by the architect Michael Scott, giving it a beautiful eighteenth century European-style auditorium and proscenium stage.

For their distinguished contribution to theatre in Ireland, Edwards and MacLiammoir were awarded honorary doctorates by the National University of Ireland and they were made members of the Legion d'Honneur by the French government and Freeman of the City Dublin.

Longford for his part was so overshadowed by the dynamism of Edwards and MacLiammoir that his importance in the history of the Gate is often overlooked, although as long as the building continues as a theatre it stands as a testimony to his vision as much as to theirs.

Since the beginning of 1984 and the appointment of a new management under the direction of Michael Colgan, the Gate's reputation has spread as an actors' theatre, a theatre for young people and especially as an international theatre. It has won the loyalty of many thousands of theatre-goers, the acclaim of the international press and invitations to tour from all over the world. It received ten nominations — twice the number of its nearest rival — for the Harvey's Irish Theatre Awards of 1985.

The Gate is still a champion of cultural exchange and has played host to many important overseas theatre companies in recent years, including Wrocław Contemporary Theatre from Poland, Collettivo di Parma from Italy and Grips Theatre from Berlin. In the next three years, there are plans for major co-productions and exchanges between the Gate and theatres in Paris, Parma and Pittsburgh. There are also plans for the establishment of a school of stagecraft and for extensive building work, including restoration of the oval room at the apex of the building and of the exquisite pillar room beneath the theatre. Never without its ghosts, the Gate is likely to stir up all its dormant spirits in the years ahead.

'Art' Has Their Irish Up

By RICK GREEN

Staff Writer

Savannah Morning News

The Irish long have been thought of as loving their beer and liquor and the stereotype has some local Irishmen crying foul.

In recent years, the caricature of drunken Irishmen celebrating St. Patrick's Day by imbibing has become widespread, especially on T-shirts.

And "art" on those popular pieces of apparel has broadened in recent years to include sexually suggestive pictures and a few that are more than suggestions.

The local chapter of the Ancient Order of Hibernians has asked merchants not to sell St. Patrick's Day shirts, buttons and other articles that show leprechauns or Irishmen drinking alcoholic beverages or carry lewd or sexually explicit messages.

The same sentiment was expressed by Monsignor Daniel Bourke, a native of Ireland, when he spoke Sunday to members of the St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee.

For years, it was common to see Irish participants in the annual March 17 parade in Savannah carrying cups with mixed drinks or cans of beer. The sponsoring parade committee finally forbade the practice and occasionally has ordered drinking participants out of the parade.

"We are asking everyone to please refrain from purchasing or selling any St. Patrick's Day items that might be construed as offensive or derogatory to those of Irish descent," Graham Harold, president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, said.

"For too long has our society allowed this profitable style of degradation," he added. "Surely, this ancient race of people who have given to the world so much of themselves deserves a better commercialized image than that of drunken leprechauns, animals and scenes of obscenity," he said.

Bourke, who spoke during a reception for R. McDonald Laird, grand marshal of the 1987 St. Patrick's Day Parade, urged the 500 people at the gathering not to buy degrading items.

He noted that St. Patrick's Day is a holy day in Ireland, where families attend church to celebrate the feast day of the country's patron saint.

"No true Irishman would tolerate these things," the monsignor said. "They would not be allowed in Ireland."

Jerry Hogan, general chairman of the St. Patrick's Day Parade committee, said the items he finds most offensive are buttons that connect sexual promiscuity to the Irish.

He said he was on River Street the night before the parade last year and noticed the buttons. "I didn't like it too much. It upset me a little," he said.

Questions and Answers

By Professor Robert T. Meyer, Catholic University

Note: Please forward questions to Professor Robert T. Meyer, Chair of Celtic Studies, Catholic University, Washington, D.C. 20064.

Q. Whenever I read your fascinating column, I wonder if the Catholic University of America has a historical relationship with the National Hibernian Organization, which is 150 years old this year. The University begins celebrating its own Centennial in April. Could you please answer this question for me? Eithalia Walsh, Washington, D.C.

A. You have asked this question at a most opportune time. There is no connection with the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the founding of the Catholic University of America in 1887. But the idea of an endowed Chair of Celtic Studies came close upon the founding of the University in this wise: The idea of a Chair of Celtic first originated with a Congressman from Michigan, Thomas Addis Emmet Woodcock of Bay City. On September 9, 1889 he wrote a letter to Cardinal Gibbons, who was Archbishop of Baltimore and Chancellor of the University. He asked whether the Ancient Order of Hibernians might be permitted to endow such a Chair at the University. As the prompt reply was in the affirmative, the matter was brought up at the national convention held at Hartford the following year. At a later meeting in New Orleans in 1892 it was resolved to collect by assessment of the members the sum of fifty thousand dollars required by the Trustees of the University for the endowment of a chair. However, the depression of 1893 threw many people out of work and it was impossible for some to pay seventy-five cents levied on each member.

Luckily, Monsignor Thomas A. Shahan of the University faculty attended the meeting in Omaha in 1894 and he gave a stirring address, telling the people not to neglect their own ancient language, which was being studied by foreigners at the universities of Oxford, Edinburgh, Leipzig, Paris, and Göttingen. Monsignor Shahan was later Rector of the University and became a bishop and is buried in the crypt of the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception on the campus of the Catholic University of America. He had studied at the University of Berlin and also in Paris before joining the faculty and was much interested in higher scholarship. His address had the desired effect: the money was collected and formally presented to the University on October 21, 1896.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians recommended the appointment of the Rev. Richard Henebry, a native Irish speaker, who had taught Irish at Maynooth Seminary. He accepted the offer and was willing to begin his duties at once. However the Board of Trustees thought it advisable that he possess a university degree before coming to Washington. Accordingly he was sent to Germany to study Celtic Philology first at Freiburg in Breisgau with Prof. Rudolf Thurneysen and later at Grieswald with Prof. Heinrich Zimmer, where he took his degree with a dissertation on the Desi-Irish which was his own Munster dialect. He came to the University in October 1898 under a three-year term as Associate Professor of Celtic. After two years he fell ill and went to Colorado to recuperate. He recovered but left the United States in 1901 and later became Professor of Celtic at University College, Cork, and he died in 1916.

One of Father Henebry's students in his brief stay at the University was Dr. Joseph Dunn, who held a degree in Romance Languages from Yale University in 1898. He was teaching Latin at the time that he audited Father Henebry's courses in Modern Irish. He was made Fellow in Celtic and went on the Harvard, later to Freiburg and spent the 1903-04 year at the University of Rennes in Brittany. He later edited a medieval Breton miracle play about St. Patrick with a French translation. He returned to Washington in the fall of 1904 and became a Full Professor in 1914.

His English translation of the great Irish epic Tain Be Cuailnge appeared at London in 1914 and is today a much prized rarity. He combined the teaching of Celtic with instruction in Old French and Provençal. He retired from the University in 1931, going back to New Haven to live with an older sister. He also occasionally read Irish with a small group of graduate students at Yale University and he died in 1951.

One of his students was the Rev. James A. Geary, who had studied Theology at Paris and Louvain, was ordained for the Springfield, Mass. diocese in 1907 and then did parish work in Maine close to the Canadian border. After five years he asked for permission to go to work with Prof. Dunn and he taught Philology and Irish as well as American Indian languages until his retirement in 1953. At that time the present incumbent, Professor Robert T. Meyer, was appointed to the endowed Chair of Celtic by the Most Rev. Bryan J. McEntegart, then Rector of the University. Dr. Meyer has now taught Celtic and Comparative Philology at the Catholic University for over 40 years.

N.B. If you wish an immediate reply to your query please send a stamped self-addressed envelope and a check for $10.00 made payable to Prof. Robert T. Meyer, Box 255, Division of Celtic Studies, The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C. 20064.

Coogan, national vice-president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, is chairman of the Committee of Irish Organizations in Ohio which is working for the passage of the MacBride Principles legislation about to be introduced in the Ohio legislature by State Representative Robert E. Hagan, of Madison.

During a meeting of the committee on Saturday, May 9, attention was focused on getting as many representatives as possible to co-sponsor the bill, and planning petitions to be signed by citizens declaring their support of the MacBride Principles.

Serving on the committee with Coogan are Kevin Reynolds, AOH state president, Cleveland; John J. O'Brien, Columbus; Dave Hartigan, president of the Shamrock Club.

Connecticut Passes MacBride Bill

Dodd Pledges Hearings On Northern Ireland

By FRANK McEVROY

FFAI Chairman

JFK Division, Bridgeport

BRIDGEPORT, CONN. — U.S. Sen. Christopher J. Dodd, in a vigorous speech at the Annual Communion Breakfast of the John F. Kennedy Division of the Ancient Order of Hibernians on March 15, pledged that later this year as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee he will force hearings on the conflict in Northern Ireland.

After Mass at St. Charles Borromeo Church, 450 men welcomed the guest speaker at Journey's Inn. The senator vowed: "If we can hold hearings on every other problem known to mankind in many nations — and God knows, we do — with few problems having much bearing on what is going on in your lives, certainly we can examine and explore what is happening in Northern Ireland. It is fair, fitting and proper."

He called Irish Republican Army member Joseph Doherty, jailed in New York City "Tombs" prison on charges of being an illegal alien, a political prisoner. Doherty has been imprisoned for four years while fighting extradition to Britain. He escaped from Crumlin Road jail in Belfast where he was held in connection with the death of a British soldier in a gunfight. He faces extradition to the United Kingdom under a new treaty ratified last June that eliminated the political exemption clause in the previous treaty.

"What are we talking about is not defined by six counties (of northeast Ireland)," Dodd said. "It's a due process issue. The treaty was rewritten exclusively to allow the U.K. to recapture Joe Doherty. We changed the American justice system to judge one man at the behest of the British government. It may be good politics, but it is not fair."

"The United States was prepared to extradite Doherty to the Republic of Ireland — where he also would be jailed — which was willing to accept him until the U.K. lobbied the U.S. State Department."

"This is the first time in our history we've made a treaty retroactive and it has been done to get one person. So Doherty, already four years in jail without bail, will be arrested again under a treaty which did not exist when he was originally arrested."

The senator pointed out that Doherty has been held for four years "as an illegal alien and there are 12 million of them in this country."

Dodd likened Doherty's case to that of slain Philippine opposition leader Benigno Aquino. "If we had allowed Aquino to be extradited to (former) President Ferdinand Marcos, there would have been even more turmoil in that nation."

"The United States has long been a harbor for political refugees of all types. For 200 years this nation has been a safe haven for people who were trying to change their government. Some are now heads of state in their own country. People have the right to overthrow their government."

"Often the birth of a nation is a violent event; seldom is it accomplished with a document. Political violence is not terrorism when you're fighting military targets while trying to change the system. Whether you agree with Joe Doherty or not, this is an issue all humans can embrace. It's a human rights issue."

"We ought to be bright enough and smart enough to sort out the difference between terrorism and an act of political violence. We, in the United States, should understand that better than others. This was the first nation to be born in violence. But, for the first time in 200 years,

MacBride Principles John Hume's Dark Side

In the past the select St. Patrick's Day media appearances of Northern Ireland's John Hume (SDLP) seemed harmless, self-indulgent but largely ignored. This year, however, Hume's homilies and virtuous vilification of Americans revealed a dark and dangerous dimension to his character. His campaign against the MacBride Fair Employment Principles threatens the very lives and future of many of his fellow citizens and must be challenged.

Irish-Americans informed on the conflict in Ireland have always been dubious of Hume's naivete and pious platitudes but his performance before the Boston Globe can only serve to confirm and deepen those doubts. Last November The Economist may have captured the essence of this doubt when it noted "... unlike almost every other Ulster political leader Mr. Hume could be a British

CUIMNEACHAN/ REMEMBRANCE THE FAMINE

That Ireland had known famine from time to time over centuries of English rule is testified to by (among others) the eyewitness account of the English poet Spencer. Yet the magnitude of The Great Famine, and particularly of its most intense period of 1846-47, was the watershed of modern Irish history — a period the psychological impact of which for the Irish is analogous to the significance of the Nazi-period for the Jews. Conor Cruise O'Brien (a credible historian, however Anglophile his politics) wrote of The Great Famine, that it shattered the old Gaelic nation and that half of us learned to speak English whilst the other half learned American.

A quarter of a century ago Mrs. Cecil Woodham-Smith raised the consciousness of the English-speaking world to some of the realities of The Great Famine in her best-selling book The Great Hunger. She reached a far wider audience than did John Mitchell a century before in his Apology for the British Government in Ireland, but she took a middle of the road approach which ignored Mitchell's indictment that the British government deliberately encouraged and aggravated the Famine in Ireland for the purpose of thinning the population. There have been other studies of The Great Famine, scholarly tomes laden with footnotes, but lacking a wide readership appeal. Most treatments of The Great Famine seem to regard it as a uni-dimensional "Irish" problem of the past, or perhaps as a uniquely Anglo-Irish problem in the history of economic systems.

Just as the Nazi atrocities against the Jews and Stalinist crimes against humanity generally are of such a magnitude that it is difficult to conceive of such abominations being perpetrated by other human beings, so too does serious research into The Great Famine in Ireland reveal an intensity of human suffering far beyond anything which the experience of twentieth century America might even begin to suggest possible.

In part because of a natural disaster and in part because of the policies of an alien government which had seized power over us, the sad fact of the matter was that, for fully half of the population of Ireland, things had gotten so hopelessly bad that it was time, it was long past time, to get out of Ireland. But the British Empire had its fingers everywhere — in every continent and on most of the stepping-stone islands in between. But there was one exception, one enormous exception: the United States of America.

The Great Famine in Ireland killed some two millions of our people, not with the swiftness of the English hangman's noose but with the tortuously slow lingering death of starvation and disease. More than two million more were forced out of necessity to overcome their traditional reverence for Mother Ireland and emigrate from what for many was the home of their family for millennia. The greatest numbers braved the rigors of the ocean voyage and came to America. It was not the history of one country that was altered, but of three: Ireland, England and the United States. In 1982 Thomas Gallagher's Paddy's Lament, Ireland 1846-1847 was published by Harcourt, Brace, Jovanovich. It is a history of the worst part of the great national tragedy, painstakingly researched, yet it is written from the perspective of the small farmer and reads like a novel. It is a poignant and compelling story, a literary masterpiece, yet devastatingly accurate. One cannot read Paddy's Lament without the mere reading of the story evoking the strongest of emotions. There are some forty-two millions of the American population who claim Irish blood or descent, one-quarter of whom claim to be completely Irish; the greater part of Irish America are the descendants of Famine emigrants. Gallagher tells their story in Paddy's Lament from their situation in Ireland through the painful decision to leave home and family; he gives the Atlantic crossing and the Irish-American experience an equally in-depth treatment, for it is all part and parcel of the same story.

Paddy's Lament has just been issued in quality paperback as Harvest/HJB book, retailing for $7.95. It should be required reading for all Irish America as well as for all students of Ireland and of Anglo-Irish history. Gallagher's text, although written in an easy, most readable style, exposes the collective unconscious of the race and explains much of the enduring psychological impact of The Great Famine, not only upon the Irish population at home, but upon Ireland's exiled children in America. Although it is a history we dare not forget, Paddy's Lament is a book for our times, especially for those who would gain a deeper understanding of the continuing Anglo-Irish conflict, the tragic manifestations of which we are witnessing in the North of Ireland today.

Read Paddy's Lament as I did and you too will awaken to the need to make a permanent reminder of the sufferings of our people and of the greatest mass Irish immigration to America. Not only should we all read Paddy's Lament and see that it is placed in our schools and libraries, and into the hands of our own children, but we should also erect an appropriate monument in this country as a tribute to those who suffered so much, endured so much, and contributed so much to the preservation of our Catholic faith and our Irish culture; to the building of this great American republic while never forgetting the dream of the Irish nation to some day also experience Liberty and Justice for all.

I am asking for suggestions from Brother and Sister Hibernians as to the exact form that such a memorial should take. Please do not delay in submitting your suggestions to me as soon as possible.

IMMIGRATION CRISIS

The story of Ireland's young being forced to emigrate due to economic necessity is not a situation which was current only in my father's time; it is true today, as was noted in our Saint Patrick's day message. The flight of Irish immigrants to the United States over the past four years has reached crisis proportions. Please urge your Congressman and Senators to support H.R. 1683 and to join with Congressman Joseph DiGuardi in pushing for immigration reform legislation which will be fair to the Irish.

Assistance to Irish immigrants has always been a major mission of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America as has been chronicled by John Ridge in Erin's Sons in America. It is my intention that assistance to Irish immigrants be a hallmark not only of Nick Murphy's presidency, but a continuing policy of the AOH. Plans are currently underway to open as a pilot project an office devoted to assisting individual Irish immigrants desiring to normalize their status in this country. This project is going ahead at the same time that we seek both legislative and administrative remedies for the immigration crisis generally.

Like the voice of one crying in the wilderness, our own Tom Murray has done the necessary research and shown us the way; we must all take initiative to further this most important work — work as important to the future well-being of the United States as it is to the Irish nation. Please do not hesitate to forward your own suggestions to the National President.

On a very positive note, Chairman Mario Biaggi informs me that the membership of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs is growing in the 100th Congress. Perhaps the most noteworthy new addition is a freshman Congressman from Massachusetts named Joseph P. Kennedy. We bid welcome to Joe Kennedy, and we ask that he address the question of immigration reform and take the Hibernian language of H.R. 1683 as his own in playing a leading role in the quest for justice in U.S. immigration practices.

National Awards 'Trees for Ireland' Program Succeeding

The 1987 National Awards program launched in mid-March has met with strong acceptance amongst the membership of both the LAOH and the AOH. The awards program annually selects a project to which all proceeds are donated. For the last several years both National Boards have united in a combined effort for the project selected.

The 1987 beneficiary, "Trees for Ireland," is a project intended to help in the reforestation of the millions of barren acres in Ireland laid barren by the British occupation forces during the mid-centuries. Trees, mostly oak, were used extensively, in England, for fuel, housing and to build their Navy.

National Presidents Sheila M. Clifford and Nicholas Murphy will preside at the "Trees" dedication ceremonies in Ireland this summer. This event will be held on August 4, 1987, at a site to be selected.

These new trees, now and at maturity, will provide thousands of needed jobs for the youth of Ireland, and will help Ireland be self-supporting in lumber in the future.

This joint program of the LAOH and AOH will continue until Friday, July 10, at which time the winners will be selected at the New York State Convention Ball in Niagara Falls. There will be ten awards — the winners need not be present.

The first award is a round trip to Ireland for two, via Aer Lingus, courtesy of Connie O'Sullivan, Healy-O'Sullivan Travel Bureau, 22 South Main Street, Pearl River, New York 10956. Phone: 914-735-9600. Second: a remote control VCR. Third: a Waterford Ships Decanter with glasses. Seven additional awards will be presented to participants.

Additional information and supplies for the Awards program, for both the ladies and the men, is available from Richard M. Rogers, Assistant National Secretary and National Awards Chairman, at Box 623, Mineola, New York 11501. Phone 516-887-1952.

For additional information about the presentation ceremonies in Ireland and the several special Hibernian flights being arranged by Mr. Connie O'Sullivan and provided by Aer Lingus, please contact Mr. John Foody at 47 Yale Terrace, Blauvelt, NY 10913. Phone: 914-359-1386.

Cardinal O'Connor

every state of the litigation, from trial through appeals, Joseph Doherty won his right not to be extradited to Britain.

The Cardinal and his aides listened attentively to Mr. Doherty's mother, Maureen, as she related some incidents of daily life in Belfast as her son grew up under British rule; of the continual strip-searching of her daughter Maureen who was interned in Armagh Women's Jail; of the unprovoked shooting deaths of many neighbors by members of the British Army and Protestant terrorist gangs; of the numerous Catholic families who were burned out of their homes by Protestant paramilitary gangs.

Maureen Doherty related the harassment and beatings given to young Catholic boys and men, her son Joe included, by British Army soldiers in their continual campaign of harassment to the Catholic communities of Northern Ireland. She related how Catholics are denied jobs and forced to live in substandard housing. She stated that resistance to British rule became a way of life for Catholics, indeed their sole means of existence.

Mrs. Doherty stated that her son Joe and most of the young boys and men from the Catholic ghettos of Northern Ireland became militarily involved as a reaction to the oppression which permeated every facet of their lives every minute of every day. Although Cardinal O'Connor was familiar with the situation confronting Catholics in Northern Ireland, as Maureen Doherty related it to him, he was, nevertheless, visibly moved by her presentation. He made several promises to her:

1. Cardinal O'Connor promised to write to Attorney General Edwin Meese and to the White House in an effort to learn why the U.S. government has been persecuting Joseph Doherty and causing undue suffering and hardship to his family. His Eminence stated that laws are necessary to every society and must be obeyed by everyone.

2. Cardinal O'Connor promised to write his thoughts and comments concerning Joseph Doherty and the US government in his diocesan newspaper, Catholic New York. He advised us that articles appearing in this weekly publication are routinely reported by the general media.

3. Cardinal O'Connor promised to continue to send Msgr. Boyle and other emissaries to visit Joseph Doherty in prison. Although he did not mention the harassment and rude treatment given to Msgr. Boyle by bureaucrats at the FCI, Otisville, New York, the Cardinal's aides led us to believe that he has not forgotten this incident.

As our conversation drew to a close and we all thanked His Eminence for the considerable amount of time he spent with us, I cautioned Cardinal O'Connor that merely by virtue of his interest in Joe Doherty, he would most likely be labeled a 'supporter of terrorism' by the British influenced media. The Cardinal shrugged this off with a wave of his hand, and stated that he has been called many names before and expects to be called more names yet in the future. Name-calling will not dissuade him from his moral responsibility to investigate the reasons why, if the facts are as we presented them to him, officials of our government are denying to Joseph Doherty the justice which has been granted to him by numerous federal judges.

By way of personal opinion, I would like to state that although this was my first experience with Cardinal O'Connor and his aides, I cannot think of another word he could have or should have stated to make each of us feel at ease. His particular concern for Maureen Doherty, a mother who has undergone many sufferings, was very evident. His obvious respect for Mary Pike and her law partner, Steve Sommerstein, and the frustration they are experiencing in their continuing legal battle to obtain the justice which has been granted to Joseph Doherty was also evident.

Before saying goodbye, Cardinal O'Connor posed for photographs with us and thanked the American Irish Congress for bringing this issue to his attention.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Since this writing Cardinal O'Connor has visited Joseph Doherty in prison.

vestments from those companies if the governor signs into law the South African bill. The state has $4.3 million in pension funds invested in 3 remaining companies doing business in Northern Ireland.

The groundwork for this success was laid at a hearing in early March when both bills were aired (State Treasurer Francisco L. Borges testified in support of both). Half a dozen speakers spoke in favor of the South African bill while about thirty supported the Northern Ireland bill. Virtually all agreed with both bills. Most spectators from all over the state wore shamrock emblems.

The result was achieved by the cooperation of legislators, labor unions, the Irish American Unity Conference, Northern Aid, the American Irish Political Education Committee and the Freedom For All Ireland Committee of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, which was wholeheartedly supported by the AOH State Board.

Connecticut now joins New York, Massachusetts and New York City which have adopted the MacBride Principles. The campaign proceeds in New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Rhode Island. A solid block in the northeastern states would send a strong message to the U.S. Congress where legislation has been introduced.

Several major cities and five more states — California, Florida, Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota — have legislation pending in the furtherance of this human rights effort.

Dodd Pledges Hearings

we now say we don't agree with that."

Before concluding, Senator Dodd made a strong appeal for Hibernians and other Irish organizations to become more involved in Irish issues. "We don't work together enough as Irish-Americans. We ought to care more about the land of our forebears. Ireland is becoming a modern nation and it's a nation in trouble. We stink when it comes to working together. As Irish-Americans, we don't do a very good job."

He challenged those present to pressure their elected officials, as many other ethnic groups do. "In the Senate, we could only get a handful of our colleagues to become interested in the treaty issue. Connecticut (where Sen. Lowell Weicker Jr. joined him) was the only state where both senators opposed the new treaty."

He urged his audience to become more concerned and suggested local organizations could help their cause by conducting forums and generating debate on the issue among people in their community.

LONG EIRENNACH AND A FEW GOOD MEN

Ireland has a navy — a good one. Irish sailors have roamed the seas since ancient times. Fearless Irish sailors, with their unique Irish pride, were first-class man-o-war's men where ever they sailed.

Ireland's 900 strong seafaring Navy is charged with important responsibilities: deter external aggression; conduct search and rescue operations; train naval, naval reserve, maritime and fishing fleet personnel; perform hydrographic surveys; protect Irish fisheries and fishing banks; and interdict arms and contraband smugglers. The well trained Irish soldiers discharge their duties with dedicated professionalism, and with the vigorous zeal of proud bluejackets. Unlike the naval forces of many small countries around the world the Irish Navy is not equipped with guided missile gunboats and frigates, attack aircraft, and other reach out and destroy capabilities. The Irish Navy proudly maintains a small, albeit first-rate, defensive, protective and life-saving presence off the long Irish coastline. Because of the unique location and geographical features of the island nation the Irish Navy, presently commanded by Commodore W. J. Brett, is a key element of Oglagh na hEireann, the Defence Forces of Ireland which now numbers more than 18,000 including the Reserve Defence Force.

In earlier days the British Navy patrolled Irish waters and maintained control of the naval harbors of Cork, Berehaven, and Lough Swilly. In a surprising move the British withdrew from Irish waters in 1938, when war threatened in Europe, and handed over their naval base assets to the Irish Government. The English felt that retaining their close-in naval control was not worth the effort to hold their bases against the hostile Irish population of that era. Ireland had no navy and quickly acquired six 70-foot motor torpedo boats from Britain, and armed two fishery patrol boats and a coastal minelayer. Ireland named this tiny force its Marine Service and established a naval base at Haulbowline Island in Cork harbor.

THE AISLING, Emer, and Aoife moored dockside at Haulbowline Island, Cork Harbor. Irish sailor — inset. Photos — An Cosantoir

The Marine Service had, of course, been formed under emergency legislation. The fine performance, during the war years, of the officers and ratings later demonstrated the need for a permanent force. The Irish Government then created the Navy in 1946. By 1947 the Flower class (British surplus) corvette escort vessels were added to the fleet. Designated "LE", for Long Eirannach, meaning "Irish Ship", the ships were named Macha, Maev, and Cliona after mythological Chief-tainesses. At the end of 1947 the naval service included 30 officers and 400 ratings.

The Deirdre, the first naval vessel built in Ireland, entered service in 1972, joining the fleet which then included three coastal minesweepers (only the LE Grainne remains in service). Built at the Verolme dockyard near Cork, the Deirdre was designed to the specifications of the Naval Service. Three improved Deirdre class ships were built between 1978-1980. Ruggedly seaworthy, the Aisling, Emer, and Aoife were important additions to the fleet. The Eithne, completed in 1984 is now the pride of the Irish Navy. She is 1,760 tons, cruises at 19 knots, and carries 57 mm and 20 mm guns, plus a Dauphine II helicopter. The Eithne visited New York harbor during the Statue of Liberty Centennial celebration, and many Americans toured the ship and met its fine crew.

The Navy's routine duty revolves around patrolling the rich fishing areas off Ireland's coast. During the 1960s and early 1970s the Navy had responsibility for a three-mile territorial sea, and a 12-mile limit since 1964. In October 1977, because of Ireland's entry into the European Economic Community (EEC) a 200-mile exclusive fishing limit was declared. This decree added a new and heavy burden to the many duties of the Irish Navy. The normal fisheries patrol lasts about three weeks. The Irish crews stop and board many foreign fishing vessels. They inspect papers and catches, and check for compliance to Irish regulations. On many occasions an offending vessel is escorted to port and the captain is brought before an Irish court. Many times the Irish sailors chase after a fleeing vessel, fire their weapons and force the culprits to heave to. In 1976 Irish sailors fired on, and boarded the Soviet factory trawler, Belomorje, bringing it to Cork harbor. After a court case and conviction the catch and fishing gear were confiscated. The Eastern bloc fishing fleets no longer infringe in Irish waters, but do occasionally buy fish from local Irish fishing craft. The Irish surface patrols are now supported by Irish Airforce air-recon surveillance for maximum coverage. To illustrate the increasing activity of its seagoing fleet, the Irish Navy, in 1970, detained 6 foreign vessels. In 1980, 56 were detained. In 1985 the figure rose to 67.

The continuous active fishing patrols accomplish a very important plus for the Irish Navy. Unlike the crews of the navies of many of the small countries, the Irish sailor is kept on his toes and is well trained in the seagoing arts by his frequent sea duty assignments. The vigorous patrols require an active program of upkeep and maintenance for the ships, engines, and operating equipment. A busy sailor means high morale and an alert fleet. The Irish Navy is well tuned and ready.

Well trained navy men are not born that way. They are groomed, shaped, indoctrinated and trained. The training of the Irish Navy personnel is an on-going function at Haulbowline Island. All recruitment is voluntary and one of the problems, like many navies of the free world, is constant turnover — making good training essential to success. The normal length of service is four years. Only a small percentage of ratings serve for longer periods. After boot camp most training occurs on operational vessels during normal patrol routines. All training involves lengthy periods of classroom and on-the-job sessions for both ratings and officer candidates. The newly commissioned officer spends two years (9 months abroad) preparing for his Watchkeeping exam. In addition, the engineering officer spends an extra 9 months of engineering studies and seagoing duties achieving his diploma — 7 years after his appointment as a cadet. The small professional officer corps is truly a Navy's gunnery, mine warfare, ship, saying: "I am Captain Jack Barry, Irish and Yankee, and damned proud of it." He then proceeded Helo, antisubmarine warfare, and similar specialties including command and staff courses in the Curragh military college are receiving favorable attention for excellence, both in and out of the Naval service.

Professionalism, dedication, discipline, and patriotism are all part of the character of the Irish Navy. A navy thrives on tradition. The men and women of the Irish Navy can look back, proudly, through the ages to Saint Brendan the Navigator who first ventured out from Ireland on the unknown sea. The first man of Columbus' crew to step on American soil was an Irishman named Patrick McGuire. Commodore John Barry answered the call of a British warship, saying: "I am captain Jack Barry, Irish and Yankee, and damned proud of it." He then proceeded to sink the English ship. Tradition is deep-set in the Irish Navy.

N.Y. State Legislators Honor State President

ALBANY, N.Y. — At a Legislative breakfast held here May 20, the American Irish Legislators Society presented its annual "American Irish Outstanding Citizen Award" to John "Jack" Irwin, New York state president of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. His selection was announced earlier by

JOHN "JACK" IRWIN

AILS Awards Chairman Philip B. Healey of Massapequa, Assemblyman from Nassau County's 12th District. The breakfast followed a memorial mass for deceased members of the State Legislature, which was celebrated at St. Mary's Church by the Most Reverend Herbert Hubbard, Bishop of Albany.

Irwin, a financial officer of Merrill Lynch stockbrokers, was honored for his work in the Irish community, especially his spearheading a successful campaign by Irish American organizations to have the Fair Employment Practices Act, governing American companies operating in Northern Ireland, enacted into New York State law. Previous awardees were Pulitzer-Prize winning novelist ("Ironweed," "Legs"), William Kennedy of Albany; Edward Cleary, New York State President of the AFL-CIO; Vincent J. Riley Jr., President of Keycorp, a bank holding company headquartered in Albany; and Father Martin Hines, President of Siena College.

The Albany-based, 10-year-old American Irish Legislators Society is comprised of 46 Irish American members of the New York State Legislature. Its current president is Assemblyman Richard Keane of Buffalo.

Dillon Heads New York's Irish National Caucus

Nassau County District Attorney Denis Dillon has been named the head of the New York State Irish National Caucus. The Caucus, with a staff in Washington D.C., attempts to impress on our public officials the determination of Irish America that our country should be just as concerned about denial of human rights in Ireland as in any other part of the world. In addition, the Caucus hopes to ultimately see the Irish people freed of all foreign influence in shaping their own destiny.

Dillon has frequently spoken out against human rights violations in Northern Ireland. He has made three trips to Northern Ireland, including a fact-finding mission with U.S. Senator Alfonse D'Amato. He has been an observer at the "supergrass" trials and has served on a panel investigating the use of plastic bullets by the security forces against innocent Catholics. For his work on behalf of Catholics in Northern Ireland, Dillon has received numerous awards, including the National Ancient Order of Hibernians' John F. Kennedy Medal, the highest award bestowed by that organization.

Dillon said he'll work in New York with the Caucus and other organizations to educate Americans about the continued violations of human rights in Northern Ireland. He said, "I'll continue to try and impress on the media the importance of focusing in on the underlying injustices and not simply the violence." In addition, Dillon said he would emphasize the ongoing boycott of the Ford Motor Company because of its discrimination in hiring Catholic workers in the North.

Dillon has been District Attorney of Nassau County since 1975. He's been re-elected three times. In 1981 and 1985 he was endorsed by the five major parties.

Hibernians Meet with Ulster Protestants

(From the "Flatbush Hibernian," Brooklyn, N.Y.)

Assistance for Immigrants Forthcoming

Starting on May 5, 1987 and ending on May 4, 1988 the legislation process outlined in the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 will start. Under this act, undocumented immigrants who arrived in the United States before January 1, 1982, and who have resided continuously (except for short trips outside the country) in an unlawful status during that period can qualify.

We are happy to report that the Catholic Church has set up an office to help in the processing of these legalization applications. All four dioceses in the metropolitan area (New York) and hopefully all other dioceses in the United States will appoint coordinators to handle immigration problems. This help will be available to immigrants from all over the world.

Anyone needing help should immediately contact their local parish, although you need not be a parishioner. The coordinators advise that you should not pay anyone to get your legal status. Incidentally, we have been told that the Catholic Church will keep filing fees at a minimum. All information will be kept strictly confidential.

Please note that under the new law employer sanctions do not affect workers who were hired prior to November 6, 1986. In other words, if an illegal alien was hired before November 6, 1986, the employer is not subject to fines. Employers are requested to check residence status on every employee after above date.

The United Irish American Immigration Committee is continuing its work of securing legislation to help undocumented immigrants who arrived in the United States after January 1, 1982. They are working presently with Senators and Representatives in reference to new legislation for this particular group. With good cooperation from Congress, the United States and the Irish Administration, we are looking for an early solution. However, all Irish Americans, their friends, and organizations must keep their elected officials aware of the need for this additional immigration.

The United Irish American Immigration Committee is continuing the work it started many years ago in New York City in securing fair and equitable immigration laws. It is in contact with Irish American Organizations throughout the United States and welcomes their continued support. The agency's address is 198 Broadway, Suite 400, New York, NY 10038.

over here), and Mr. David Hamilton, an ex-Ulster Volunteer Force (U.V.F.) man, spoke for nearly three fascinating hours on peace, reconciliation, and the abandonment of violence in Northern Ireland, through becoming totally committed to living one's life as The Divine Master taught us.

Two exemplary Christian gentlemen, these two Ulstermen view themselves as Irish, not British, and condemn the paramilitaries and all violence, whether British, Loyalist, or Republican forces are responsible.

After this historic meeting with Brother Hibernians from Division Nos. 4, 5, 19, 22, and a sizable contingent from our own Flatbush No. 35, one could feel a sense of hope for peace with justice in Northern Ireland. May we see it in our lifetime, with the help of God.

Cleveland Hibernian Was Life Member

OLIVER E. MURPHY, SR.

Oliver E. Murphy, Sr., a longtime Cleveland Hibernian passed away on Sunday, April 12, 1987. Brother Murphy was a member of Cleveland's Augustine Boland/William Berry Division. He had suffered from Alzheimer's disease for the last several years.

Brother Murphy is survived by his wife Bernadette (Betty) and their children Oliver Jr., Mrs. Joan Cavanaugh, Mrs. Maureen Bamrick and Mrs. Sheila Murphy-Crawford. Betty, Joan and Sheila are members of Ladies Division Number 10 in Cuyahoga County. Joan currently serves as Ladies AOH County Board President.

As a member of the AOH Brother Murphy served in many capacities including several terms as division president. He frequently attended Ohio State Conventions and many National Conventions. He was honored as Cleveland's Hibernian Man of the Year in 1971. In 1980 Brother Murphy was honored by the Greater Cleveland United Irish Societies as the St. Patrick's Day Parade Grand Marshal.

In 1985 the members of the Boland/Berry Division voted unanimously to recommend Ollie for a Life Membership in the Ancient Order of Hibernians.

Pro Life

One year ago I was attending the Human Life International Conference in Montreal. I was with a group of about one hundred people from Europe, Latin America, the United States, and Canada and we were in a middle class suburb of Montreal in predominantly Catholic Quebec. The group of us walked peacefully and chanted in front of a small red brick house — the abortion chamber of Canada's most notorious abortionist, Dr. Henry Morgenthaler.

Who would have ever thought that in an area where there has been a long history of faith in God that abortion would be big business?

What may keep us today from acting against the evil of abortion may come down to our apathy, indifference, or ignorance. This is unfortunate because doing nothing only allows evil to triumph. Much is to be done in pro-life work from counseling pregnant teens and helping them get clothes for their babies to supporting a woman not to have an abortion, and counseling women with post-abortion trauma. Each one of us must be concerned with curtailing abortion on demand and stopping it. I have already asked you to write to President Reagan and Secretary of Health and Human Services Otis Bowen and ask them to cut Title X taxpayer funds to organizations (like Planned Parenthood) which counsel, refer for, or provide abortions.

There is a piece of legislation known as "The President's Pro-Life Bill of 1987" that we should support. This bill, introduced into the House of Representatives by Congressman Henry Hyde (R-Ill.), has 65 co-sponsors. The bill was introduced into the U.S. Senate by Sen. Gordon Humphrey (R-N.H.) and it has 7 co-sponsors in the Senate. The "President's Pro-Life Bill" has three parts: Section 1 declares that "a right to abortion is not secured by the Constitution" and that the Supreme Court "erred in not recognizing the humanity of the unborn child." Section 2 permanently prohibits the federal funding of abortion. Section 3 declares that funds appropriated by Title X cannot be awarded to any organization that provides "abortion procedures or referral for abortion procedures."

I ask each of you to exercise your Constitutional right of free speech to defend human life. Write to your Congressman and strongly urge him to support the "President's Pro-Life Bill of 1987." Encourage a friend to write a letter and/or phone his Congressman's office. You can write to your Representative or Congressman at: House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515; and to your Senator at: Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

Br. Vincent Reese, F.S.C.
New York State Pro-life Chairman

human living is the sure way to stifle the full potential of human "good" otherwise forthcoming from our creaturehood — in politics, government, business, education, etc., etc.

Just as we go to the "expert" when there is a need beyond our capabilities, so in strictly human matters we go to the "expert" — we go to the "author" of our creaturehood and endeavor to accord our plans and decisions with His "order of things," the logical way to the universal good of the nation.

"In God We Trust!" Is it time at last we, all of us, begin "trusting?"

Questions and Answers

By Professor Robert T. Meyer, Catholic University

Note: Please forward questions to Professor Robert T. Meyer, Chair of Celtic Studies, Catholic University, Washington, D.C. 20064.

Q. Could you please tell me something about the name Shannon from County Roscommon in Ireland? Harry Bohn, Levittown, N.Y.

A. In Irish the name was O Seanain, meaning 'descendant of Seanain,' which was a diminutive of Sean, meaning 'old, wise.' It is a name that is scattered throughout all of Ireland. There are variants of the name: O Shenane, O Shanane, O Shennan, O Shannon, Shanan, Shanon, Shan-non.

Q. We would appreciate your efforts to research the name McCauley. Paul & Carol McCauley, N. Wyomissing, Pa., 19609

A. In Irish your surname was MacAmalghaidha, meaning 'son of Amhalghaidh.' Now Amalghaidh was a very ancient Irish personal name, and its very meaning has been lost in antiquity. Eugene Curry who was Professor of Celtic in Dublin many years ago thought that it was one of the ancient Danish kings of Dublin. There are several distinct families of this name, the best known being that of County Westmeath comprising the whole of the parish of Ballyloughloe in the western part of that county. There are variant forms of your name as Macaulay, Macauley, MacAuley, MacCawley, MacCawley, Cawley, Cawley, etc.

Q. Please tell me anything your research may discover about the name Costigan. John F. Costigan, Derby, Connecticut.

A. Your name in Irish could have been either Mac Oisticin or Mac Oistigin. It meant 'son of Hodgkin' a diminutive form of Hodges. Like the name Roger, Rogers, it was of Anglo-Norman origin. However I can see another possibility of a Norse Origin. The Norse form for Latin Augustine would have been Oistin. So 'son of Augustine.' There are some variants of the name: M'Oestikine, Mac Costigan, Costigan, M'Costigine, etc. The name was a common one in Ossory, judging from the Old Irish Annals.

Q. I am interested in knowing the origin of the surname Kelleher. My father was born in Cork City, Co. Cork. Dennis C. Kelleher, Seattle, Wash. 98144

A. In Irish your surname was O Ceileachar, meaning 'son of Ceileachar' which meant 'dear companion, spouse, loving one.' Father Woulfe in his Irish Names and Surnames (Dublin 1923) says that it is the name of a well-known family in both Cork and Kerry. They were descended from the brother of Brian Boru. There are variant forms of the name: O Kellagher, O Kelliher, Kelleher, Kelliher, Keller.

Q. I am writing to determine the origin of the name Hinch. Edward J. Hinch, East Islip, N.Y.

A. In Irish your name was O hAonghusa, which meant 'descendant of Aongus' which means 'best choice, one-and-only choice.' It was the name of a family in County Meath who were lords in the barony of Moyfenrath. The name is now fairly common in Leinster and Munster. There are many forms of the name: O Heanessy, O Hennessy, Henessy, O Heny, Heney, Hinchy, Hench, Henchy, Hinch.

Q. Could you please tell me the origin of my mother's surname Oakes? Mrs. Kathleen Tighe, Bronx, N.Y. 10465.

A. In Irish the name was either Mac Dara or Mac Daire, meaning 'son of the-oak' probably referring to a strong-minded, noble person. The Irish word for oak is daire, seen in Kildare, etc. Some people simply translated the name into Oakes, or Oak. Some have kept the Irish name as M'Dary, M'Darey, Daragh, Daragh, Darrogh.

The National Organizer's Corner

Summertime is here, finally; summer sports and activities are being planned and summer festivals are in full swing. This presents a great opportunity to promote Hibernian membership at these gatherings. As you are aware, there are a lot of people out there, who do not know what the AOH stands for. They do not know that the AOH is the oldest, (150 years in the U.S.) and only lay Catholic Irish organization in the western hemisphere. They do not know that we have Hibernian Divisions in 38 states and still growing. They do not know that one of our main goals is "to aid and advance by all legitimate means the aspirations and endeavors of the Irish people for complete and absolute independence, promoting peace (with justice), and unity for all Ireland." We foster the ideas and perpetuate the history and traditions of the Irish people here in the United States. We promote Irish culture and encourage an equitable U.S. immigration law for Ireland and we cooperate with all groups for a fair American immigration policy.

The National Organizer has an organizer's display kit, which is available for such events as Irish festivals, feisana or any large gathering of Irish Americans. It's a nice compact three-sided display which can be placed on an eight foot table. It proudly displays our motto and other information which gets a lot of attention. This booth, manned with competent members and a supply of hand out information, can produce astonishing results. If you would like to reserve this display please write to me giving full details of the event.

The recruitment drive for new members is in full swing and a lot of good results are being reported. Members who thought it would be difficult to recruit one member are now coming in with three and four new members. If your division has not yet sent out the letter explaining the benefits of being a member of the AOH, why don't you give your president a call. He may need some help with the writing or mailing of the letter, and don't forget to enclose an application for membership with the letter. You too will be surprised with the results.

The National Board requests each division, county board and state board to file a certificate of election (form 9) with the national secretary.

National Director Gilligan Hears from His Senator

Recently, I received the following letter from Bob Graham, U.S. Senator from Florida. We need to get an effective mailing to him urging him to join the ad hoc committee. While this is intended as a reminder to all Florida Hibernians, it would help to have some other letters from out of state sent in support. I urge everyone to write.

Thomas Gilligan, National Director
Mr. Thomas Gilligan
1301 SW 26th Avenue
Fort Lauderdale, Florida 33312
Dear Thomas:

Thank you for your letter regarding the situation in Northern Ireland. I am deeply concerned about the violence and political turmoil in Ireland today. Religious persecution is an inexcusable policy for any faction to adhere to. Tolerance and accommodation must be forthcoming.

I appreciate you sharing your thoughts and comments on this issue.

With kind regards,
Bob Graham, United States Senator

Thomas D. McNabb, 31 Logan Street, Auburn, N.Y. 13021, as soon as results and appointments are known. Do not wait; we need that information to keep our mailing lists up to date.

The National Secretary has in stock right now some beautiful plaques which are suitable to give as awards to members or supporters whom you want to recognize for their contributions to the Order or your own Division. The plaque is of dark oak measuring about 9 inches by 7 inches with a full color official Hibernian medallion measuring 3 1/4 inches by 4 inches mounted on the wood background. The cost is about $20.00 plus postage. Why not order some now and when the occasion arises you will be prepared.

The National Secretary has a full line of lapel AOH emblem pins, medallions and other jewelry in stock. You may write to me or the National Secretary for a price sheet.

This is the year for county and state conventions according to our national constitution. The national president wants the national board to cover as many conventions as possible. If you did not have your convention yet and you would like a visit from a member of the national board, please call Nick Murphy. He will be happy to accommodate you.

Advertising: We have done some advertising in the Irish newspapers during the St. Patrick's Day period. The results were good. A lot of people wrote in inquiring about membership in the AOH. It is my firm belief that selective advertising in the diocesan newspaper will produce good results. I would like to hear from you concerning advertising for membership or in areas where we have no existing divisions. If your county or division wants to go this route, would you write me; maybe I can help you with the project. If you need applications or other information, I will get you what you want.

Regarding your request that I join the Ad Hoc Committee on Irish Affairs, we are currently reviewing which of the caucuses we will be able to actively participate in. I have contacted the staff of the Irish Affairs Committee and told them that I wish to be kept up to date on all legislation pertaining to Ireland and would like to be included on their mailing list.

I appreciate you sharing your thoughts and comments on this issue.

With kind regards,
Bob Graham, United States Senator

The Sunday closest to August 21st, the date of the apparition of our Lady at Knock, Co. Mayo, is chosen by most counties. Many divisions and even counties can join together for the Mass and Rosary. If an outdoor shrine or grotto is available it makes an ideal place for this honor to Mary. Make it a family outing and invite friends and neighbors. Let's all make this year the best day ever and ask Mary through our prayers to intercede for a united Ireland with peace and justice for all. I believe if we all pray fervently enough to Our Lady of Knock and pray the Rosary daily, "Mary" as Queen of Ireland through her son will have our prayers answered. To all have a holy and healthy year.

Report from NATIONAL ADVERTISING DIRECTOR

Advertisers for the National Hibernian Digest continue to "join" the fine pages of your newspaper, with a number of new accounts making their debut.

It's still a pleasure that many of our veteran advertisers remain with the National Hibernian Digest. That would seem to say that they are getting results for their fine judgement in advertising with your newspaper. And just as important, it must also mean that you — the AOH members — are supporting our advertisers. Without your undivided backing, our advertisers would be in a difficult position. That would also mean, of course, that the newspaper would

If you think being Irish is worth anything at all and are proud of your heritage and would like to contribute to mankind, why don't you sign up a new member today. For those Irish people living in remote areas who wish to become members, we can accommodate you and sign you up as a member at large, whereby you will receive the Hibernian Digest and other Hibernian mailings. Our hope would be that you would be able to start a division of the order. A leader is one person who can convince others that his cause is worthwhile. You might be that leader we are looking for. TEACHING CHILDREN IRISH

Dear Editor:
I am writing on behalf of Colaiste na Banban, a non-profit group established to help children in the 11 to 13 age group improve their Irish. The course was organized in particular to help children whose fathers are unemployed or are in low income employment. There are no Irish language programmes on Telefís Éireann (except for a 5 min. slot for 3/4 year olds once a week.)

Our first course held in An Uaimh, Co. Meath, this summer was an outstanding success; for 14 consecutive days 24 children attended for 5 hours per day for formal classes in spoken Irish and then for 2 1/2 hours of games and sports through Irish. They were taught their prayers in Irish and the beautiful Sean O Riada Mass; and as Sunday mass in Irish is part of our course they sang our mass in Irish on three occasions (the first after only 5 days with us). Children and parents are all delighted with the course, and to help the children keep the Irish they learn during the course we have formed a club for them to come together every week in An Uaimh and for a day trip each month to the Meath Gaeltacht in Rath Cairn.

All of this takes money!
We employed a good professional teacher with two assistants, all native Irish speakers. We intend to take the children on a two-week camp next summer and to help them develop their full potentiality as Irish children. If they stay with us we will help with their exams in two/three years time. We will encourage them to respect their elders, and to respect our national flag and national anthem. We will also run a new day course next year, so that we should be expanding each year with both camps and day courses each summer and our youth clubs throughout the year.

We received some help from Conradh na Gaeilge and the Brian O'Higin's Committee (The Colaiste is named in honour of Brian who wrote as Brian na Banban.) However there is a limit to what local groups can provide in terms of finance, and although we have a local fund-raising campaign, money is very scarce in Ireland at present and is likely to remain so for some time to come. Hence our appeal to your institute for financial assistance for our very worthy cause.

Cheques should be made out to Colaiste na Banban, Bank of Ireland, An Uaimh, Co. Meath.

MACBRIDE PRINCIPLES SUPPORT

Dear Legislator:

Re: MacBride Principles
Investment Act (1935)

The above noted legislation will shortly be before you for examination. I wish to convey to you the strong support of the Hibernian National Board for this bill and its objectives.

I ask you to consider these fundamental and relevant points:

(1) Not one businessman, investment advisor, banker or state official testified against similar MacBride Principles bills in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts or Connecticut! The Comptrollers of the New York State and New York City Retirement Systems, custodians of two of the 10 largest funds in the Country, are in fact supportive of the adoption of the Sullivan Principles and the MacBride Principles.

(2) There is no legal impediment either in the United States or in the United Kingdom to the adoption of the MacBride Principles. This has been determined in the American Brands decision and in the substantial testimony and opinion of Sir Peter Archer, the former Solicitor General of Great Britain.

(3) Dr. Christopher McCrudden, Lincoln College, Oxford, has unequivocally stated that the positive actions contemplated under the MacBride Principles are no different than the positive actions required under the Northern Ireland Sex Discrimination Order of 1976. The British government has thrown enough red herrings at this bill to sink Fisherman's Wharf.

(4) The MacBride Principles have been advocated in annual corporate meetings for over two years, and adoption has now begun in state legislatures. The Quarterly Survey of Business Prospects in Northern Ireland prepared by P.A. Management Consultants and released on February 16, 1987 shows manufacturing investment up 26%. Apparently, the MacBride Principles do not scare businessmen as much as the British government. It was clear to all who favor adoption of the MacBride Principles that more critical criteria like devaluation of currencies, export/import duties, taxes, availability of raw material and transportation costs guide investment decisions, not the MacBride Fair Employment Principles. This would be particularly true of American companies now long accustomed to equal opportunity and affirmative action procedures.

I trust you will consider these factors in weighing the merits of this legislation. The potential impact of this bill is rather small when compared to the total workforce in Northern Ireland. However, a positive investment bill such as this will demonstrate Americans respect for fairness, their concern for peace and give hope to all in Ireland. I close noting the remarks of the Irish Prime Minister who stated on June 20, 1986. "I fully endorse the MacBride Principles and welcome the efforts and initiatives of concerned Americans who wish to see something done about the chronic discriminatory patterns in employment in Northern Ireland."

Thank you for your consideration.

MEETING WITH MEESE SOUGHT

Edwin Meese III
Attorney General
United States Department of Justice, Room 5111
10th and Constitution Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530

Dear Mr. Meese:

In the past four years, the Department of Justice has conducted an unprecedented campaign to extradite, by means de jure or de facto, an Irish citizen named Joseph Doherty. The English government and the executive branch of our own want him returned to Northern Ireland for his participation in the Irish conflict. We have argued against the debasement of law brought about by the government's extraordinary conduct of this case and will continue to oppose this misuse of power. The government's positions have been time and time again determined to be without legal foundation; we submit they are without moral foundation as well.

The Department of Justice has succeeded in imprisoning Mr. Doherty for nearly four years during this legal battle. Too long separated from his country and his family, despite repeated decisions in his favor and adverse to the executive branch, Mr. Doherty made the decision no longer to contest entry of the order of deportation the executive branch had sought. On September 19, 1986, Immigration Judge Howard I. Cohen entered an order directing his deportation to Ireland, and the Irish government thereafter agreed to accept him on October 13, 1986.

Mr. Doherty's deportation to Ireland has been continuously though unsuccessfully challenged by the Department in an act of calculated cruelty which even Nazi collaborators have not been subjected to here in America. Justice Department legal papers filed to prevent him from being returned to Ireland expressly state:

The designation of the Republic of Ireland as the country to which he wishes to be deported — where he would face possible prosecution for his escape from jail, but not for his other offenses due to double jeopardy type provisions of Irish law and which (sic) he may easily be in a position to engage in further terrorist activities — has serious foreign policy implications for the United States and may well adversely impact on our relations with other nations, especially the United Kingdom, with whom we have pledged mutual support in the fight against world wide terrorism. The deportation of a terrorist convicted of murder to a country where he will escape the full consequences of his acts is certainly "prejudicial to the interests of the United States" within the meaning of Section 243 (a) of the Act.

Thus the executive branch campaign to persecute a long Irish man has now become a concerted effort to denigrate the Irish government through innuendo of threats to national security. This must stop before an already inexplicable situation turns bizarre and potentially embarrassing to this administration.

We seek a meeting with you as soon as possible. We feel that only a personal dialogue will convey our deep concern for the welfare of Mr. Doherty and for his prompt return to Ireland.

The offices of Senator D'Amato, Congressman Fish, and Cardinal O'Connor have indicated an interest in having a representative at such meeting, in addition to those of us designated below.

We are confident you will see the merit in such meeting and await your indication of both time and date. If you have any questions or wish to confirm details, please contact Michael Cummings, National Director of Public Relations, Ancient Order of Hibernians, at (518) 482-0349.

COLUMNIST SCORED

Mr. Michael Kinsley
Washington Post
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Kinsley:

Your column "Dual Loyalty? Why Ask?" is an interesting treatise on the issue, although I suspect much it is much-to-do-about-nothing. A careful examination of each spy story usually reveals an individual who has an enigmatic understanding of heritage and homeland and a more central concern for sex, power, money, revenge, etc. My principal concern was for a flippant reference to "probably finding 50 Irish Americans willing to spy against the U.S. for Albania."

You might be interested in knowing that if any Irish Americans are doing spying it is for America and not against it. Many were actually drawn to the profession when Major Donovan set up the U.S. intelligence (OSS) service after WWII. General Washington's success in our Revolutionary War was due in part to the information supplied him by an Irish printer in New York City. In fact I know of no linkage of any Irish-American to espionage. I do know that nearly half of the Congressional Medal of Honor awardees were either Irish or Irish-American. That legacy of valor commemorated by Hibernians at Valley Forge is but part of the greater sacrifice of Irish Americans in every conflict America has engaged in. No ethnic group — including those of Jewish heritage — have made as great a sacrifice.

Your editors and research staff should not have allowed such an arrogant, unsubstantiated and patently offensive remark to be put in print.

Sincerely,
Nicholas Murphy
National President

A Sheamais, a chara,

Just a short note to thank you for your kindness during my trip to Buffalo.

Though I failed to raise any money I was quite impressed by the spirit of all who were there. We are still slaving away trying to raise 120,000 pounds for the purchase of a building.

Would there be any Foundation in your area who might wish to endow us? It is certain that such Foundation or Business Company would be entitled to tax relief since our work is educational. If you could make the initial enquiries and if you thought an interest was being shown, you could contact me.

Do you think a lecture tour would be of any use?

If you can help at all our future generations will be grateful. If we lose the language we will have lost a heritage of over 4,000 years and we are now at the make or break point.

TOM DOOLEY CHORALIERS

Dear Mr. Henshaw:

The Dr. Tom Dooley Choraliers celebrated their 25th Anniversary by performing at a special 5:00 PM Mass, on Saturday, May 16, at St. Joseph's Church, Camillus, New York.

The Choraliers began in 1962, named in honor of the famous doctor-missionary, Thomas A. Dooley, who served as a Navy doctor in the jungles of Southeast Asia. He founded hospitals in Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam, and other strange places.

In her book, entitled, Sincerely, Tom Dooley, Lucille Selsor states that, "He was like a burning flame, never burning out." These words parallel those of the late, William E. Cloonan, who wrote, "Tom Dooley, your memory's a flame, leaping to heaven and brightening your name." In 1962, the year following the death of Dr. Dooley, the words of William Cloonan were put to music by Michael E. Pinkasewicz, director of the Dr. Tom Dooley Choraliers, in a song entitled "Courage of Tom Dooley." This song will be performed at the end of the Liturgy at St. Joseph's Church.

On the last weekend of May, the Choraliers traveled to St. Louis, the hometown of Dr. Tom Dooley, with air-travel paid by Anheuser-Busch. On Saturday, May 30, the Choraliers performed at a special Memorial Day Mass at the National Shrine of "Our Lady of the Snows," Belleville, Illinois (near St. Louis). The Divine Liturgy was held in a six thousand seat outdoor altar and amphitheatre, for the intention of Dr. Thomas A. Dooley, the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and the beginning of the Marian Year. It was followed by a candlelight procession and recitation of the Rosary.

John Hume's Dark Side

politician." The flawed reasoning put forth by Hume in opposition to the MacBride Principles is, in substance, an English tactic and proves once again that next to the British ambassador he is Whitehall's waterboy par excellence. Ideally other Irishmen and women living under English rule should respond to his destructive drive here in America but state department censorship of Sinn Féin—which the media embraces—makes that impossible. Last September, SDLP members in convention openly expressed disbelief at their leader's position and now it falls to Americans of conscience to note the danger inherent in campaigning against fair employment of Catholics in the North.

For 65 years the entire machinery of government in the North has crafted England's apartheid policy for Ireland by locating plants, training centers, and educational facilities east of the Bann River to promote both Protestant/Loyalist prosperity and Catholic emigration and poverty.

Today the enormity of this crime is now apparent to Americans if not to Mr. Hume. In August, 1986 the prestigious journal Equal Opportunities Review cited government statistics showing the unemployment rate among Catholics twice that of the Protestant community with 35% of the Catholic men without work. The unemployment figures in Catholic ghettos like Short Strand or Ballymurphy are much higher. This data—when broken down by sex, religion and age profiles—suggests job opportunities for Catholics is likely to worsen. The household (1983-84) and labor force (84-85) surveys depict a recipe for social disaster if anti-Catholic discrimination is not forcefully addressed.

Despite mounting evidence to the contrary, Mr. Scott, minister for Northern Ireland, states that the government has a clear "commitment to equal opportunity." There is, in fact, no such commitment and the data clearly contradicts Mr. Scott. In 1982 in the government training centers only two Catholics were promoted to fill the 37 vacancies that occurred. Of the 248 school leavers employed by Harland-Wolfe, Short Bros., Mackies, Scotts and the Northern Ireland Electricity Board in 1984 only 13 were Catholics! Catholics rarely make up more than 10% of the workforce of these firms despite the fact they are all government owned and/or financed!! Hume protests to the Boston Globe that Americans advocating MacBride Principles "... Just don't know the damage they are doing." Based on the unemployment facts one is compelled to ask Mr. Hume, "What damage do Americans inflict and compared to whom?" To Mayor Flynn and others the answer is obvious. England is as committed to perpetuating inequality today as it was in 1920. English rule in Ireland is a lie no Hillsborough Agreement can turn to truth.

Hume's approach to the evil of this anti-Catholic discrimination can be described as anachronistic, spurious and ultimately dangerous. First, he appears to be in a colonial time warp awaiting the next misfeasance or munificence of the mother country. Dr. MacBride refers to this as the "slave mentality" and it is most apparent in Hume's ten-year acquiescence to the Fair Employment Agency (FEA) sham. England, forced by American MacBride Principles efforts, hurriedly issued a discussion paper in 1986—Charter For Employment Equity—which noted the many failures of the FEA and charted reforms. The charter is itself, of course, a fraud but made necessary because the real commitment to fair employment—the non-existent one—was exposed.

Second, his spurious notion that fair employment in the North can only be finessed and then only if Americans would help partition to

AOH meeting 1st Tuesday of the month

Connecticut News

The 52nd Connecticut AOH Convention will be held in Naugatuck on June 6-7. Skip Hamel and Ann Harmon, Waterbury are co-chairpersons. The banquet will be held on Saturday night in the Waterbury AOH Hall; Tommy Doyle's band will provide the music; tickets are $25 per person. President Phil Gallagher asks that Divisions plan to marshal all their delegates at the Convention. State President Phil Gallagher is running for re-election, Jim Gallagher is a candidate for vice-president, Ed McGuinness announced his candidacy for secretary and Bill McCarthy is available for another term as treasurer.

The MacBride Principles were approved by the State Legislature, a dramatic and rare victory for the Irish-Catholic community. The vote in the House was 114 in favor, 30 against and 7 abstentions. In the Senate the vote was 29 in favor and 6 opposed. The State AOH and the Irish American Unity Conference played major roles in securing this victory. The Bill is now going to Governor O'Neill for his signature; he has vowed support.

The New London Division raised $250 from their St. Patrick's Day Dance to be donated to the Ireland Fund. This fund is the equivalent of the United Way in this country. Thanks to John O'Keeffe and Joe Coleman for a job well done.

A reminder from the State Board concerning the annual Golf Tournament on October 11. Divisions are asked to enter at least one foursome, and are asked to sponsor a flag (hole) for $50, to be donated to the State Irish Way program.

Speaking of the Irish Way program, one 1987 scholarship was awarded by the State Board. The recipient is not yet known, however, as the state committee's recommendations are now being reviewed by the Irish American Cultural Institute in St. Paul, Minn.

Four feisanna are being held in the state: June 7 in Glastonbury, June 28 in New Haven, July 12 in Stamford and August 30 in New London. The North American Feis Commission's Junior Irish Dancing Championship competition will be held at the New London feis this year; in 1986 it was held at the Buffalo, NY feis. A curragh race is again being planned in concert with the New London Feis.

The annual Glastonbury Irish Festival will be held July 24-26 at the Irish American Home. Continuous music, refreshments and cultural events will again be available.

The JFK Division, No. 1, Bridgeport, held its 37th annual Communion Breakfast at Journey's Inn on Sunday, March 15. The breakfast followed Mass in St. Charles Borromeo Church. The Mass was concelebrated by Most Rev. Walter Curtis Bishop of Bridgeport; Rev. Mgr. Joseph Potter, Pastor; and Rev. Nicholas Irwin (Co. Tipperary), officiating. The event was attended by more than 450 men, who heard a vigorous address by Senator Chris Dodd. Senator Dodd spoke about the new extradition treaty and the plight of Joe Doherty; Sen. Dodd is one of the rare visitors to Joe Doherty. This successful occasion was due to hard-working committee chaired by Brother James Lawler.

The Bridgeport Division is planning to sponsor a curragh rowing club to be entered in the North American Curragh Association. Other Divisions are asked to consider forming rowing teams for in-state competitions. This growing Irish sport is a good Irish cultural attraction for the young Irish-Americans, boys and girls.

The Bridgeport JFK Division and the Connecticut State Board of the AOH have both sent donations to the United Way Victims' Fund of L'Ambiance Plaza, which is administered by the Red Cross.

The Bridgeport Division is also planning to hold the Major Degree of the Order in early fall of this year.

The Waterbury Division will host a gala Testimonial Dinner-Dance for Ladies National AOH President Sheila Clifford on October 31.

The planned April Tri-State AOH Committee was cancelled because of a conflict in the scheduling of events in the Worcester AOH Hall.

Holiday or Not, He Tends the Flag

By JOHN LAIDLER

News Staff: Salem News

Most people wouldn't think of taking time off on their holiday to do something seemingly as mundane as putting up the American flags.

But Owen Fallon is a little different from the average citizen. The 72-year-old city hall custodian is by his own confession hung up about flags. "I'm a flag watcher," he says.

"When we went to the war in the 40s, there were flags all over the place," he recalls, with more than a trace of nostalgia.

Nowadays, he says flags are few and far between. And all too often they are mistreated, or hung improperly. The custodian is fond of pointing to a snapshot he took in May of this year which shows the Probate Court building on Federal Street featuring an upside down Old Glory.

"It gets me when people don't show more respect for the flag," says the lifelong Salem resident.

To Fallon, flags are more than a patch of cloth. "To me, it means Flanders Field, the Gold Star Mothers and all the wars."

"Flanders Field" is a reference to a favorite poem of Fallon's about the effects of war. "It's where the poppies are," he says, reciting a line. The Gold Star Mothers is an organization of women who have lost sons at war.

The custodian recalls the reaction of his mother when the family received a letter that his brother, John, was missing in action. "She went through the roof. I never want to go through that again." His brother later turned up at a POW camp.

Fallon, a City Hall custodian for 16 years, has been in charge of the daily hoisting and taking down of the flag for the building for the last few years. It is a small task, but one he takes pride in.

"I think it's a patriotic duty to see that the flag is up," he says. (Brother Fallon is a member of Div. 18, Salem, Mass.)

Irish Ad Hoc Congressional Committee — 1987 Releases

On January 5, 1987, Congressman Biaggi met with leaders of major Irish American organizations, including representatives of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, the Irish National Caucus, the Irish Northern Aid Committee, the American Irish Congress and the American Irish National Political Education Committee. Biaggi called the Washington meeting "very helpful and constructive in terms of identifying issues where there is a consensus in the community for action." Congressman Biaggi invited the representatives to attend the first official meeting of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs of the 100th Congress in order "for leaders of the Irish American community to present their agenda for the 100th Congress for the consideration of the Ad Hoc Committee." (That meeting took place on February 4, 1987).

After the two meetings were concluded, Congressman Biaggi outlined the major concerns of the ten-year-old committee as including the monitoring of the U.S. economic aid to Northern Ireland to insure non-discriminatory distribution; the passing of legislation to require U.S. companies in Northern Ireland to adopt the MacBride Principles for Fair Employment; and the reviewing of U.S. visa policy as it relates to Northern Ireland. Biaggi renewed the commitment of the Committee to overturn elements of the Extradition Treaty between the U.S. and the U.K. and to push for a new investigation into the R.U.C. "shoot to kill" policy.

February 24, 1987 — Biaggi Congratulates Haughey: Congressman Mario Biaggi, on behalf of himself and the 114 Members of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, sent a telegram of congratulations to Charles Haughey, newly elected Taoiseach of the Irish Republic.

March 16, 1987 — Biaggi Led Congressional Group Issues St. Patrick's Day Message of Peace: A bi-partisan group of 52 House and Senate members led by U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi have issued a St. Patrick's Day message of peace declaring that "on St. Patrick's Day and every day, we maintain a firm commitment to peace, justice and freedom in Northern Ireland and Ireland."

April 15, 1987 — President Reagan Authorizes Release of First In- statement of U.S. Aid to Northern Ireland: U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi said that President Reagan has authorized the release of the first 50 million of the 120 million dollars in U.S. aid to Northern Ireland and Ireland after certifying to Congress that the funds will be distributed "in accordance with the principle of equality of opportunity and non-discrimination in employment regardless of religious affiliation." The terms of this certification follows legislation adopted by Congress last year which insures non-discriminatory distribution of aid to Northern Ireland and Ireland and on which "the Ad Hoc Committee worked especially hard." It is hoped that the U.S. aid will generate employment in both Northern Ireland and Ireland and leverage private investment and support.

April 23, 1987 — Biaggi and Committee Meet With Wife of One of the "Birmingham Six": Congressman Mario Biaggi released a statement in which he welcomed Catherine McKelney, wife of Richard McKelney, to a hearing held by the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs on April 23. Mrs. McKelney's testimony detailed the arrest and conviction of her husband, one of the so-called "Birmingham Six" — six Irishmen charged with the bombing of two public houses in Birmingham, England. Biaggi stated that due to the "questionable procedures used in the arrest, and trial, as well as the ill treatment while in prison," of the Birmingham Six, the Ad Hoc Committee would petition the British government for a retrial.

May 11, 1987 — Biaggi Dismayed By State Department Opposition to MacBride Principles Legislation — Seeks Hearings: U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi today released the text of a State Department letter in opposition to legislation urging American companies to adopt the MacBride Principles. Biaggi said he found the State Department's opposition especially puzzling in light of the law under which U.S. economic aid will be distributed in Ireland and Northern Ireland. That law states that in order for the President to be able to spend the funds, he had to have certified to Congress that the funds would be spent in both communities without discrimination based on religion. This certification was received in March. Biaggi continued, "The MacBride Principles would be the tools of enforcement for the certification, yet the Administration opposes them."

Adams at Oxford

Gerry Adams was elected by the Nationalist people of Northern Ireland and is a member of the British government. He is consistently denied a visa by the U.S. Department of State to visit and speak in the United States on behalf of the Nationalists. The AOH National Board invited Mr. Adams to address the National Convention in Buffalo, New York in 1986, but again, a visa request was denied. The following excerpts are from a debate held in the Oxford Debating Hall in England in March 1987.

Reprinted from "The Irish People."

ALMOST 800 students packed into the Oxford Debating Hall on Thursday, March 5th, to hear Sinn Féin President Gerry Adams oppose the motion: "That IRA violence is not justified and can never lead to a satisfactory political solution in Ireland."

Adams' visit to Britain and the surrounding controversy, had ensured a full attendance. For over two hours, hundreds queued in drizzling rain to undergo strict security checks before being admitted to the hall. According to one Six-County student who was present:

"There was a heavy and oppressive police presence with riot units, mounted police and sniffer dogs. They had even brought in the armed Diplomatic Protection Group from Thames Valley police headquarters."

'MORAL COWARDS'

Despite this, a demonstration in support of Adams was held behind the police lines and as he arrived he was enthusiastically cheered. Inside the hall he was warmly greeted as he negotiated his way through dozens of students forced to sit on the floor to hear the debate.

Most of the original speakers had withdrawn because of Adams' participation and in his opening remarks he described them as "moral cowards." Replacement speakers were found by the Oxford Union and for two hours each side argued its case.

In the course of his address, Gerry Adams said: I have heard motions like this debated in many forums. Tonight, in keeping with the debating history of this union, I thought I might have heard something original and inspiring, something which may have led to the IRA laying down its weapons and embracing British imperialism. I am disappointed.

All this trouble and all we heard was the same old rhetoric: "IRA violence is wrong because we say so." An awkward word 'violence,' especially when it is necessary to be precise about the language we use — violence has many manifestations — the violence of physical force, the violence of imprisonment, the violence of institutionalised discrimination, the violence of deprivation, the violence of dispossession, the violence of state repression. Strange that only the IRA is described by such a word — the British? Oh the British are involved in peacekeeping! But then this abuse of language is nothing new. The IRA is always referred to as terrorist, the occupying army as the 'security forces'. Repression is 'the restoration of law and order'. British soldiers 'kill', IRA Volunteers 'murder'. The IRA never kill or injure civilians — their victims are always gunmen or rioters. They are terrorists after all and that's what terrorists do, isn't it?

The republicans have kangaroo courts, the British have a judicial system — no jury, a British judge and strange rules for the admissibility of evidence but not a kangaroo in sight.

I almost forgot to mention morality. A most important ingredient in denying the right of a people to freedom or to recourse to armed struggle as a means of resistance. Only it's not morality at all. It is merely a political code disguised as a moral code. If violence is wrong morally then all violence is wrong. But of course we are never told that. It is only the violence of the oppressed, I mean the terrorist, which is wrong and the violence of the oppressor is never even questioned because the oppressor is really the peace-keeper and peacekeepers never use violence.

St. Ronnie Reagan of Tripoli or St.

Margaret Thatcher of the Malvinas have morality on their side. And at gunpoint they tell us it is immoral to use force.

In this century they and their predecessors have killed 60 million people in wars caused by imperialism. One hundred and ten million have been crippled, tens of additional millions have died from disease, all resulting from imperialist wars. Eleven million have been murdered in gas chambers, shot or hanged. At least three million have been slaughtered by air raids — by napalm bombs. Aggression is a way of life for imperialism. And so it is in Ireland where, as in other colonial situations, those wishing to oppose imperialism have little choice but to use force.

And those who use force to put us down or who ignore this dimension of violence tell us that a legitimate resistance army like the IRA is not justified in using force, unless it's the ANC of course or any other liberation movement — as long as it's far away. Most long-distance liberals or long-distance Christians in this country have little problem with far-distant struggles, necklace executions and all. It's called expediency, but that's another story.

Imagine, my friends, if you will, that a foreign power had succeeded in occupying this country in the last

A Commentary

Nativism Comes Out of the Closet

By KEVIN G. LONG

Al Smith lost the 1928 presidential election partly because of his religion. Various nativist groups including the Ku Klux Klan fanned the flames of anti-Catholic prejudice by spreading wild rumors about a Vatican conspiracy to take over the United States. Smith accepted his defeat in good humor and allegedly sent a telegram to the Pope which read simply: "UNPACK!"

Since that time, the ultimate nightmares of nativist bigots have actually come to pass, but without their predicted results. A Catholic has occupied the White House without betraying the nation to "a foreign despot" in Rome. More recently, the Pope himself has set foot on American shores and was hailed by multitudes of sneering Papists shouting "Viva il Papa." Yet the American Republic remains intact.

Nevertheless, it is astonishing to find that nativist bigotry still thrives across the country. In recent months, the efforts of Pope John Paul II to restore order to his confused and troubled church have been harshly condemned and bitterly mocked in the secular media. And on the eve of his second visit to America, men of less than good will are repeating Smith's message: "UNPACK!"

Part of the papal agenda is an ecumenical prayer service at the University of South Carolina on September 11. Most religious organizations — including the 700,000 member South Carolina Baptist Convention — will welcome the Pope with enthusiasm. The same cannot be said of the Rev. Bob Jones, who is leading a campaign against the event.

Rev. Jones insisted that Catholicism "is not Christian in the biblical sense by any means" and castigated his fellow Baptists for compromising themselves. "We speak out vigorously in condemning war. Imagine they secured, through a system of patronage and privilege, the support of a section of your fellow citizens. Imagine that they were forced to withdraw their military establishment out of most of this country except that part occupied by their loyalists. Imagine they partitioned this country and claimed ownership and sovereignty over that part of this land on the pretext that a majority in the partitioned area wished it so. Would disloyal citizens entrapped within the partitioned area or other patriots outside that area be morally justified in using force to rectify that situation? Of course they would! And so it is in my country.

And if you doubt the accuracy of the scenario I have outlined, you know nothing of the history of the conquest of Ireland or of the barbaric methods used to subvert the Irish right to national self-determination or to civil and religious liberties or of the partition of Ireland by the British against the wishes of all the Irish people, loyalists and nationalists alike.

And when we look at the history of British colonialism — from the invention of the concentration camp during the Boer War, to the massacre in India, to the Holca Prison deaths in Kenya, to the indictment on torture charges before the Pope to "stay home."

"This pope has set back Roman Catholic relations with the Reformation churches more than any other pope in human memory," Cromey wrote in a San Francisco Chronicle editorial. "His anti-sexualism smacks of bigotry in the highest order. The pope's statements on homosexual persons are laced with archaic religious assumptions and astonishing arrogance."

In subsequent statements to the press, Cromey predicted "serious anti-papal demonstrations" and issued a thinly-veiled threat of violence. "I don't think the mayor and police have any idea of the hostility and anger homosexual people have toward the pope," Cromey added. "I think people could get physically hurt."

Another anti-papal organizer is Jon Wahl, a San Francisco attorney who belongs to the Stonewall Gay Democratic Club and chairs the Papal Visit Task Force — a coalition of gays, lesbians, pro-abortionists, feminists, and advocates of women's ordination.

"We are preparing a significant, strong, even unforgettable reception for what really is a foreign prince coming to our country to preach against the freedoms many of us have fought for many years to achieve," said Wahl. "We are in no mood to meet this man, [but] we'll take him on. . . . We're mad as hell."

Although the shrill voices of anti-papal sentiment will be amplified in the equally anti-Catholic media, they do not represent the overwhelming majority of Americans. To the average citizen, Pope John Paul II represents the papacy in its finest hour an international symbol of decency, peace and Christian charity. If that message sounds "foreign" to Rev. Jones or Rev. Cromey, perhaps the cheering crowds will teach them something about American ideals — and hospitality.

political solution. Most thinking people and all democrats will concede that such a solution would involve conditions upon which a peaceful, united and just society would be established by the people who live in Ireland, by the Irish people. They would also concede that this is a matter for the Irish people and not the business of the British government.

Furthermore, most honest people will concede that British involvement in Ireland has never led to a satisfactory political solution for the people of Ireland, or for the people of Britain either. Logic dictates that the removal of British involvement is a prerequisite for a satisfactory political solution. The IRA's energies are geared towards the removal of that presence. Can anyone here say with any certainty that they will never be successful in attaining that objective? The history of British colonialism shows that they will be successful and that the British government will be forced, as it has been elsewhere, to withdraw from Ireland. Within the new situation created by this democratic measure it would then be a matter of business-like negotiations between representatives of all the Irish people to set the constitutional, economic, social and political arrangements for a new Irish state.

As you ponder tonight's proposition consider the words of a certain Lord Lloyd speaking to the Aden Legislative Council in May 1956. He told the natives:

Boston Report

By KEVIN MURPHY
(Reprinted from The Irish People.)

Anti-Irish Press

The Boston Herald is attempting to make "paddy bashing" a popular event in its pages. Paddy bashing is a term used to define anti-Irish attitudes in the British press. Rupert Murdoch's Boston Herald really went overboard in its April 6th edition. The paper's star writer, Howie Carr, brought anti-Irish journalism to a new low.

Carr's April 6th column described the Irish as such: "Screw the Boston Irish and their reactionary Church. Like it? Boston is a political blephouse run by potato faced Irish hooligans." It goes on to state that: "The Irish overbite, freckles on the hands, liquor on the breath and a relative in a no-show job, which we down-homers call Irish welfare." As if that is not bad enough, Carr writes: "P.S. Sean O'Casey said that Ireland was full of Protestants and Catholics but no Christians. Joseph Conrad was right: exterminate the brutes. Keep shoving it to the Irish bleeps in Somerville, Chelsea, Everett, Lynn and Revere." Then he states: "Oh yeah, Malden, too."

For readers not familiar with Boston, these places are cities around Boston with large Irish communities. Carr claimed in the column that these statements and others printed were reflections from readers. Who is Carr kidding? This is one of many times in recent years that Carr has attacked the Irish. He frequently portrays the Irish as devious, ruthless, drunken and unworthy.

Murdoch

Would Howie Carr write ethnic slurs about other ethnic groups? I hardly think so. This Boston Herald has been insulting the Irish since Murdoch purchased it five years ago. The trash-like journalism of Carr is disgusting and only appeals to the bigoted or weakminded. Insults would not be printed about other ethnic groups.

We Boston Irish are like lemmings being led down a path of lethargy by some of our politicians. There is no reason under the sun why trash like this should be printed in a large Boston daily in 1987. Where are the politicians of the Boston area who are always pictured in the Boston Irish papers and national media as being friends of the Irish? Why don't our Mayor or so-called pro-Irish state representatives speak out against the wave of anti-Irish journalism coming from the pages of the Boston Herald? It is wrong to ignore the anti-Irish sentiments in the press. These "leaders" are afraid to speak out for fear of raising the ire of Murdoch's peddlers of bigotry at the Herald.

I urge readers from all over America to write a letter of protest to Mr. Patrick Purcell, Manager, the Boston Herald, One Herald Square, Boston, Mass. 02106. Purcell is in charge of all operations at the Herald.

Discrimination

In the American media we often hear about past discrimination suffered by other ethnic groups in America. Yet, we hardly ever hear about the severe discrimination felt by Irish Americans. Here in Boston, in this century, signs in factories and other business establishments seeking employees stated in bold letters: "No Irish Need Apply." In the Boston papers, employment notices stated "N.I.N.A." which meant the same thing.

Before that, anti-Irish riots were staged by so-called nativists. Patrick Collins, who became Mayor of Boston, was beaten in one such riot as a youth. The Irish in Boston, New York and Philadelphia lived in horrible conditions upon arriving here. It wasn't until James Michael Curley's election to the positions of Mayor of Boston, U.S. Congressman, and Governor that the Bay State Irish began to make gains and overcome these wrongs.

Curley told the WASP bankers and gentry of Boston's Beacon Hill that, "It took the Irish to finally make Massachusetts a decent place to live." Curley fought hard for all other ethnic groups as well. Surges of anti-Irish attitudes such as those perpetuated by the Herald are throwbacks to the bad old days.

We here in Boston today, though, lack politicians with courage enough to stand up for the Irish. Some of our misguided Irish Americans feel that because they are prominent in politics or business, they should not take notice or show concern about slurs. Anti-Irish slurs know no socioeconomic boundaries. They are meant for all of us.

Bernardo O'Higgins

Pope John Paul II recently visited Chile and celebrated Mass at Bernardo O'Higgins Park. Bernardo O'Higgins led Chile to freedom from Spain. O'Higgins, in the early and mid 1800s was a brave general who fought for freedom, and he became Chile's first President. Today this Irishman with Mayo roots is revered as the Father of Chile.

2/3 in Britain Want Army Out of North

LONDON — British troops should be pulled out of Northern Ireland, according to nearly two-thirds of people in Britain. More than half the population believes Britain spends too much on its military presence in the North.

These are the findings of a pool conducted by the Daily Express.

The poll, published last week was conducted among 1,103 people aged over 18 in 74 constituencies throughout Britain. It is the first on the Northern question since 1984 and shows a gradual change in attitudes.

The proportion of people who would like to see the army withdrawn immediately has stayed at 22 percent, while those who would like to see a phased withdrawal has increased by eight percent to 39 percent. And 55 percent believes military spending in the North is costing the British taxpayer too much.

Only 34 percent are in favor of British troops remaining while violence continues — four percent fewer than in 1984. The poll shows that Catholics and Protestants would vote almost identically for an immediate withdrawal, although more Catholics would favor a phased withdrawal.

Labor and Alliance Party voters heavily outnumbered Tories on both propositions.

The Irish question was not given priority by any of those polled in a list of problems facing Britain. Forty-five percent blamed religion as the major cause of the troubles.

Only nine percent believed the North's future should be left in the hands of its politicians. Seventy percent considered the Rev. Ian Paisley a force of evil, with just six percent believing him a positive influence for good.

First Installment of U.S. Aid Released to N.I. and Ireland

WASHINGTON D.C. — U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY) states that President Reagan has authorized the release of the first $50 million in United States aid to Northern Ireland and Ireland after certifying to Congress that the funds will be distributed "in accordance with the principle of equality of opportunity and non-discrimination in employment regardless of religious affiliation."

Biaggi is Chairman of the 119 Member, bi-partisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs. He said the certification is required under the terms of the legislation passed by Congress last year which authorizes a total of $120 million over three years in first-time aid. "The Ad Hoc Committee worked especially hard to get the conditions included in the final bill since it was not in the legislation as originally proposed. The President's certification means that not only will the intent of Congress be honored, but that both communities in Ireland will benefit from the U.S. aid."

The President's certification also includes his determination that the Board of the International Fund, which will distribute the monies, "as a whole is broadly representative of the interests of the communities in Ireland and Northern Ireland." The International Fund is chaired by Mr. Charles Brett, former Chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and former Chairman of the Irish Labor Party.

Biaggi noted that the President's communication to Congress indicates that funds from the International Fund will be allocated to allow Northern Ireland to receive 75 percent and the Republic of Ireland 25 percent of the resources. Among the specific criteria to be used in awarding funds will be a particular proposal's ability to:

- generate employment in both Northern Ireland and Ireland.
- leverage private investment and support.

Biaggi noted that in a separate meeting held between the U.S. Consul General to Northern Ireland, Bob Meyers and Ad Hoc Committee Staff Director Robert Blancato several weeks ago, it was disclosed that more than 2,000 applications for funding have been received by the Board just in Northern Ireland. Preliminary indications show that both communities are evenly represented in terms of applications.

Biaggi pledged to continue to "closely monitor the actual distribution of aid in the weeks ahead."

Congressional Group Issues St. Patrick's Peace Message

A bi-partisan group of 53 House and Senate Members led by U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY) have issued a St. Patrick's Day message of peace declaring "that on St. Patrick's Day and everyday, we maintain a firm commitment to assisting the just cause of peace, justice and freedom for Northern Ireland and Ireland."

Biaggi is Chairman of the bi-partisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs which is celebrating its 10th anniversary during 1987. His message was co-signed by Sens. Orrin Hatch (R-UT), Alfonse D'Amato (R-NY), Patrick Leahy (D-VT) and Dennis DeConcini (D-AZ). In addition, it was co-signed by Reps. Benjamin Gilman (R-NY), Bob Borski (D-PA), Norman Lent (R-

The message said that recently approved first-time U.S. economic aid to Northern Ireland would be a "tangible and timely investment in Northern Ireland's peaceful future" provided that conditions ensuring funds are provided to both communities without discrimination are strictly adhered to.

The Congressional message expressed deep concern over continued economic discrimination in Northern Ireland. It specifically called for passage of legislation to require American companies who provide 11 percent of the employment in Northern Ireland to adopt the MacBride Principles of Fair Employment and Non-Discrimination "as a new code of corporate conduct in Northern Ireland."

The Congressional message called for a "change" in our nation's visa policy as it affects political figures from Ireland visiting the United States. The Biaggi statement charges that "present visa policies have led to the exclusion of certain segments and to deny one segment is to impose censorship on elements of the Irish American community."

The St. Patrick's Day message of peace included a strong condemnation of violence, both civilian and official, in Northern Ireland. It specifically called for the British government to undertake the complete and independent investigation into allegations that the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the main police force in Northern Ireland, practiced a "shoot to kill" policy which may have resulted in the deaths of 18 unarmed persons over the past four years.

The message concluded, "On this the 200th anniversary year of our own Constitution, let us recommit ourselves to the goal of having Ireland, like the United States, be one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

N.Y. Comptroller's Progress On Investment Act Reported

Assemblyman John C. Dearie, in a follow-up report on the State Comptroller's meeting with over a dozen Irish-American leaders last month in New York, outlined Mr. Regan's progress on the implementation of the Northern Ireland Investment Act which became effective January 1st of this year.

"The Comptroller outlined to the delegation his two-prong approach to incorporating the MacBride Principles of Fair Employment into the New York State pension investment portfolio in twelve of the twenty-six U.S. companies doing business in Northern Ireland.

"Namely, placing pressure as the bill outlines on U.S. companies which receive New York pension monies, now totaling approximately $1 billion, to adopt the nine-point fair employment code, or risk losing those investments to other U.S. companies which will subscribe to the Principles, and secondly, pressuring those same companies through the use of shareholder resolutions to end discrimination against minority Catholic employees in the workplace," the Bronx lawmaker explained.

Key to the effectiveness of the Comptroller's implementation plan is the development of a corporate survey which will be forwarded to the twenty-six U.S. companies doing business in Northern Ireland in an effort to gather employment and hiring information so as to examine the workplace policies relative to minority Catholic employees and the MacBride Principles of Fair Employment.

According to Dearie, "serious reservations were raised by the Irish-American delegation as to the content and development of such a survey. Specifically, their objections were predicated on the appointment of a March Merzingham who is alleged to have anti-MacBride Principles associations."

The Comptroller agreed to re-evaluate the contract for the development of the survey, and further, will invite a Task Force of Irish-American leaders to review the corporate survey for their suggestions and recommendations prior to its final form. A draft of the survey is expected shortly.

"Besides the provisions of the MacBride Bill, the Comptroller possesses and plans to utilize a second powerful weapon in the effort to end discrimination against minority Catholic employees in U.S. companies in Northern Ireland, and that is the use of shareholder resolutions," Dearie explained.

The Comptroller pointed to his plan of active participation in the corporate shareholder meetings of U.S. companies that operate businesses in Northern Ireland, with focus on advancing resolutions which would change corporate policies that presently allow employment discrimination to exist in their plants.

According to Comptroller Regan three percent of corporate shareholders are needed before filing and advancing resolutions, a process which he explained his office is aggressively undertaking with the first filings to begin this August for the 1988 shareholder meetings.

Irish-American leaders attending the review meeting on the Comptroller's implementation plan were: Nick Murphy, National President, Aoh; Jack Irwin, NYS AOH President; Kathy Holmes, Chairwoman, American-Irish Congress; John Finucane, Director, American-Irish PEC; Michael Cummings, State Board AOH; Tom Connaughton, President, Grand Council of Emerald Societies; Johanna Brown, Westchester Irish Committee; Joe Jamison, Irish-American Labor Coalition; Martin Galvin, Editor, Irish People; Mary Holt Moore, Bronx Gaelic League; and Patricia O'Hagan, President, Irish-American Unity Conference.

Another meeting of the Irish-American leadership delegation with the Comptroller on the implementation of the MacBride Principles is tentatively planned for mid-summer.

It is important to point out that the legislation already passed in other states and that proposed in Minnesota encourages investment in Northern Ireland. It does not call for disinvestment but stresses the positive action of compliance with fair employment principles. We look for the people of Minnesota to stand solidly behind this effort in human rights.

Minnesota Gears Up for MacBride Principles Bill

Irish Americans often remark that they do not want to be involved in the situation in Northern Ireland because of the violence that occurs there on a daily basis. One of the root causes of that violence is the discrimination in hiring that has occurred in that country during the past sixty years. Americans are shocked to hear that in most of Northern Ireland's largest manufacturers the percentage of Catholics employed is approximately 5%, although Catholics comprise roughly 40% of the population. In general, Catholics, when hired, fill the lowest paying jobs in these companies. Unemployment among Catholic males in all segments of the economy is approximately 40% and as high as 80% in many of the Catholic ghettos.

Irish Americans, with the help of Americans of all national origins, have taken the first steps to help remedy this situation which is so repugnant to them. Irish American organizations have joined forces to promote legislation to implement the MacBride Principles, a set of nine principles named after Sean MacBride, distinguished Irish Statesman and Nobel Peace Laureate. Legislation has already been approved in Massachusetts, New York, Chicago, and New York City which requires that state or city funds invested in American corporations with operations in Northern Ireland be invested only in those corporations which abide by the MacBride Principles. Similar legislation is now pending or in the process of being introduced in New Jersey, Connecticut, Illinois, Michigan, California, Rhode Island, and in our own state of Minnesota.

This will be a golden opportunity for the American people to do something for Ireland in the area of human rights by letting the British Government know that we are looking over their shoulders and that we do not tolerate such blatant discrimination in American corporations. We hope that our example will ultimately affect British policy in this area which to date has been one largely of compiling statistics but doing nothing.

It is important to point out that the legislation already passed in other states and that proposed in Minnesota encourages investment in Northern Ireland. It does not call for disinvestment but stresses the positive action of compliance with fair employment principles. We look for the people of Minnesota to stand solidly behind this effort in human rights.

FREEDOM FOR ALL IRELAND

Message from Freedom For All Ireland Committee Chairman

Sunday, May 3rd, 1987 was a special day for the Freedom For All Ireland Committee. On that day at 3:00 p.m., a beautiful Mass was offered in St. Agnes Cathedral, Rockville Center, NY, bringing together men and women to implore God's intercession for peace and reunification in Ireland.

The Mass was celebrated by Fathers McIver, Twomy, McGuire, McManus and Millar. Our Chairman was the very capable and dedicated member of Division 3, Nassau, John Bownes, who hails from Co. Sligo. John deserves a vote of thanks for a wonderful job. As in previous years we were escorted into the Cathedral by the Tara Pipers Band from Massapequa, Long Island. The District Attorney of Nassau County, Denis Dillon, acted as moderator, and various members of the National and State Boards participated in the readings. Noel Kingston favored us with his lovely singing voice, and the ushers for the afternoon were the Nassau County Division Presidents, and County President, Hugh Forde. We were very pleased to have our National President, Nick Murphy, the Ladies National President, Sheila Clifford, and N.Y. State President Jack Irwin with us on this auspicious occasion. Many of our politicians were also present, including County Executive, Thomas Gulotta, who took time from his busy schedule to attend.

This is the ninth year that the Freedom for All Ireland Committee has sponsored this event. We thank all who joined with us to implore God's help. To those who were not able to attend, please try to do so next year; you will be advised of the date in the future. We really need to pray together for God's help in our cause.

We must not forget the suffering and oppressed people of Northeast Ireland and especially the youth who are in jail for love of country. Please remember them in your prayers. Further, I would suggest that every Division, County and State try to have at least one Mass offered during the year for peace and the reunification of Ireland.

Do you realize that there are approximately 40 million Americans of Irish blood in this great country of ours? This is a sizable amount of people — a strong voice if it would only speak — we must be heard. Write to your elected officials and let them know your feelings about the British presence in Northern Ireland. Our government will get involved if there is enough pressure brought about from us. While you're at it, drop a line to Margaret Thatcher as well, and let her know of your resentment to Britain being in Northeast Ireland. You all know her address, 10 Downing Street, London. We must speak up if we are ever to see an end to the conflict in Ireland. It's time we were heard; it's time for a United Ireland!!!!

God bless!

MARTIN HIGGINS
There's No Turning Back
The next time you wonder about whether or not we are making any progress at all, take a deep breath and consider the recent past. Our journey together toward peace, justice, and unity for all of Ireland has been a series of gigantic leaps coupled with inch-by-inch advances. But even the longest journey begins with a single step forward.

At the outset, let us be honest. Our ranks are filled with blue collars, white collars, housewives, senior citizens, college students — and thank God for the Jews, Italians, and others whose dedication inspires us all. We have taken on the government of a centuries-old (though shrinking!) empire that has a modern army, an intelligence (?) service, and influence which extends to our own American government and media.

Yet, we have seen the concept of the MacBride Principles begin to take root at the federal and state levels, sending tremors of panic through Stormont and Whitehall. There has been an emerging recognition that the explosive situation in the north of Ireland has evolved from longstanding and pervasive discrimination fostered by Britain. Thus we have seen our government ban the sale of arms to the Royal Ulster Constabulary and, more recently, the cancellation of the U.S. Air Force contract with Short Brothers. Amnesty International has repeatedly condemned human rights abuses in the Six Counties and some of our own congressmen have begin to question the State Department's heavy-handed use of the McCarran-Walter Act to deny visas to Irish nationalists seeking to share the truth with the American public. In addition, we have gained some true friends in elective office at every level who have aided and encouraged our development as a special interest group that is starting to enjoy some clout, but still has a lot to learn.

Assuredly, we must continue to promote the accelerating momentum for change in the Six Counties. We cannot permit defeatist attitudes of our own impatience to sidetrack us. Regardless of the unflattering labels used to describe many of us, we are an important part of the Irish nationalist movement, as well as of the American electorate, and we are determined that things will never be exactly the same again in the north of Ireland.

Ireland's Tragedy — Labour's Disgrace

By FIONNBARA O'DOCHARTAIGH, B.A., O.N. Dip.
League for Social Justice, Derry, N.I.

As the bells rang out, and the few ships at the nearby docks welcomed in 1987, memories of new year hopes for 1967 came flooding back. That was a year that was to mark the establishment of the six-county civil rights movement. The initial meeting in Belfast attracted a mere forty activists from the republican movement, Wolfe Tone Society, trade unionists and a sprinkling of academics. From Derry, in a van that was hardly road-worthy, travelled a Dublin-born lecturer from Magee University College, an Englishwoman, who later stood as a local Labour Party candidate, and myself, which was not the most heartening of delegations from a city that had suffered most since partition under the Stormont regime.

The discussions included hopes of support in Britain from the Labour Party there. Twenty years later it is still an issue which all too many 'socialists' would much rather have swept under their threadbare carpets. Yet this is a timely topic which certain elements within the labour movement have in recent times sought to convince anti-imperialists here of adopting policies and tactics that would in effect amount to 'a new departure.'

There are signs that our labour movement visitors from 'across the 1967, Britain left.

Earlier in 1964, Henry Hopkinson, a Colonial Office Minister of State, was more forthright in regard to Cyprus:

"It has always been understood and agreed that there are certain territories in the Commonwealth which, owing to their particular circumstances, can never expect to be independent."

Cyprus became independent in August 1960.

And, incidentally, the freedom forces, I mean the terrorists, in both these countries used violence. Totally unjustified, of course!

THE VOTE

At the conclusion of his address, Adams asked that those voting consider the arguments carefully and not simply accept the "arrogant, elitist, ignorant and one-sided view of the war in Ireland." He reminded them of the predictably ill-informed arguments they had heard from those proposing the motion and asked that if they couldn't reject the motion because they felt it supported the IRA, then they could abstain.

In the event, almost half did abstain, with 348 voting for the motion, 47 rejecting it, and 305 abstaining. Simon Stephens, the Oxford Union president, commenting on the number of abstentions said:

"The members obviously feel it is a more complex issue than the national press makes out."

Gerry Adams said he was pleased with the outcome of the debate and delighted at the success of the two-day visit, which had also included meetings with representatives of the Irish and black communities.

Danny Morrison pointed out that, despite media hysteria and opposition from the Conservative Party, the numbers who abstained at the end of the debate was very high and this demonstrated an acceptance by many of Adams' argument that the motion was too one-sided.

water' have had some measure of success. However, it must be made abundantly clear that it is the British Labour and Trade Union movement that should consider 'a new departure', for Ireland's tragedy is based on Labour's disgrace. 1987 promises to be election year in both Britain and the 26 Counties/Free State. Time was when the nationalist people and some republican leaders, believed that a combination of a British Labour Government and a Fianna Fail Government in Dublin would bring about an end to partition. That such parties would join forces to eliminate the cruel and blatant discrimination that had been institutionalised to the point of being deemed 'natural' by the Orange social Darwinists. It was the civil rights movement, born from humble beginnings, that challenged that notion, yet two decades later, many northern progressive writers still find much to complain about in the spheres of jobs and basic human rights under the Direct Rule from the Westminster regime.

And time was when unionists looked on as gospel every word that fell from the stiff upper lip of a Brit Prime Minister. The nationalists were disillusioned about Labour's attitude to Ireland by the very first post-war British Government. Former major, Clement Attlee, the small moustachioed, inoffensive-looking man, who was the greatest political hatchet man of the century behind his mild exterior, was the architect of the infamous "guarantee" to the northern unionists and their Orange Order puppeteers. Such has bedevilled all attempts at real political dialogue with the northern majority since 1949. Home Secretary Jimmy Morrison was the most ardent pro-unionist of them all, despite his almost poverty-stricken background. In him the landlords, big ranchers, and bigoted employers found their ablest ally. Ernie Bevin, the 'champion of democracy' in Britain and of the underdog, was a strong supporter of the execrable Stormont regime. Those men copperfastened partition at a time when another approach from them might have led to Irish, and British, history taking a very different path from that which led inevitably to the present impasse.

Nor did the Wilson nor Callaghan administrations show any real sympathy with the cause of Irish unity, despite the condemnations in the early sixties of unionist excesses. The Labour M.P.s who came to places like Derry were here not as genuine seekers after truth but looking for material with which to clobber the Tories at Westminster. The most unionist of all the British Secretaries of State was former miner Roy Mason, who was more interested in cultivating his upper crust unionist friends than doing anything about the problems of the minority population.

So the coming election in Britain means little in constitutional terms to the nationalists in the north. It makes little difference whether Thatcher or Kinnoch rules. It seems unlikely that a Labour Government would rate the economic recovery of these six occupied counties high on its priority list. Certainly there will be no let-up in the dawn raids, physical and mental abuses in the various military and police holding centres, the shoot-to-kill policy, and all that is involved in the word repression, day in, day out, year in, year out. Kinnoch, a man who couldn't see or hear the cries of the miners in their just struggle, is hardly going to lose much sleep for those of us in the nationalist ghettos. Class collaboration is the watch word of Kinnoch, not class war, that would involve much more than one visit to a miners' picket line in his native Wales. If he didn't take a positive stand against police violence against his class brothers in his own country, only a fool would expect him to speak out now on the status of violence of British troops across the Irish Sea, especially when there are fewer votes to be had and certainly no marginals to be won.

As for the other side of the duo, nationalist belief that Fianna Fail is any more republican, or less partitionist, than the other southern parties disappeared long ago, in the wake of two unsuccessful referendums to do away with proportional representation, and the almost total absence of any day to day indications that the partition problem remained a real target. Even now the general notion in the nationalist north is that Dublin and London look at her more in exasperation than determination to get something achieved.

But on the unionist side the change has been even more clear-cut. Gone are the days when any British Premier could be assured of a rapturous welcome to "the yard" or Hillsborough. Gone are the garden parties for British Ministers who visit. Gone is the unquestioning alliance with the party that Randolph Churchill counselled "to play the Orange card" a hundred years ago. Even the title "Conservative and Unionist Party" no longer means a thing.

Only a few weeks ago a unionist public representative attacked "this pernicious British Government." Their Lordships Craigavon and Brookeborough could never have conceived such a descriptive of "our" Government.

Yes, people might say that little changes in these six-occupied counties. I don't know about that — but perceptions of who are friends have come a long way in half a century.

The St. Brigid Degree Team assisted in the installation of the officers.

At the close of the Convention, the St. Brigid Degree Team conferred Major Degrees on twelve sisters of the Rose Kennedy, Ethel Kennedy and the Jean Donovan divisions.

New York Area Essay Winners Receive Prizes

Winners in the New York Area of the Annual Irish Essay Contest sponsored by the LAOH National Board were recently announced and prizes awarded. "Irish Folklore" was the subject for elementary students and the winner was Patricia Manlig of Our Lady of Lourdes School in Queens Village. She won on both the county and state levels. For high schools the subject was "Our Lady of Knock," with the first prize going to Sharen Hudac of Benjamin Cardozo High School on the county level.

County checks for $25.00 went to each first prize winner, awarded by County Historian Marianne Fleischer and Division 13 Historian Mary Louise Kelly. Mrs. Mary Mannan, New York State historian, presented a check for $75.00 to Patricia Manlig. Each winner read excerpts from her award-winning essay.

Early in April a successful Baltimore County Convention was held. The new officers are a happy blend of the experienced and the newly elected. Serving second terms are: President Eleanor Lukowski; Treasurer Catherine Edenfield; Missions Lorraine Powers; Catholic Action, Eleanor Goodwin; Sentinel Evelyn Hagerty. Newly elected are: Vice President Mary Burnham; Secretary Regina Diventi; Historian Margaret Fitzgerald; Mistress, Loretta Letke.

Also in April, Theresa Goodwin arranged a beautiful tribute to St. Brigid followed by a brunch and fellowship. The highlight was the Annual Mission Festival and Fashion Show for the benefit of the Columban Fathers, graced by the presence of National Mission Chairman Dorothy Fowler. Kelly Crawford of Division 14 and her committee as well as the Juniors who presented the colors and later danced, did a remarkable job.

Committees have been formed and plans are underway for the Irish Festival to be held in September. Yet another honor has been given to Past National President Sally Murphy, in her appointment as Chairman of the 1988 St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee. This is the first time a woman has been accorded the honor and responsibility.

Eileen McGinn is still at it raising money for the Notre Dame Hibernian Fund. This time the form is a November Cruise. Currently, attention rests on the State Convention to be held in June at Maryland's famous Ocean City Resort.

Division 1 held their Annual Irish Tea, which is the main charity event of the year. Cards were enjoyed following a very beautiful fashion show in which members of the Division served as models.

On May 28th the Annual St. Brigid's Breakfast took place at Queen of Peace Church. Mass was offered at 9:00 A.M. and a delicious breakfast was enjoyed by a large group. Fr. McEnilly, chaplain, was celebrant of the Mass and guest at the breakfast.

St. Patrick's Day was celebrated with attendance at St. Patrick's Church Mass, celebrated by Archbishop James A. Hickey. Following Mass members of the AOH and LAOH went to Arlington Cemetery to place wreaths on the grave of President John F. Kennedy. Shamrocks were placed on the grave of George Washington Parke Custer and a wreath on the Vietnam Memorial. In the evening a Dinner Dance was held at the Kennedy Warren Hotel.

On March eighteenth, members were saddened by the death of Connie Flannigan, one of the most active members in the D.C. area.

The Nuns of the Battlefield Mass was celebrated at St. Matthew's Cathedral. Miss Peggy Dee, historian, made arrangements for flowers to be placed at the monument, following which the Ladies gathered for luncheon at Gusti's. The District of Columbia held their Convention on June 6 at the Georgetown Holiday Inn.

IMMORTALITY

Do not stand by my grave and weep I am not there, I do not sleep I am a thousand winds that blow I am a diamond glint on snow I am the sunlight on ripened grain I am the gentle autumn rain When you awake in the morning hush

I am the swift unflinching rush of quiet birds in circling flight I am the soft star shine at night Do not stand by my grave and cry I am not there. . . . I did not die

Installation of officers was held at Hibernian Hall where members enjoyed a marvelous buffet, prepared by Fran and Clan, followed by dancing to the music of the Irishmen. Kathie Linton, national historian, had the pleasure and honor of installing her sister, Colleen O'Connor, as president. When you look at the sunny side of the street everything looks bright. The recent "big floods" hit the Akron Clubroom in a disastrous way. Flooding however, did not stop the Irish Spirit. Soon "Noah's Hibernians" marched back into the hall and began cleanup programs. As long as the opportunity presented itself, the Akronites decided to remodel and expand. There is always some good in everything. Come to Akron and see the remarkable changes.

St. Brigid's Division of Cincinnati installed their new officers following Mass at St. Xavier Church. Sharon McDermott was chosen to lead her group for the 1987-1988 season. Following installation a brunch was held at Egg Cetera on the skywalk. The traditional "Stealing of St. Patrick" took place after the annual Memorial Mass. A parade marched through the streets of Mount Adams and was witnessed by MINI, MINI people. Banners made by students at Purcell Marian High School depicting the thirty-two counties of Ireland were attached to the end of the pews in church and later carried in the parade. After the parade, a party was held at Hibernian Hall where MINI, MINI people had a very pleasant time.

Junior Division News

National Vice President Mary Bradley reports that one Junior Division has disbanded since the last National Convention. Junior Division 1 of Elizabeth, New Jersey, is no longer active. This is the same Division that was awarded a prize at our National Convention in Buffalo, and New Jersey is left without a Junior Division for a while at least.

Division 15 LAOH Juniors attended a special Mass and Rosary in honor of Our Lady of Knock; worked at Nassau's Annual Feis by running "Moonride" for the children; had a great time at their bowling party; donated $50.00 to Project Children.

The members also made up a food basket and presented it to a young father of 4 children, ages 2 - 7 who is very ill with leukemia.

Installation of officers was held and the group attended Westburg Music Fair and went to see "Mary Poppins." Other activities included a special Mass in honor of St. Brigid, enjoying the IceCapades show, and visiting "Queen of the Rosary," a home for retired, elderly nuns.

The Junior Girls in Troy, NY, are active and enthusiastic. Numerous successful bake sales have been held and a very profitable game to their credit. The group has made donations to numerous home front charities, including the Young Retarded Adult Party, Joseph's House for the homeless, Clothe a Child, Muscular Dystrophy, and the local Food Pantry.

Under the guidance of their leader, Mary T. Leatham, a cheer-up committee was instituted. Through this means, the girls learned how to communicate with those in need and how to send thank you notes.

On the lighter side, the Juniors have Roller Skating Parties and had a fulfilled trip to "Great Escape", an amusement park at Lake George.

Later during a social hour Annemarie O'Brien, Florida State president, presented a monetary award to David O'Connor, Florida winner in the High School Division of the National Irish Essay contest.

Hibernian Sports

Mike Heslin

BINGHAMTON, NY

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans! Let's talk sports.

This column is being written in early May. Not so long ago in early May a young man's fancy turned to baseball. Not so, anymore, Magee! The professional basketball season and the professional hockey season, the NBA and the NHL, are still involved in play-offs. YR, sorry to say, is bored by these elongated seasons. These leagues and teams will not be impressed by this, as these longer seasons are done to fill the coffers.

NBA — One of the great ones hung up his sneakers at the end of this season. Julius Irving of the Philadelphia 76ers or the "Sixers" as they are fondly called in the City of Brotherly Love, called it a day. This guy did everything asked of him. It is also said that he kept the ABA going for as long as it did. Without him, the ABA would have been gone before the merger. YR won't bore you by citing his records and stats. These you can find in most newspapers or in the NBA Annual. "Dr J" was not just another pretty face on the hardwood nor was he just another tall player who passed through the place on his talent with a basketball. "Dr J" was a player's player. He was more than that. He was a family man dedicated to the community in which he lived and played. The Sixers might miss him on the court but the whole NBA will miss him. When there is so much negative news about ball players these days, "Dr J" was The Role Model that kids could be told to follow. Lots of luck to "Dr J" in whatever he decides to do.

prosper is indeed dangerous. It contradicts the 1985 New Ireland Forum Report which concludes that the Ulster garrison is neither economically feasible nor politically desirable. Hume appears content to condemn future generations of Catholics to second class citizenship and the strife that inevitably results.

Americans rejected second class citizenship in 1776 and do so again today in advocating the adoption of the MacBride Principles by American firms in Northern Ireland. The American experience with affirmative action and equal opportunity has proven that whatever difficulties the MacBride Principles may bring, they are nothing compared to the dangers of religious and racial discrimination. In 1857 American abolitionist Frederick Douglass noted:

"Those who profess to favor freedom and yet deprecate agitation are men who want crops without plowing up the ground."

"Power concedes nothing without a demand. Find out just what people will submit to and you have found out the exact amount of injustice and wrong which will be imposed upon them."

If there is to be a peaceful end to institutional bigotry it must be demanded as a simple matter of human and civil rights. For John Hume to now denigrate American efforts to assert these rights on behalf of a beleaguered minority reveals a dark side to his leadership.

Catholic civil rights leader Stephen Cardinal Kim of South Korea stated at Christmas last year as his nation struggles with democracy:

"We are now confined in a darkness where there are no politics, no truths, no justices and no humanity. . . . We are at a crossroad of life and death where we should choose a campaign toward the light out of this darkness or remain in this darkness. . . . tearing each other down and slandering each other."

American advocacy of the MacBride Principles for use in the North of Ireland is just such a campaign toward the light. Mr. Hume's tearing at Americans and slandering their efforts at a time when Ireland too struggles with democracy calls into question his leadership and the credibility of the SDLP. His choice to remain in the darkness will afflict and impoverish generations to come.

Tom Gibbons of Queens AOH Is Senior Runner of the Year

Tom Gibbons, age 66, past president of Division 22, Queens, NY, was named senior runner of the year by the New York Road Runners Club at the Annual Awards Banquet at the Sheraton Center on February 28th. This was the fifth consecutive year that Gibbons has been nominated for the award and the third time that he has been recipient, the others coming in 1982 and 1983.

Tom has completed 38 marathons, including seven NYC and five Boston marathons. He was the first senior (60 plus) in the Galway, Ireland, Marathon in 1982. He holds a national age group record for 30 kilometers with a time of 2:03:47. Among his best performances was a 3:00:39 in the Philadelphia Marathon in 1982, and a 1:25:22 win in the Hispanic Half Marathon the same year.

He resides in Bellerose with his wife, Alice, and is the father of 9 children and 4 grandchildren. In addition to his running, which he started in 1977 at the age of 56, Tom, a native of Co. Mayo, is a member of this Division 22 Drama Group, "Cille Cais", which produces plays by Irish playwrights.

Division 22, founded by Harry Murphy, brother of National President Nick Murphy, is committed to the preservation of Irish culture and tradition. Each meeting includes a discussion on Irish history by Division Historian Pat Rooney or County Historian Pat Moynihan. Other events sponsored by the division include ceilies, literary discussions and an annual St. Patrick's Day Mass complete with harp and bagpipes. Jim Hollywood, retired NYC police sergeant, is the current president.

networks. In New York, a fan cannot watch many of the Yankee games on free TV (WPIX) because Geo. Steinbrenner negotiated a deal with Sports Channel to cover x number of games. While this put coins in the Yankee coffers, it alienated many of the Yankee fans who do not get to see them when they cannot go to the Stadium. The Yankees are not the only team to do this. Every one of these teams have incensed their most vocal fans. Do these teams care? Are they concerned about collecting the tolls at the turnstiles? Apparently not. Where will this lead? Possibly to games played in stadiums at anytime of day or night with just the teams doing their thing. In a control booth somewhat distant, this picture is mixed with pictures and sounds of a crowd. This could all be stored on tape and played at a later date. Shades of Big Brother? Possibly but more like taking advantage of the technology which is available. Mind-boggling!

On the local scene, the City is trying to get support to build a stadium and put a minor league team in it. Like any other proposal of this type in many cities, this one has its advocates and its detractors. Some of these detractors point out the fact mentioned in this column under "Hockey" about the poor fan support. YR doesn't think that this holds true for baseball, as the ticket prices should be more in line with what used to be called a "Cheap Night Out!". Another item mentioned by these detractors is that this area will only support winners. This may or may not be true. There is certain historical data to support this theory. On the other hand, this is a new generation with whom the city is dealing. This new generation supposedly is more concerned with the quality of life and the area rather than the material things of winning and those trappings. YR is in favor of the stadium. He will take a lot of heat from those he knows who aren't at all in favor of it, for many reasons not mentioned here from political to personal.

Baseball — The Milwaukee Brewers, "The Brew Crew," finally lost after tying the record for winning 13 games in a row. YR remembers going to County Stadium in Milwaukee when the Braves were enthroned there after moving from Boston and before moving to Atlanta. Milwaukee was a great "Liberty" town and a great baseball town even back then. Their fans deserve a break!

The "Tribe," those Cleveland Indians, have sports scribes saying all sorts of nice things about them. The last time the Indians won a pennant was 1954 with guys such as Bob Lemon and Early Wynn, and an aging Bob Feller. The Series were another story. The Tribe lost to the Giants 4 straight! Will history repeat? Time will tell.

Fans throughout the nation are upset with some of the contracts that the teams have inked with various "closed circuit" television

N.Y. Grand Parade Dedicated to Nation's Medal of Honor Winners

New York City's 226th St. Patrick's Day Parade was this year dedicated to all recipients of the U.S. Congressional Medal of Honor. Of the 3,412 Medal of Honor winners in American history, 257 were Irish-born, and 2,018 have Irish surnames.

The parade, with nearly 150,000 marchers, the largest in the free world, stepped off at 11:30 a.m. from 44th Street and Fifth Avenue, led by the 69th New York Infantry Regiment of the New York National Guard, which since 1861 has provided military escort for this parade of the Irish societies in New York. New York's WPIX-TV provided four hours of syndicated television coverage; for the 39th year, Jack McCarthy was the parade commentator.

Parade chairman Francis P. Beirne, originally from County Leitrim, states that over one million New Yorkers lined Fifth Avenue in their traditional tribute to St. Patrick. The 1987 Parade Grand Marshal was John E. Lawe, International President of the Transport Workers Union. This year's parade dedication echoes the traditional parade theme of "Justice, Unity and Peace in Ireland," and recognizes the special contribution the Irish have made to the growth of American freedom. Native sons of Ireland account for the largest single national group represented among the recipients of this nation's highest military honor for service around the world since the medal was first awarded 125 years ago to honor Civil War valor.

Various Medal of Honor societies in the United States report that nearly 500 Medal holders have been lost to history except for their names. Many organizations, including the Ancient Order of Hibernians (the core of the St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee for over 100 years) have joined in the effort to retrieve the memory of these nearly forgotten American heroes.

The first St. Patrick's Day Parade held in New York took place in 1762. Irish-born Medal holders include at least one born in Ireland in St. Patrick's Day, Spanish-American War hero John Fitzgerald, born March 17, 1873 in Limerick, Ireland.

The Fighting 69th

The 69th New York Infantry Regiment, that most Irish of American regiments, earned its nickname "The Fighting 69th" during that great national tragedy — the American Civil War. Ever since the 1950's the honor of leading the New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade as Military Escort to the Irish Societies has fallen to "The Fighting 69th." Isn't it ironic, in a very positive sort of a way, that playing for the 69th in 1987 was the regimental band of the Virginia Military Institute — VMI.

The 69th and VMI — both are regiments with noble traditions of citizen-soldiers ready in every time of peril to vindicate the honor or defend the rights of the American land they both love. They fought in battle on opposite sides in that bitter Civil War — the 69th in every campaign of the Army of the Potomac, but most notably in the heroic assault upon Marye's Heights in the Battle of Fredericksburg on December 13, 1862, and VMI triumphantly defending the Shenandoah Valley at New Market on May 15, 1864. Today they march together up Fifth Avenue united as Americans, symbolizing the reunification of North and South in this great land.

It must be our prayer that Ireland, similarly, might see the reunification of North and South as "one nation, under God, with Liberty and Justice for all."

Banners Old and New

DISPLAYING Queens County, New York's new banner are County Past Presidents Harry Murphy and Ann Neville.

By VINCE McCORMACK

Good evening, Ladies and Gentlemen, and welcome to the 112th Annual N.Y. Queens County Ball. Before we go on with the fun and festivities, we have a unique ceremony to share with each other — the dedication and blessing of the new Queens County banner.

We all know a few timeless AOH members who were probably present at the old banner's dedication, and may be around for the next one, but, for most of us, this is a once-in-a-lifetime experience.

When I was asked to emcee this part of the program I accepted the honor gladly, but wondered what I could say that would be appropriate on such a rare and important occasion. So, I sought out the old banner and found it in the corner of a storage cabinet.

The old banner's gold braid was cracked and broken, its green field was very faded and so worn in some places as to be almost transparent. As I touched its ancient folds, a piece of paper slipped out and fluttered to the floor. I picked it up and read it, and I'd like to read it to you now.

What is a Banner? Is it a bright piece of cloth, edged in gold piping, laden with symbols that mean everything to some and nothing to others? I don't know.

I do know the tingle of anticipation at being unpacked and assembled and raised up in the midst of a crowd on some windy side street — to hear voices, old and young, call: "There's the Banner, we must be up there!" — as I lean against someone's shoulder, surrounded by old friends' greetings, practicing drum beats and the

Queens Division 3 Installs

I know the eager feeling at the call: "Look alive now, we're moving out!" and the thrill as the lines form and I'm lifted high and held straight as we turn into the Avenue with the Band's rousing "Garryowen" or some other stirring piece setting the marching step.

I know the warmth of welcome that surges out from the crowds on both sides of the street to swirl about and engulf me in the fun and joy and glory of — being IRISH — on that Special Day.

I have flown lightly, buoyed up in just the right breeze, causing no burden to my bearers, floating along in brilliant sunshine; I have bleamed in the sodden wetness of soft rain or swirling snow; I have often been the only splash of color under a still, gray, threatening sky; I have tried the muscle and courage of my bearers in a following wind that threatened to carry me away or a frontal blast that pressed me back so that the pole showed through like my backbone. But always, I have been treated with respect and honor and care as I bore aloft the symbols of Ireland and America and Hibernianism.

I'm old now, but tho' I rest in my cover in the silence of some dark closet or display myself quietly on some meeting hall wall, I will be at peace knowing I have done well and have spent my time in Good Company.

To my young and beautiful successor, I wish a long and joyous career, the greetings of Hibernians yet unborn, and the hope that in your lifetime you will lead us in a parade cheering a Free and United Ireland. Farewell, and God bless.

seven days without recourse to lawyer, family, or priest, and be interrogated in special centers for that space of time; prisoners have died and been maimed under this interrogation; it is in these interrogations that "confessions" have been obtained; 85% of internees have been convicted on the basis of such confessions. Britain had been embarrassed worldwide by the policy of internment without trial and changes to the "more acceptable" method of crushing opposition by use of the Diplock courts.

1972 — Bloody Sunday — British paratroopers shoot and kill 13 unarmed people on the streets of Derry, wound many others, during a peaceful demonstration.

1976 — Britain decides to criminalize the war in Northern Ireland. British authorities announce that all prisoners convicted after March 1, 1976 are to be denied political status and confined in the H-Blocks of Long Kesh. British propaganda intensifies and tries to sell to the world the idea that Irish nationalists in Northern Ireland are terrorists and criminals. Trials are delayed so that new prisoners could be "tried and convicted" under the new system. Prisoners in the Maze Prison (Long Kesh) begin a blanket protest against the revocation of special status. Ultimately, up to 300 men engage in the painful blanket protest, refusing to cooperate in any way with their jailers, and so enduring hunger, beatings, painful body searches, mental anguish, extended sentences.

1976 — Britain uses a special force, the SAS, similar to the "Black and Tans" operating in civilian clothes, to terrorize nationalists. As Britain employed the Black and Tans during the War of Irish Independence, so the English Government now employs a new "anti-terrorist" service operating secretly and in civilian clothes, in close alliance with Protestant paramilitary armies, to smash nationalist resistance. This secret army is known as SAS (Strategic Air Services).

1980 — the Blanket Protest continues. Some men go on hunger strike to the death in order to protest their imprisonment and seek recognition as political prisoners of England. The men call off the hunger strike when Britain yields. Ulster Loyalists threaten Britain. Britain manages on its promises. World opinion is becoming aroused.

1981 — The Year of the Hunger Strikers — A prisoner in Long Kesh, one of a group on renewed hunger strike, is elected Member of the British Parliament. This fact deals a major blow to the British Government's contention that the IRA lacks widespread support among the Catholic and nationalist population of Ireland. When Bobby Sands, the newly elected Member of Parliament, dies on hunger strike, 400 representatives of worldwide media attend his funeral attended also by 100,000 mourners.

The world watches in horror as nine others die on hunger strike while Britain refuses to negotiate.

"As a result of this hunger strike, people throughout the world who previously had no interest in Ireland (or perhaps weren't sure what corner of the globe it was in) now know that its basically a colonial situation and no amount of expensive British Foreign Office propaganda will ever change their minds.

"The fools, the fools, the fools, They have left us our Fenian dead And while Ireland holds these graves Ireland unfree shall never be at peace."

An Outline of Irish History And Northern Ireland

6000 B.C. — Earliest known inhabitants in Ireland.

3000 B.C. — Farming communities in Ireland; megalithic tombs constructed.

1500 B.C. — Irish bronze and gold work exported overseas.

250 B.C. — Speakers of present Celtic language arrive in Ireland.

432 A.D. — St. Patrick arrives in Ireland.

700 A.D. — Celtic metal working reaches peak of achievement. Celtic Society, culture and Church prosper in Ireland.

1169 — Anglo-Norman invasion of Ireland. By means of military force, treaty, plantation, coercion, and English-made law, England spends the following 500 years in consolidating control over Ireland. Celtic society eventually collapses.

1366 — Statutes of Kilkenny 1494 — Poyning's Law

Comparable in nature to the Nazi racial laws of the 1930s in their deep-seated contempt for the Gael and the genocidal implication of their enforcement. Laws forbidding speaking of the Irish language, and participation in political, educational or economic rights. No Irishman was permitted to own land, bear arms or practice their religion under penalty of death.

1606-10 — Plantation of Ulster — Defeat of Ulster Rebels — the defeat of the O'Neill clan produced a state of seige. Protestant England demanded the Gaels renounce Catholicism within a year or be stripped of all property. They refused and their land was given to British and Scots who had served the Crown. The Gaels were reduced to serfdom and, in essence, became "taigs" (slaves) or croppies. They were made to work their original land as tenant farmers paying outrageous rents and were kept at bare survival level.

1641 — The Rising of Ulster — Leaders of the old Ulster families — O'Neill, Magennis, O'Hanlon, O'Hagen, MacMahon, McGuire, O'Quinn, O'Farrell, O'Reilly — led an uprising that in one night reconquered the province sending the Planters to the cities that they could still hold. From this uprising stemmed a rumor of a "Great Popish Massacre" readily believed in England. 600,000 Protestants were supposedly slaughtered. There were at the time only 200,000 Protestants in Ireland. This rumor was so solidly believed that there was no trouble raising an Army against the perpetrators of the Popish Massacre.

1649 — Retribution: Cromwell — Elizabeth I unleashed Oliver Cromwell on the Irish people, a man whose name is synonymous with ruthless butchery. The Irish people first got a taste of him at Drogheda. When he took over this city he loosed his soldiers for three days and three nights orgy of slaughter. Out of a garrison of 3,000 men only 30 survived. Countless women and children were slaughtered. Churches where the people fled were set afire. Children were roasted on spits and they were also used as shields by Cromwell's soldiers. Cromwell wrote to the Speaker of the House of Commons — "It has pleased God to bless our endeavour in Drogheda . . . we put to the sword the whole number . . . This hath been a marvelous great mercy."

On October 2, 1649 the English Parliament proclaimed a Thanksgiving Day and by unanimous vote placed upon the records, "That the House does approve of the execution done at Drogheda as an act of justice to them and mercy to others who may be warned by it."

1650s — The Diaspora — When the war ended "peace" was established. Most men had been killed off. Those that remained along with young women, boys and girls, were shipped into slavery to the American colonies and the West Indies. Numbers sent to slavery are estimated at between 30,000 and 80,000. On the Continent, the exiled Irish became Chancellors of Universities, Court Physicians, Professors, Field Marshals, Admirals, Ambassadors. But in their own homeland, the Cromwellian Settlement was taking place. All fertile land belonging to the Irish were by order of Parliament declared to belong to the British. The native Irish were relegated to the infertile land of Connacht . . . where there was "not wood enough on which to hang a man, water enough to drown him, nor earth enough to bury him."

Before 1641, the British in Ireland were to the Irish as two to eleven. After the Cromwellian Settlement, 3/4 of the lands and 5/6 of the houses belonged to British settlers.

1685 — James II, the Catholic son of Mary became king and tried to establish reform in Ireland. His attempts were viewed with horror in England.

1690 — William of Orange overthrows James in Ireland at the Battle of the Boyne. Hence, the term "Orangemen" came into being. This is the battle celebrated in Ulster on the Twelfth of July every year with a big parade sponsored by the "Orange" lodges. These parades are a display of power and used as a reminder of who possesses said power.

1798 — The Year of the French — Another attempt at rebellion fails after French ships and forces fail to succeed.

1801 — Act of Union — All political representation placed in London.

1829 — Catholic Emancipation Act — Catholics enter Parliament.

1845-48 — The Great Irish Famine — At the time of the famine, Ireland was the top exporter of food in the British Empire. Peasants raised cattle, oats, wheat and other goods but depended on potatoes as their main source of food. When the potato crop failed the Irish were without food. The British refused to close the ports and use the exports to feed the people. Many landowners needed the sale of these goods to pay large debts. So 5 million Irish starved to death with "Grass stains" on their mouths. Hundreds of thousands of others left Ireland bound for America, Australia and New Zealand. Thousands of those died of fever on the ships and never reached the "Promised Land" they were looking for.

1838 — Fenian movement established to oppose English rule.

1867 — Fenian uprising crushed.

1870s — Massive Evictions of tenant farmers by landlords lead to Parnell's Land League looking for fair distribution and restoration of farms.

1886 — Home Rule Bill defeated. This was a severe setback to Land League.

1892 — Home Rule Bill again defeated.

Gaelic League — Founded by Lady Gregory to restore the native language. This movement was attractive to many intellectuals and upper-class Protestant people who also wanted Home Rule. Padraic Pearse became active in this and began his odyssey to the Land League to the Irish Volunteers to the Easter Uprising in 1916.

1905 — Arthur Griffith proposed a policy of "Sinn Fein" Gaelic words which mean "Ourselves Alone" — Ireland for the Irish.

1916 — On Easter Monday, 1916, a few hundred men rose in rebellion in the streets of Dublin. Padraic Pearse was their leader. They managed to hold the City against the British for a week but then surrendered in order to prevent further civilian deaths.

1916 — The Irish took very little note of the Uprising until the British took the leaders of the Uprising and shot them. The Irish people became incensed at the callousness of this act and soon the rebellion was on in earnest. One of those shot was James Connolly, a labor leader. He had been badly wounded during the Uprising but was carried on a stretcher to the courtyard where he was propped up against a post in order to be executed.

1918 — December — Sinn Fein party victorious in a general election. By definition, Sinn Fein advocated separation from England.

1919 — January — Newly elected Sinn Fein representatives refuse to sit in the London Parliament and meet in Dublin as the independent Dail Eireann (Parliament of Ireland). Eamonn deValera elected as the President.

1919 — England outlaws Sinn Fein and the new Irish Parliament. Members of Dail Eireann are interned. The Dail sets up an Irish army to protect Irish independence. This army is called the Irish Republican Army. The word "republican" designated the same ideals that Thomas Jefferson understood by that word "government of the people, by the people and for the people."

1919-1921 — Anglo-Irish War — The Irish fight for independence. IRA forces are very small compared with the British forces against them. But the backing of the local population and a superior intelligence service enable the Irish to effectively sustain the war against British regular forces and a highly-paid, brutal, mercenary force known as "Black and Tans".

British prestige suffers world-wide when Britain's civil administration completely disintegrates in Ireland. All local government comes under the jurisdiction of Dail Eireann because the Irish people refuse to patronize British courts or pay taxes to Britain.

Martial law is proclaimed in most of Ireland. The jails are filled with patriots, as 4,000 men and women are detained in British concentration camps. Britain institutes a policy of "official reprisals" and "collective punishment" which includes the burning of 90 Irish towns, assassination of public figures, and detention without charge or evidence.

Britain institutes a world-wide propaganda campaign which seeks to denigrate the Irish independence movement and brand its soldiers as common criminals and terrorists.

Winston Churchill proposes, a "hundred thousand new special troops and police" to be equipped with "thousands of armored cars", and the interlarding of the Southern Provinces with 'block houses and barbed wire,' as a method of overcoming Irish resistance.

1919-21 — The death of Terence McSwiney on hunger strike in a British prison focuses world attention and sympathy of the plight of Ireland. American support and pressure become vital in Ireland's struggle for justice. A truce is declared on July 11, 1921; British big business overseas becomes alarmed at the reaction of an increasingly hostile world.

1920 — While the Anglo-Irish War is in progress, Britain introduces a Government of Ireland Act which sets up two separate Parliaments in Ireland. A Partition Act came into force on May 3, 1921. For economic and strategic reasons, Britain divides Ireland for the first time in history into two separate parts. The sub-statelet of Britain known as Northern Ireland comprises about 17% of Irish national territory but contains about 33% of Ireland's population. During the period 1700-1800, Ulster became the most prosperous part of Ireland, favored by British interests. In Northern Ireland, 60% of employed industrial workers live in Belfast (75% within a 25 mile radius of Belfast city center) while only 5% live in Derry.

1921 — Britain sets up elections in both parts of the partitioned country. Because partition gives them an artificial majority, Ulster Protestants approve the partition. Since the southern part of Ireland is totally opposed to partition, there is no actual contest because Republican candidates are unopposed in every single constituency. Britain makes sure to incorporate Catholic and nationalist areas into Northern Ireland against their will. Without these areas, Northern Ireland would not be economically viable.

1922 — A majority in Dail Eireann approves the Treaty ending hostilities with England and gives de facto recognition to the partition of Ireland. Britain insists on the right to interfere in the actions of the government of the South in its formulation of a new Constitution. Terms of the Treaty give England right to land, sea, and air bases in all of Ireland; The South accepts liability for part of Britain's Public Debt and for payment of compensation to British police and civil servants displaced as a result of Britain's withdrawal from the South of Ireland. Civil War breaks out between Anti-Treaty and Pro-Treaty factions. Britain supports the Pro-Treaty faction which is victorious. In Northern Ireland, a Special Powers Act is introduced. This is the effective tool by which a new police state suppresses opposition from Catholics and nationalists.

1928 — The National League is formed to work for national unity. Not effective.

1932 — Eamonn deValera is returned to power in Southern Ireland.

1932-38 — Economic war between Ireland and England. Ireland suffers greatly, but Britain gives up military bases and military presence in Southern Ireland.

1933 — The Special Powers Act is perpetuated indefinitely in Northern Ireland. Civil Rights can be suspended at whim in that statelet; the ruling powers are confirmed as sectarian and anti-Catholic.

1937 — The Irish Parliament in Dublin changes the name of Southern Ireland from Irish Free State (acquired at the time of the 1921 Treaty) to Eire, an ancient name for Ireland.

1949 — In Dublin, the Republic of Ireland is formally declared. In London, the British declare the Ireland Act of 1949 which states: "It is hereby declared that Northern Ireland remains part of His Majesty's Dominions and of the United Kingdom and it is hereby affirmed that in no event will Northern Ireland or any part thereof cease to be part of His Majesty's Dominions and of the United Kingdom without the consent of the Parliament of Northern Ireland". The Unionists of Northern Ireland rely on this act as a continued guarantee of military and economic support by Britain in their insistence on perpetuating the partition of Ireland.

1966-69 — Movement among Catholics in Northern Ireland for the civil rights denied them. They peacefully demand the right to work, live, and express their opinions openly, the right to fair election laws that would deny votes to non-property holders and give multiple votes to those maintaining numerous residences and places of business, the right to fair trials under fair laws, and the right to humane conditions while in prison, the right to engage in normal democratic political activity without harassment, remand without charge, torture, and indefinite prison sentences.

1969 — Pogroms — Pogroms against Catholics in Northern Ireland; hundreds of families burnt out of their homes. The British effectively legislate against civil rights. British troop strengths increased. British soldiers move into the abandoned airstrip called Long Kesh and turn it into an encampment that is later to become a notorious concentration camp. In reaction to British moves, the Provisional IRA is effectively activated.

1971 — British introduce internment without trial in Northern Ireland. The "Maidstone" prison ship, the Magilligan concentration camp, and the Long Kesh concentration camp are used to house prisoners. Paratroopers brutalize demonstrators near the Magilligan camp and the world sees the brutality on television. Prison population increases from 500 to 3,000.

1972 — As a result of a hunger strike in which men nearly die, and consequent street demonstrations, the British Government gives political status to internees convicted of "scheduled offences" (under special British laws). Political status means that the Republican prisoners can wear their own clothes, have a weekly visit and food parcel, associate with fellow prisoners, and be excused from prison work.

1972 — Lord Diplock of Britain is appointed to make a report on Northern Ireland. Part of his report states: "Although in one sense, there has been an intermittent state of emergency in Northern Ireland since it first became a separate province, we regard the emergency which has led to our appointment as that which has resulted from the escalation of terrorist activities since 1969."

Diplock recommends that internment without trial be replaced by the power to convict solely on the basis of a "confession" extracted and signed in police custody (any suspect can be remanded without charge for

European Act' red by Dublin

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER
MR. CHARLES J. HAUGHEY TD

The Government welcomes the decisive endorsement by the Irish people of ratification of the Single European Act (SEA) in the Referendum and acknowledges the support of the political parties who contributed to the positive outcome. This overwhelming result demonstrates that the Irish people are fully committed to membership of the European Community and to Ireland's full participation in its future development. The result will provide an important boost to confidence, and enable investment decisions to be made in the certainty of Ireland's membership in the normal democratic political activity without harassment, remand without charge, torture, and indefinite prison sentences.

The Government will now move forward with its partners in Europe and on the basis of the opportunities offered by the Single European Act. Our aim will be to ensure that Ireland shares in the benefits from further integration and the dismantling of trade barriers, and that the measures to strengthen the cohesion of the Community are fully effective.

The Government will proceed to deposit the Instrument of Ratification with the Government of Italy as soon as the statutory requirements for the enactment of the Tenth Amendment to the Constitution will have been completed. Simultaneously with the deposit of the Instrument of Ratification the Government will deposit the following declaration:

"The Government of Ireland note that the completion of the Internal Market will have full regard to the terms of Protocol 30, agreed at the time of accession, which recognises that there are certain special problems of concern to Ireland, and that there is a common Community interest in the attainment of the objectives of Ireland's policy of industrialisation and economic development designed to align the standards of living in Ireland with those of the other European nations and to eliminate underemployment while progressively evening out regional differences in levels of development.

The Government of Ireland note that the provisions of Title 11 do not affect Ireland's long established policy of military neutrality and that coordination of positions on the political and economic aspects of security does not include the military aspects of security or procurement for military purposes and does not affect Ireland's right to act or refrain from acting in any way which might affect Ireland's international status of military neutrality."

REMARKS OF FOREIGN MINISTER
BRIAN LENIHAN IN PARLIAMENT
28 MAY 1987

It will not surprise the Dail that I should deal first with Northern Ireland as a problem of overriding concern. Some of its features have been with us for a very long time, including sadly, an unremitting campaign of violence which continues to take a heavy toll. Each passing year adds its own witness to the futility of this campaign. Its appalling effects are clear to all except to those who have the power to stop it and choose instead to kill and destroy, willfully visiting untold suffering on their fellow-citizens and adding immeasurably to the barriers of mutual hatred and suspicion which must be overcome in the search for peace and agreement.

In recent years there has been growing acceptance that a framework for a solution involving all the parties had to be created. The December 1980 Summit in Dublin Castle between the Taoiseach, Mr. Haughey, and the British Prime Minister was a decisive step. In our two months in office the Government have continued to be active in promoting the Anglo-Irish process. I myself have had meetings with the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, Mr. King. I co-chaired the meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference with Mr. King in Belfast on 22 April.

In our relations with the British Government on Northern Ireland, we are using the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference fully so as to improve the position of all the people living in Northern Ireland and especially the nationalist community. The Conference and the Joint Secretariat at Belfast provide a mutually-accepted institutional framework for dealing with Northern matters and matters relating to North-South cooperation. We have committed ourselves to use this framework to make progress and we look forward to meeting an equal spirit of commitment on the other side of the table.

The Government's immediate priorities in the Intergovernmental Conference include in particular:

- progress in the area of Fair Employment
- substantial reforms in the Administration of Justice

TANAISTE and Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Brian Lenihan TD, with his sister, the Minister for Education, Mrs. Mary O'Rourke TD.

— improved North-South economic cooperation
I will deal briefly with each of these headings.

It is regrettable that after 16 years of direct rule the unemployment rate

1988 Presidential Forums Planned for Irish Issues

ALBANY, N.Y. — Assemblyman John C. Dearie (D-Bronx), meeting recently with a dozen Irish-American leaders, decided to explore the possibility of developing in 1988 a 'Presidential Forum on Irish-American Issues', seeking participation by presidential candidates of all parties to "address their views on a specific Irish-American national agenda."

"While initial steps aimed at forcing candidates to address Irish-American issues began during the 1984 presidential elections, the leaders felt it vitally important to define our own priority issues, then demand candidates' address their own position policies on them," Dearie explained.

At present, the Irish-American leaders defined a five-point 1988 political agenda embodied in the issues of: immigration, appointment of a U.S. envoy to Northern Ireland; U.S. visa policies; the MacBride Principles; and U.S. aid to Ireland.

Dearie underscored the "often cited" statistic of forty-three million Irish-Americans in this country but stated that "our ethnic political impact comes nowhere close to the strength our numbers should demand."

The leaders concluded that without "organized Irish-American prodding," presidential candidates, based on past and current experience,

President's Message

Teachtaineact An Uachtarán

By Nicholas Murphy, National President

IMMIGRATION OFFICE

We have established an immigration assistance office in New York City at 3180 Decatur Avenue in St. Brendan's Parish under the aegis of the Bronx County Board; this office will address not only legislative needs but also administrative relief and legal assistance for individual cases. We have an attorney in the office every Tuesday evening as well as a list of attorneys to take cases on referral.

MACBRIDE PRINCIPLES

In New York State we showed the way last year with the passage of the MacBride Principles Bill. It was grassroots pressure from Hibernians and kindred spirits from one end of the state to the other which forced the passage of that bill and gained the support of two gubernatorial candidates and a comptroller who had been non-committal. Our Brother Hibernian Denis Dillon was with us from the start; Brother Hibernian Andy O'Rourke, at our request lobbied Warren Anderson to withdraw his opposition in the Senate; by the time the bill reached the governor's desk the political realities were perceived to be such that Mario Cuomo could not have done other than sign it into law. Let us grow complacent. I hasten to remind you that vigilance is still required to assure compliance with the law and it is still important to pass the MacBride Principles in every State of this great Union to put the necessary economic pressure on those who would discriminate against Irish Catholics in employment.

We must remind our Legislators in our States and in Washington that they are our representatives and that not one member either of the Dublin government or of the London Government casts a single vote in any American election.

While the effort continues across the country to emulate the example of Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island, New Jersey and others in passing the MacBride Principles into law, we must not neglect immigration reform (e.g., the Hibernian immigration bill, H.R. 1683 introduced by Congressman Joseph DiGiardi of New York, which would provide over 4,500 non-preference visas to Ireland this year alone) or other issues and other principles which command our attention.

MAXIMUM PROTECTION FOR INNOCENT HUMAN LIFE

Perhaps the greatest tragedy facing the world today is the holocaust of abortion which has taken more innocent lives than all of our wars combined. Nations which indulge themselves in this murderous form of population control will be seen in the long run to be committing a form of genocidal suicide. Hibernians have supported the Irish Family Rights Council in their struggle to keep Ireland free of abortion and to preserve the primacy of the Family as the fundamental unit of society as set forth in Articles 41 and 42 of the Irish Constitution.

In this country we cannot find a better example to follow than that of our Brother Hibernian John Cardinal O'Connor, Archbishop of New York, in courageously seeking the maximum protection for innocent human life regardless of age or condition. Our task is not only one of example, not only one of support for pro-life organizations like Birthright (686 North Broad Street, Woodbury, New Jersey 08096), the Irish Family Rights Council (25 Lombard Street West, Dublin 8, Ireland) and the American Life League (P.O. Box 1350, Stafford, Virginia 22564), our task is one of education of ourselves, of our people and of our representatives in government.

JOE DOHERTY

Speaking of Cardinal O'Connor, we are indebted to him for his leadership in many areas, not all of which are reported in the secular press. His Saint Patrick's Day messages consistently call for "Peace with Justice and Honor" for all of Ireland. Most recently he has spoken out (in a full page article in Catholic New York) on behalf of a young Irishman who has been locked up in this country for over four years fighting extradition to the United Kingdom, a man who has broken no American law save only the misdemeanor of illegal entry. Joseph Patrick Doherty was a member of the Irish Republican Army who was involved in a gun battle in Belfast in which a British SAS officer was killed. (We have long been aware of the English shoot-to-kill policy, and have recently seen that the SAS take no prisoners—Geneva Conventions to the contrary notwithstanding.) Joe Doherty was captured and convicted of "murder" by a British court in occupied Ireland. He escaped and sought refuge in the United States.

It is not a new story that an IRA man escapes to the United States; there are probably a few men reading this column right now who would fit in that category, whether from 1920, 1940, 1960, or 1980. What distinguishes the Doherty case is that our independent federal Judiciary at every level has ruled that Joe Doherty is not subject to extradition because his case presents "the political offense exception in its most classic form." There is an old saying, that England always plays by the rules until she starts losing, then she changes the rules. It seems that is also true of Her Majesty's minions in America. (1776 apparently having been forgotten in Foggy Bottom and other precincts in Washington, D.C. — sic transit gloria mundi).

Just to get Joe Doherty, a "New Supplemental Extradition Treaty" between the United States and the United Kingdom was rammed through the US Senate amidst the most thorough pro-British propaganda effort since World War II. (How did your U.S. Senators vote)? This treaty is nothing more than an ex post facto bill of attainder, and that makes it a double violation of the Constitution whose bicentennial we are celebrating this year!

Joe Doherty is still in jail! Cardinal O'Connor has visited him there. While I don't expect every Hibernian to travel to "The Tomb" in New York for that purpose, I do propose that every Irish-American should write to their Member of Congress, to their two United States Senators and to the President of the United States protesting the continued detention of this genuine "Freedom Fighter." I would further expect that each Hibernian division would write similar letters to help free Joe Doherty. We must not permit any would-be American Herod to order up the head of Joe Doherty to satisfy the blood-lust of Maggie Thatcher.

Joe Doherty has expressed a willingness to be deported to the Republic of Ireland. Subsequently U.S. Courts have ordered him deported to Ireland. I have recently returned from Dublin where I sought and received the personal assurance of An Taoiseach, Charles J. Haughey, that Joe Doherty's right of return to Ireland will be respected.

We must defend the Honor of the United States; we must stand up and send the message to Washington: "Let Joe Doherty Go!"

There are many issues which concern Hibernians. Human Rights for the people of those six of the divided Irish Province of Ulster's nine counties known as "Northern Ireland" is an issue always at the top of any Hibernian list. Political scientists tell us that among the distinguishing Irish National Hero Honored in the U.S.

On May 17, 1987 at his former Manorville, Long Island, New York home, a memorial was dedicated to the memory of Irish patriot, Thomas J. Clarke. The memorial is a 400-square foot landscaped plot with resting benches and a cement walkway leading up to a six-foot, 3,000 pound obelisk of polished Wicklow Granite, quarried, carved, and engraved in Ireland.

Sponsored by the Suffolk County Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America and organized by NY State AOH Historian Mike McCormack, the event was attended by approximately 400 spectators, town, county, state, and federal politicians, and members of the press.

Those assembled saw their political leaders praise the Ancient Order for its initiative and laud Mr. Clarke as a dedicated freedom fighter and father of the modern Republic of Ireland. Congratulatory correspondence was received from American President Ronald Reagan.

Irish President Dr. Hillery, and New York State Governor Mario Cuomo. The crowd applauded as Martin Rouine, Deputy Consul General of Ireland, and Jack Irwin, NY state president of the AOH, unveiled the monument and as a wreath was placed at the monument base.

Mr. McCormack, narrating the ceremony for the AOH, explained that the wreath contained 32 Easter Lilies — one for each county in Ireland — and an American Beauty Rose for Irish America, woven in a circle to signify never-ending unity. The wreath was placed by Sam O'Reilly, a 92-year old veteran of the GPO garrison in the 1916 Easter Rising, assisted by 18-year old high school student Chuck Connors. Mr. McCormack explained that Mr. O'Reilly represented the generation from which we have received our traditions while young Mr. Connors represented the generation to whom they must be passed. (See page 18 for the story of Thomas J. Clarke).

Seven AOH Teens Win Scholarships to Ireland

ST. PAUL, MN — Seven high school students with AOH "connections" have been awarded scholarships and will be part of a record-setting group of 151 American teenagers from 22 states visiting Ireland for five-and-one-half weeks this summer on the annual Irish Way program.

The program, which began its 12th year on July 4 with its largest group ever, is sponsored by the St. Paul-based Irish American Cultural Institute (IACI). The holiday and study program offers a look at Irish history and literature and a variety of social, cultural and recreational activities, including attending a play at Ireland's national theatre, seeing a hurling match, taking part in a traditional Irish dance, and playing sports matches against local Irish teenagers.

The Irish Way completes its introduction to Irish life and culture by placing each student with an Irish family for a home stay and by offering a sampling of hotel living during a tour of the island.

This year's AOH winners are: AOH Connecticut State Board winner: Kathleen Reilly, daughter of Paul and Margaret Reilly of Norwalk, CT, will be a 12th grader at Norwalk High School this fall. An Irish step-dancer for 11 years, Kathleen paints, is a peer counselor, sings in a performing ensemble and for a folk choir, and works for Safe Rides and her church youth group. She is also a member of the National Honor Society.

AOH Flatbush Division 35, Brooklyn, winner: Brian O'Connor, son of Michael and Maura O'Connor of Staten Island, NY, will start 11th grade at Monsignor Farrell High School in Staten Island. He is an avid baseball player and collector. Brian enjoys a number of other sports and he also maintains a solid "B" average. He is following in the footsteps of his brother, who went on the Irish Way in 1985.

Winners of Other Scholarships: Elizabeth Casala, a 12th grader at Immaculate High School in Danbury, CT, is the daughter of Theodore and Jean Cooke of Danbury, Elizabeth plays field hockey, is a Dorothy Day volunteer, and recently took up Irish dancing. She is also a public relations representative for her town's Chamber of Commerce, and is a representative on her school's religious commission, while keeping up a top grade point average. Elizabeth received her scholarship from the Wild Geese of Greenwich, CT.

Mary Coyne, daughter of John and Helen Coyne of Olney, MD, will enter her senior year this fall at the Academy of the Holy Cross in Kensington, MD. A member of her school's Math and Latin clubs, Mary is a stamp and coin collector, paints, does needlepoint and maintains a "B" average in her schoolwork. Mary's scholarship came from the Irish American Cultural Institute.

Katie O'Hare, daughter of Margaret O'Hare of Mt. Prospect, IL, will be an 11th grade student at St. Louise de Marillac High School in Northfield, IL. Katie writes for her school paper and is a member of the pep club, but is most active in athletics, playing for varsity teams in volleyball, softball and track. Katie has a "B" average and received her scholarship from the Irish American Cultural Institute.

Christy Root, daughter of Norman and Maureen Root of Livonia, MI, will begin 10th grade at Ladywood High School in Livonia in September. A competitive Junior dancer for four years and a model since she was age one, Christy is a pre-school assistant, skates on a drill team and plays piano. She won her scholarship from the Hibernian Life Insurance Fund of Minnesota.

John Sonderman, son of John and Mary Sonderman of St. Louis, MO, and a student at Chaminade College Prep, will also be a 10th grader this fall. An amateur spelunker, a soup kitchen volunteer, and assistant first grade soccer coach. John also plays piano and clarinet and participates in his school's drama, speech and debate activities. A "B+" student, John was awarded his scholarship aid by the St. Louis Metropolitan St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee and by the Irish American Cultural Institute.

Fair Employment in N.I.

among the Catholic population is more than twice the rate among Protestants. The Fair Employment Act, introduced in 1976, has not succeeded in redressing this imbalance. At the meeting of the Conference on 22 April, both sides agreed on the need for progress in legislation and practice in this area.

The Government will continue to stress the need for effective legislation and for affirmative action on the ground. We want to see the introduction of sanctions applied to those employers who fail to meet their responsibilities to ensure equitable patterns of employment.

The courts and the laws in the North should be such as to merit the full confidence of both sections of the community. Our Government is committed to seek substantial reform both in the court system and in the emergency legislation in the North. Parallel with the administration of Justice through the courts and the laws is the relationship between the security forces and the nationalist community. We want to see introduced a programme of special measures to improve that relationship, including the introduction of a Code of Conduct for the police. We want to see action as quickly as possible on the Stalker/Sampson Report.

The Government will pay special attention to encouraging North-South economic cooperation, in particular in areas likely to increase employment possibilities in both parts of Ireland. The International Fund has established a range of programmes that will, I believe, bring substantial economic and social benefits on both sides of the border. It is important that the two Governments build on this and consider imaginatively how best we can work together in developing economic cooperation that will be for the benefit of all the people on this island. I want to express our appreciation here to those Governments that have so far contributed to the Fund — the United States, Canada and New Zealand. These have given practical expression to their goodwill and the desire to see the political process in this island succeed.

These three areas are of particular significance but we will of course be pursuing or developing many other issues in relation to the Conference, for example, the place of our Irish language and culture and other economic, social or cultural issues of interest to us and the nationalist community.

Above and beyond this necessary programme of reform lies the vital task of maintaining the political process.

We will continue to seek to build conditions for peace, stability and justice so as to overcome the causes that produce violence in this island. We will work closely with the nationalist community and we will be attentive to all constructive views which may be expressed to us by members of the unionist community. To all who desire a solution through constitutional democratic means, we hold out the hand of friendship.

marks of a nationality are a common sense of history and a shared sense of rights and wrongs. The Irish have a long collective memory.

AOH FOREST

"Cad a dheanfaimid feasta gan adhmaid?" begins one of the Gaelic songs which I learned as a boy in Kerry — what will we do henceforth without our forest? It was the English who devastated our forests centuries ago, exploiting Irish resources for London's profit — not an unfamiliar story to be sure. In 1948, one of the conditions for Sean MacBride and Clann na Publicla to enter into a coalition with John Costello was that the Dublin government begin a program of reforestation in the West. In recent years much of the reforestation of Ireland has been a result of private subscription; in the United States the Irish American Cultural Institute has played a leading role.

On August 5th, 1987, An Taoiseach joins us in the dedication of the "AOH Forest" in Licksean, between Kilgrogan and Glencar in Kerry. This forest is your forest, paid for by your donations in a Hibernian program organized by our National Chairman for Charities and Missions, Dave Burke of Lawrence, Massachusetts.

The AOH tree-planting is but one of many projects whereby we, the American Irish, can invest in the future of Ireland, the Motherland of our race and well-spring of Irish culture. Call it filial duty or call it good sense, we have a duty to Ireland which does not conflict with our obligations to the United States or to Canada, a duty which enhances our ability to contribute to the further growth and definition of this great American republic and of Canada as well.

INVEST IN OUR YOUTH THE FUTURE OF IRELAND

The future of Ireland is in the youth of Ireland. We in North America can best enhance the future of Ireland by supporting those institutions dedicated to the wholesome development of Irish youth. We continue to support those families suffering as a direct result of the current "Troubles" through An Cumann Cabhrach and the Green Cross. We must also support those Irish "summer colleges", such as Colaiste na bhFian (4 Clifton Terrace, Dun Laoghaire, Co. Dublin, Ireland) and Colaiste na Banban (Bohar na gCrann, Baile Ghib, An Midhe, Ireland), where Irish language and traditional values are fostered side by side and which maintain year 'round youth programs for their students. I am likewise referring to North/South reconciliation programs like "Between" in Cork and the youth centers of the Irish Youth Foundation which are dedicated to improving the lot of the most disadvantaged in a country which is economically "most distressful," even where there are not foreign occupation troops on the streets.

We must identify with the future of Ireland. I would encourage each Hibernian division, within the limits of its financial ability, to adopt one of

A Summer Free from Fear

Freedom is a concept we take for granted. But the children of Belfast Northern Ireland live in communities separated from each other by 20 foot walls. Barbed wire, cement blockades and checkpoints with armed soldiers are an every day occurrence.

The children, from the strife-torn and culturally impacted area of Northern Ireland, are being affected by a tragedy that is not of their doing, yet they are the victims.

Thousands of children in Northern Ireland have never known a life free from stress and fear. The damage to their physical and mental health is possibly the greatest problem arising out of the present conflict. They are in a very real sense, prisoners of strife.

What is the Belfast Children's Summer Program?

The program was founded in 1982 in Washington, D.C. and is in touch with, but independent of, similar programs in a dozen U.S. cities. The primary goal is to bring 9-11 year old boys and girls from strife-torn Belfast to the Washington area for six weeks in the summer.

The trip to the Washington D.C. area will expose the children to an environment where religious prejudice and discrimination are not practiced. We do this to help induce a gradual change so that today's youth, upon becoming tomorrow's parents and leaders, will know that there is a better way than armed conflict.

NEW YORK: Nassau County District Attorney Denis Dillon greets Elaine Robinson, right of Belfast, Northern Ireland. Elaine is spending the summer in Merrick with Katie Grillo, left, and her family. Elaine is one of 800 children from Northern Ireland vacationing in the United States through Project Children. D.S. Dillon has been involved in the human rights issue in Northern Ireland for many years.

these youth activities and give the support which can enable that center to serve the needs of another few boys or girls than might otherwise be the case. For information on will probably not on their own accord, tackle the often controversial issues comprising the Irish-American agenda.

Presidential Forums

Therefore, they concluded that we must present to the candidates what the individual items and issues are, and then establish a 'Question and Answer Forum' to permit them to speak to a broad representation of Irish-American leaders.

Dearie suggested that the 'Presidential Forums', which could begin as early as late August, could be organized and scheduled on a monthly basis leading to the early primaries. Each 'Forum' would include specific and targeted questions to presidential aspirants on Irish-American issues, with over hundreds of concerned Irish-Americans present to analyze firsthand the candidates' views.

The key element of success for such 'Forums' would be the wide exposure that the candidate's view on these issues would be given in the Irish-American and metropolitan media.

It was discussed and recommended that the Irish-American leaders attending the 'Forums' come from the tri-state areas of New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, in order to broaden the scope and interest that potential presidential candidates would have in states with major primaries.

In addition, a lengthy discussion was held on ways to maximize participation by Irish-Americans in visible unity demonstrations such as Solidarity Day.

Substantial analysis was directed at the "highly visible and effective Jewish Solidarity Day," two months ago, in which over 300,000 American Jews participated to end Soviet Jewry. The Jewish protest at Dag Hammarskjöld Plaza is the same site where Irish Solidarity is held annually. It has drawn only a few thousand Irish Americans in recent years.

Discussion also focused on the location of the upcoming 'Forum' with the possibilities including either a campus setting which could accommodate large turnouts, or the N.Y.U. Medical Center, which was the site of the 1986 Irish-American Issues Forum.

Participating in Thursday's meeting were: Jack Iriwin, NYS AOH President; Tom Connaughton, president, Grand Co. of Emerald Societies; Martin Galvin, editor, Irish People; Daniel and Peggy Dee, I.A.U.C.; Vincent Dougherty, N.Y.C. Police Emerald Society; Joe Jamison, Irish American Labor Coalition; Johanna Brown, Westchester Irish Community; Albert Doyle, American Irish Political Education Committee; Mary Wilson, Irish Northern Aid; Frank McCann and Jack Higgins, Transport Workers Union; Phil Bolger, Board of Ed. Emerald Society; Tom Murray, AOH; Pat Hurley, Jim O'Malley, and Sean Minihane, Irish Immigration Reform Movement.

Dearie stated that Volunteer Committees are now being formed, and anyone interested in participating in the organization of the 'Forum' should contact Richard White of his office at (212) 824-1900.

Ireland is famous for its crystal. Every piece is the product of rare craftsmanship and strict adherence to quality.

The same is true for Budweiser.

We brew our beer with the finest hops, rice, and barley malt. Then we age it with Beechwood, to aid the natural carbonation. The result is a clean, crisp taste that has been distinctively Budweiser's for over one hundred years.

NEWPORT, R.I. — William J. McEnery of Providence was elected state president of the AOH at the recent convention held here in Hibernian Hall. McEnery served as national president of the AOH in 1964-1966. The Dennis E. Collins Division One, Newport, was host for the conventions. Mrs. Genevieve Mathison of Newport was elected state Ladies AOH president.

During the convention the Hibernians went on record in favor of passage of the "MacBride Principles Bill" (87-H 5328) introduced into the Rhode Island General Assembly by Reps. Fogarty, M. Smith and J. Egan. The House later approved the bill which was sent to the Senate. After Senate approval the bill was sent to Governor DiPrete. The bill authorizes the Rhode Island general treasurer to survey all American companies operating in Northern Ireland and determine whether those companies discriminate against minority employees in hiring and promotions. The bill is intended to express the state's opposition to discrimination against Catholics in Northern Ireland.

STATE NEWS: Michigan

The state of Michigan held their 1987 State Convention on May 15-16 at Traverse City. Over 100 Brothers from the eight Divisions in Michigan made the trip to Michigan's "resort city", many with their wives and families. The Bernard Brady Division acted as host for the convention, with John Conley's Irish Cottage handling the social aspects of the weekend. Highlighting the Convention weekend was the election of the new State Board of Officers. James O'Flynn was elected State President. Jim brings over 25 years of dedicated work to this position which includes service in three Divisions as various elected positions and eight years on the State Board most recently as vice president where he assumed the duties of president with the untimely death of State President Daniel O'Connell in November 1986.

Bernard Lennon, long time member and officer in the Oakland Division, was elected vice president. Jack Conway from Detroit's Walsh Division succeeds John McInerney as state secretary and Robert Carlton of Flint's Sullivan and O'Sullivan Division becomes state treasurer.

Rounding out the Board, as State Directors are John Conley, Traverse City; John Cahill, Detroit #1; Clare Cunningham, Grand Rapids; Paul Gowdy, Macomb Co.; Edward Lennon, Oakland #1; Brian Gavan, Detroit #2; Timothy Hairiton, Oakland #2; and J. Michael Zelle, Flint. As conventions go in Michigan, this year's event was one of the largest in recent years and can be taken as a step in the right direction — Michigan is continuing to grow in membership.

In other areas of progress, Michigan is happy to report that the efforts to promote passage of the MacBride Principles is paying off. By a vote of 97-0, the State House of Representatives passed the bill and hopefully the Senate Bill will enjoy equal success. John Cahill and past State President Kevin Murphy are spearheading this effort along with help from Daniel O'Kennedy, Bernard Lennon, and National Director John McInerney. Co-sponsors of the bill are Detroit Senator John Kelley and Representative Michael Benanne. In a related issue, Larry Kelly, Detroit's Walsh Division president, has announced plans for a benefit for Oliver Kearney to be held at the Hibernian Hall on October 18th. Contact Kevin Murphy (313) 634-3401 for information.

In other news around the state, Tom O'Sullivan announced a resounding success with his Division's "Shillelagh Swing" Golf outing which put $2500 into the Shrine Burn Center. The Flint Division's participation with the Shriners goes back a number of years after personal experience with the work this group did with a young child from Ireland. Michael Nolan's Traverse City Division will be participating in the 1987 Heritage Parade. The membership passed out information on the Irish in the area which was well-received by those in attendance.

The Somerset County AOH, St. Patrick Division 1, recently sponsored an Irish Concert at Immaculata High School in Somerville.

Ryan Division continues their work with Fr. Russ Kohler's program with terminal cancer kids, while baseball is the name of the game with the two Oakland County Divisions. While not setting any new records, these two Divisions continue to grow by attracting the younger lads through their sports programs. Finally, the AOH in Michigan was saddened by the losses of Joseph Griffin, Flint, and Robert Wilke, Detroit.

The Irish music was provided by the Willie Lynch Showband. The concert featured Karen Morrissey who rendered a number of Irish melodies with her lovely voice. In addition, the Trinity Pipe Band of Somerset also performed. The Peter Smith School of Irish Dancing enchanted the audience, and Chris McLaughlin sang the National Anthems of both the United States and Ireland.

Also, the St. Patrick Division recently received the Second Place Senior Marching Unit Award in the Woodbridge, St. Patrick's Day Parade. Mr. George Aston, representing the Woodbridge American Irish Association which sponsored the parade, presented the award. Patrick Joseph Mulrooney, division president, accepted on behalf of the AOH, Ladies AOH, AOH Cello Group, and Trinity Pipe Band of Somerset, since all marched together as a single unit in the parade.

The St. Patrick Division has a history of winning St. Patrick's Day parade awards, going back to 1984 when the Division first started participating in the parades. The Division received the Best Irish Traditional Unit and Merit Award in 1985 and placed first in the competition for the Best Appearing Float and Merit Award featured in the 1986 Somerville — Bridgewater — Raritan parades.

The St. Patrick Division has been sponsoring traditional Irish cello folk dance lessons at various skill levels, as well as seasonal cello dances, ever since 1984. The AOH Cello group, besides participating in parades, is very active in Irish cultural events both within and outside New Jersey. Further, members of the Group have brightened the lives of the residents and staff at the Somerset County Nursing Home with their annual entertainment for St. Patrick's Day. Cello dance lessons, by the way, are free; those of you who are interested in attending the cello dance classes should contact Dennis Smyth at (201) 968-6667.

The Division is sponsoring a family style picnic (really more like a mini Irish festival) at the Eagles Aerie Picnic Grove and Pavilion (off Route 28 in Bridgewater) on Sunday, August 30, from Noon to 6:00 p.m. All those interested in attending this function should contact Charlie Diamond, Sr. at (201) 218-0970 or William T. Cooper at (201) 725-4190.

Baltimore City AOH President Names '88 Parade Chair

BALTIMORE, MD — John L. Shaughnessy, City Board President, AOH, appointed Sarah Murphy, former National President, Ladies Ancient Order of Hibernians, as the chairperson for the St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee for 1988. The outgoing chairman, Peter J. O'Connor, welcomed Sarah as chairperson.

Peter O'Connor served two years as chairperson and during his tenure the parade grew tremendously, with additions of many marching units. Pete, who is a long-term AOH member, is also the chief of the Baltimore City Fire Department. Pete's family was a big support unit during the growth of the parade.

Sarah, or Sally to her friends, has long been an active member of the Ladies AOH in which she has held city, state, and national offices.

completed in 1892, being preceded by an interim church in the 1800's known as "Old St. Patrick's." Prior to 1892 St. John's College High School, Gonzaga High School and Visitation School for Girls were established. Up until 1959 the St. John's Cadet Corps marched from the school on Vermont Avenue to St. Patrick's on St. Patrick's Day for Mass. Many Washingtonians claim that if you weren't married in St. Patrick's, you really weren't married. Enough of the nostalgia.

St. Patrick's presently has some problems due to lack of parishioners — at last count there were two. The St. Patrick's Academy was closed and the Paul VI Institute was established under the directorship of Mgr. M. Farina. In the meantime, the upkeep of the Church fell behind due to lack of support. As a result, a beautiful old church, a Washington landmark, needs help.

Since early March of this year the AOH, spearheaded by Division 4, James Sullivan Dugan Division, has gone into the renovation and rehabilitation business. Pews and kneelers are being reattached to the floor, landscaping is in progress, statues need to be cleaned, the roof needs repair and heaven knows what else. At this point Mgr. Fox, the newly appointed pastor, has been cooperating with the volunteers and is wholeheartedly behind this project.

Currently the Hibernians are setting a goal to finish their job in August for the Feast of St. Brigid. There is a great deal of work still to be done and support needed. Keep in mind that this Church is a landmark, dedicated to the American Catholics and the American Irish. Let's not forget St. Patrick's.

John Fitzgerald Div. 1, Arlington, VA.

D.C. Landmark Is Adopted by AOH Division 4

In Washington, D.C. there is a church familiar to all Washingtonians as well as many others across the country — St. Patrick's Church, the oldest church in the Federal District of Washington. St. Patrick's Church was founded in 1789 at the insistence of James Hoban, architect of the White House. The theory was that with a Catholic parish in the area, the Irish immigrants would be more inclined to work on the Federal City of Washington and the White House.

The Church, as we see it now, was

"Violence" and "Terrorism"

By KATHLEEN HOLMES

Chairwoman, American Irish Congress

Over the past several years, the words 'violence' and 'terrorism' have been used continually by Administration officials and media personnel alike. Those who commit acts of 'violence' are roundly condemned by elected officials of federal, state, and local governments, by religious leaders, by media personnel, and by American citizens in general without any thought being given to why acts of 'violence' are being committed in the first place.

Each and every time we Americans proudly sing our national anthem, 'violence' in the pursuit of freedom is glorified. When we sing of "the rockets' red glare", and "the bombs bursting in air," we are proudly proclaiming our right to fight with arms for our preservation as a nation. Certainly, that early colonial American from Massachusetts committed a drastic act of 'violence' when he shot a British soldier at Bunker Hill, an act known as "the shot heard round the world," which ushered in the armed resistance in the Thirteen Colonies against British oppression. Yet, this writer cannot recall ever reading any historical condemnation of this act of 'violence' by any person living in those days who was victimized by England's failure to practise the Golden Rule in her American colonies.

A popular contemporary song by Johnnie Horton a few years ago, depicting the War of 1812, proudly hails how we Americans "fought the bloody British in a town at New Orleans." The song continues:

"We fired our guns and the British kept a coming,
There weren't nigh as many as there were a while ago,
We fired once more and they begin to running,
Down the Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico."

What caused our ancestors in the United States to engage in such acts of 'violence and terrorism' against the British Army? Only the mere fact that after fighting to gain independence from England thirty years prior, the English were now back in the United States burning down our Capitol and assaulting our citizens! History does not relate, however, any condemnation of these 'acts of violence' committed by Americans in sending the English back home to Europe.

General George Washington, the original guerrilla soldier, was forced to deal with leading an army of men who were severely deficient in military training when compared to the superior forces of the King's Army, and also severely lacking in arms, war materials, and clothing. The sufferings of these ragged colonial 'terrorists' of their day are poignantly described in every book ever written about that era, and monuments have been erected to the sacrifices they made in battle, particularly at Valley Forge, Pennsylvania, the bloodiest battle of the American Revolution.

Since the founding of this nation, Americans have committed 'acts of violence' in order to 'maintain the more perfect union' which we established following our break with England. Certainly, our bombing of Germany and our fight to gain control of Iwo Jima during World War II were acts of 'violence' designed to bring some semblance of normality to a world torn apart by war and overrun by evil aggressors who attempted to force their philosophy upon numerous unwilling nations.

We are truly cognizant of our own historical beginnings as a nation, and our continual fight to maintain our independence and freedom as a people; what is it in our national character that causes us to turn a deaf ear to the abuses being committed against Catholic Nationalists in 'Northern' Ireland by Protestant suppressors who refuse to respect the rights of others to live in peace?

How could the United States actively participate in the trials held at Nuremberg to bring to justice those who committed "crimes against humanity" in Germany while today ignoring Britain's crimes against humanity in Ireland?

Where are the voices of sanity and justice and reason within our government and within our religious communities? Where are the Judeo-Christian morals of our political and religious leaders who remain silent about Britain's little war in Ireland either through ignorance of the true facts or through total indifference to the plight of 4,000 Irish Catholics who cry out to us for help?

It might be well for all of those complacent Americans who so proudly hail this nation's heritage to ponder where we might be today if the French Navy did not assist George Washington's Continental Army in trapping the British between them, forcing the British surrender and eventual departure from our shores. Without such foreign intervention at a time when our beleaguered fledgling nation was crying out for help, our lives today could be very different indeed!

As we proudly recall each July the humiliating defeat brought upon Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, Virginia, by colonial guerrillas who fought a reactionary war against English oppression, more than one-half of whom were Irish immigrants or of Irish descent, it might be well for us to ponder the plight of Ireland at that time in history when the blood-lust desire for revenge felt by Cornwallis and his Army brought them to Ireland to ravage and totally devastate that nation during the Irish Uprising of 1798.

"We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish Justice, insure domestic Tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general Welfare, and secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Of the thirty-eight signers of the American Constitution, one-half of them were Irish. These nineteen signers were well aware of English oppression not only in the Thirteen Colonies, but also in Ireland. They were aware of the religious bigotry which permeates the English way of life. They were aware of triumphal parades conducted through Catholic neighborhoods by Protestant Orangemen in celebration of a battle victory which took place in the year 1690 A.D.! Coming from oppressed Catholic Ireland, these Constitutional authors well knew about Protestant terrorism against Catholic natives in Ireland, aided and abetted by English governments. If they were alive today, these Irish authors would not be surprised to hear about Protestant Orangemen marching through Catholic neighborhoods today with bats, cudgels, hammers, and hatchets while garbed in clothing emblazoned with the emblem "FTP" as they engage in the sport of stoning and burning Catholic homes and terrorizing Catholic families. The Constitutional authors were also aware that the English governments of their day guaranteed these Orange suppressors the identical right to carry out their religious hatred of Catholics, supported by the King's Army, as today's British governments grant to the Orangemen, with the encouragement and support of today's British Army.

The Irish framers of our Constitution left no stone unturned in granting religious, cultural, and ethnic freedoms to all who sought them in the United States. One hundred and fifty years later, American soldiers, many of whom were Irish Americans, fought a world war to preserve these liberties for American citizens and to make the entire world safe for democracy. The disgust we felt as a nation for the distorted policies of ethnic superiority displayed by Hitler's Nazis in requiring neighbor to watch neighbor, children to spy on their parents, and the eventual extermination of those who were not of the 'superior Aryan race' should be matched today by England's distorted policies in Ireland which closely resemble the paranoid Third Reich in Germany.

The protection given throughout the years by Britain to Orange recruitment of all Protestants in Ireland to join Orange Lodges and march in Orange parades; to maintain control of all workplaces and deny employment to Catholics; to commit heinous acts of sectarian torture and murder of Catholics S.A.S. in order to maintain dominance in a gerrymandered statelet are all reminiscent of Nazi Germany. This cancerous mentality has been successful in ensuring one hundred percent polarization among Catholics and Protestants in 'Northern' Ireland, and all in the British interest.

This mentality had been rejected by our forefathers in 1776 and repeatedly rejected throughout our history by generations of Americans who gave their lives to ensure the liberties we cherish. There is one reason, and only one, why the United States today does not rise to the defense of Ireland: self-serving British propaganda in the United States, which distorts, misinforms, and lies to the American public, all in the interest of Britain without any regard whatsoever to the interests of the United States.

A comparison of the use of several parades to commemorate past events will demonstrate how Britain encourages and supports religious, ethnic, and cultural bigotry in Ireland:

Memorial Day Parades in the United States: Each year, Americans set aside one day of the year to honor the men and women who gave their lives to preserve our freedoms. Parades are held, wreaths are placed upon monuments, and speeches are given throughout the nation to

Making Progress

(Irish Press, 17 July 1987)

Yesterday's meeting of the Anglo-Irish Conference produced some of the most significant developments in the short history of the Agreement with announcements of an investigation into the operation of the RUC and new measures to outlaw religious discrimination and promote equality of job opportunity.

What all this will mean in practice remains to be seen, but it is an indication of the willingness of both governments to tackle some of the North's most glaring problems. The path is a tricky one, and progress is not helped by such silly and provocative actions as the incursion by British marines at Greenore Quay. But the message from yesterday's meeting is that Dublin and London mean business and will not be easily deflected.

That is a message which the Unionists, in particular, will have to ponder. These developments come within 48-hours of the first tentative talks between Unionist leaders and British government officials aimed at paving the way towards a conference on devolution.

Devolved administration is an option allowed for within the terms of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, but it is not one which either government need be in a hurry to accept. There is work which can best be done by the two sovereign Governments; work which can, and should, be done with or without the consent of the Unionists.

remind us of the sacrifices of generations of Americans who fought to defend our liberties. These parades and speeches are designed to provoke contemplation of the freedoms we must continually fight to preserve.

St. Patrick's Day Parades in Ireland and the United States: These parades are religious as well as ethnic in nature, celebrating the missionary work of St. Patrick in bringing Christianity to pagan Ireland and also rejoicing in the Gaelic culture which pre-dates the birth of Christ. Traditionally, the parades are followed with parties and dances as the Irish throughout the world celebrate this most important of holidays.

12th of July Orange Parades in 'Northern' Ireland: These parades are quite different in nature from either of the above in that the purpose of the celebration is to terrorize minority Catholics in 'Northern' Ireland who must be continually reminded of the victory obtained by Protestant King William of Orange over Catholic King James at Derry in the year 1690. The reminders are brought home to Catholics each and every year through destruction of their homes and property, brutal beatings and deliberate murders, all to reinforce in the minds of Irish Catholics a military victory by 'superior' Protestant Englishmen in the year 1690!

The support given by the British government in allowing the Orangemen into Catholic neighborhoods year after bloody year ensures for perpetuity the Orange 'right' to hate Catholics and scorn the Pope, and to display such hatred publicly and proudly through the commission of monstrous crimes designed to force Catholics out of their own country.

While we believe that all nations and ethnic groups are entitled to their religious and cultural celebrations, there is no reason whatsoever why the United States

Talk by Mr. Paisley and Mr. Molyneux of burying the Agreement looks particularly unrealistic in light of the latest progress. The Unionist leaders probably feel that some rhetoric of this sort is necessary for the folks back home, but they will be making a bad mistake if they allow themselves to remain cornered by the condition that there can be no serious negotiations while the Agreement remains.

It is now clear that the Unionist tactics in opposition to the Agreement were utterly misguided. They promised something on which they could not possibly deliver—the destruction of a binding treaty between two governments. And they overestimated the extent of opposition to the Agreement within the Unionist community. Certainly, loyalists do not like the Agreement, but their disapproval has fallen far short of the rhetoric of the Unionist leaders. Attempts to prove otherwise have cost the Official Unionists two seats at Westminster and significantly weakened the credibility of the leaders of both parties.

The blunt fact, emphasised yesterday, is that the Irish and British Governments do not need the approval of Mr. Paisley or Mr. Molyneux whereas both these gentlemen do, at least, need to be able to work with Ministers from London and Dublin if they are to continue as political leaders rather than followers of a paramilitary rabble.

should be aiding and abetting Britain with armaments and American tax dollars to continue her collaboration with the Orange Order in Ireland. What sense can be made of a US NATO alliance with Britain, undertaken to jointly fight against Russian oppression and indifference to the rights of nations and individuals, while the United States ignores and identical lack of respect by Britain to the national rights of Ireland and the individual rights of her people?

Irish Americans who support the rights of Irish Nationalists, the vast majority of whom are Catholic, to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness have become quite weary, even resentful, of those who piously proclaim a distaste for 'violence', the implication seeming to be that we do support 'violence'. Let's set the record straight once and for all: We all abhor violence! No one revels at the report of violent deaths, whether they be Irish or English!

But facts are facts! Throughout history, those who hold power have never conceded one inch to those who were victimized by power. Justice has only been obtained by wresting power from the tyrants. We Americans wrested this power for ourselves in 1776 and the French followed our lead shortly thereafter. Irish Nationalists seek nothing less for Ireland.

If those who so loudly proclaim their dislike for 'violence' would remove their heads from the sand and begin to work for justice in Ireland, all the 'violence' they claim to abhor would quickly be eliminated. Until such time as more and greater efforts are made by complacent people towards this goal, they have no right whatsoever to make pious condemnations against those who have no choice but to react against the violence foisted upon every aspect of their lives by bigoted tyrants and indifferent governments.

Justice Delayed Is Justice Denied

By CARDINAL JOHN J. O'CONNOR

I feel uneasy and have felt this way for some time. Something in my bones tells me things are not quite right. Worst of all, I cannot put my finger on exactly what troubles me. I sought information from a variety of sources, believing that an increased understanding of the situation would calm me. Maybe I do not have enough information, or maybe this is a situation beyond my understanding. Whatever, I am uneasy.

I am uneasy with the letter I received from the Office of the Attorney General of the United States. I had written to seek clarification in the case of Joseph Doherty, who on June 18 would begin his fifth year of imprisonment.

Answering my letter for the attorney general, an assistant attorney general gave me a detailed account of Mr. Doherty's conviction and sentence to life imprisonment by the Belfast Criminal Court for the murder of Herbert Westmacott. On June 22, 1981, the court also convicted and sentenced Mr. Doherty for attempted murder and possession of firearms. The court recommended that he serve a minimum of 30 years imprisonment. The letter goes on to tell me that before sentence was imposed, Mr. Doherty and others escaped from prison and seriously injured a guard in making their escape.

The letter provides further details, many of which I had already learned from Joseph's lawyer, his mother and sister and Joseph himself, when I visited him in the Metropolitan Correctional Center, here in New York, on April 17, 1987.

I have had my share of prison duty during the many years of my priesthood. I have talked with many prisoners and their families and have received countless numbers of requests to intercede for the life or the freedom of those imprisoned. I have never attempted to determine the innocence or guilt of any prisoner. Such is for the courts.

During the years, likewise, because of my name and background, I have been asked by some to express sympathy and support for the I.R.A., NORAI and other organizations, as I have been asked to condemn such organizations, by others. Some have urged me to damn the British, others the Irish. I have tried to respond to every request as my conscience advised me, without concern for political pressures or implications.

I mention all such requests in order to clear the air. I do not approach Mr. Doherty's situation from a political perspective, or as an Irish-American archbishop with a large Irish-American constituency, as some might suggest. Nor do I approach his case as a naive clergyman or social worker for whom nothing matters except mercy for a prisoner and his family.

I approach this case with concern about the dignity of a human person and about the integrity of our legal system which is expected to secure the rights and dignity of all persons. Specifically, I am concerned that a man remains in a tiny cell in these United States for 23 hours of every day, after more than four years of imprisonment despite repeated administrative board and court rulings that he has the right to be deported to the Republic of Ireland, as he has asked. I do not claim to know Mr. Doherty's innocence or guilt, nor do I suggest that he be allowed to sidestep the legal process. But I believe that, once invoked, our system of justice demands an expeditious determination of the rights and obligations of a person and then prompt action in accordance with such determination.

In response to my inquiry, the Attorney General's Office has advised me that "Mr. Doherty could not be prosecuted in the Republic of Ireland for any offense for which he has already been convicted in Northern Ireland." Further, the letter tells me, under the laws of the Republic of Ireland, Mr. Doherty could not be imprisoned on the basis of the sentence imposed by the Criminal Court in Belfast. "Thus," says the letter, "justice would seem to require that Mr. Doherty return to Northern Ireland, where he has been tried and convicted of murder and other serious offenses."

God knows how distressed I feel for the families of anyone Mr. Doherty may have killed or seriously hurt and how abhorrent I find the continuing violence in Ireland from whatever the source. Here, however, we seem to have some unique dimension that goes beyond Mr. Doherty and the allegations against him. I am no lawyer, but my moral theology tells me that one may never use an evil means to justify a good end. The government might argue that

Music Fair to Cancel Two British Bands

By IRVING LONG

(Reprinted from Newsday, N.Y.)

Citing threats of riots and boycotts, officials of the Westbury Music Fair have served notice that they want to cancel the appearance of two British Army marching bands. It would be the first time such an appearance has been canceled.

In a letter to the booking agent for the Grenadier Guards and the Gordon Highlanders, the president of the Music Fair, Shelly Gross, said that while he does not enjoy "knuckling under to public emotional outbursts," he feels he cannot "risk the threats and concomitant bad publicity."

"To make matters worse," Gross said in his letter, "what has been touched off is a dispute between the county district attorney and the township executives, which bodes no good for the future of our theater."

preventing Mr. Doherty from committing terrorism in Northern Ireland is a good end. But keeping him in jail in the United States for crimes committed elsewhere, after the United States legal system has declared that he should not be detained here, would appear to be evil, and a good end can not justify an evil means.

It is argued that because we have an extradition treaty with Great

A number of public officials had threatened to picket the performance, including District Attorney Denis Dillon, County Controller Peter King and Long Beach Supervisor Bruce Nyman. King and Dillon have joined various Irish-American groups in past years in unsuccessful efforts to press for the cancellation of British band appearances at the Nassau Coliseum.

Dillon said yesterday that he did not know what dispute Gross was referring to in his letter. He said Gross' letter was the only indication he had received that threats were being made, but that his office should be notified of any threats.

"The fact that I disagree with what the British government is doing in Northern Ireland is no reason in the world for these people not to let me know," he said. "Not only would the police provide protection, but I would be glad to investigate."

Kathleen Holmes, chairwoman of the American Irish Congress, had written a letter to the management of the Music Fair, warning of "mass turmoil which would result when thousands of Irish Americans come to Westbury Music Fair to protest."

A spokesman for British Information Services said he would have no comment until later, when he had a chance to consult with the Ministry of Defense.

Biaggi on Legislation Seeking to Amend Immigration Law

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN MARIO BIAGGI OF NEW YORK
IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 1119
TO THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION, REFUGEES AND INTERNATIONAL LAW
JUNE 23, 1987

Mr. Chairman: I am grateful for the opportunity to lend my support to legislative efforts to reform some of the more archaic and openly oppressive elements of our nation's visa policies. I am proud to be co-sponsor of H.R. 1119, the legislation you are considering today, authored by our good friend and colleague, Barney Frank.

On Thursday of this week, we will mark the 25th anniversary of President Harry Truman's veto of the Immigration and Nationality Act Amendments of 1952. Contained in this legislation are the provisions that pertain to political and ideological grounds for exclusion, namely Sections 212(a) (27)-(29) which have not been amended since then, but would be under the Frank bill.

The words of President Truman in his accompanying Veto Message, seem relevant today:

"Some of these provisions would empower the Attorney General to deport any alien who has engaged in or has had a purpose to engage in activities 'prejudicial to the public interest' or 'subversive to the national security'. No standards or definitions are provided to guide discretion in the exercise of powers so sweeping."

After twenty-five years, it is time a law which stands as our Iron Curtain against a full and free exchange of all political views to be reformed.

For the past ten years I have served, with great pride, as Chairman of the bi-partisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs. The Committee at this time has some 119 members. One of the Committee's stated objectives from the outset has been to work for a reform of our nation's current visa policies. These policies have imposed a cloak of censorship over parts of the Irish-American community which seek to hear the various political views from Northern Ireland.

Our current visa policy, with its reliance on the McCarran-Walter Act Provisions, has especially hindered the ability of those concerned with the Northern Ireland issue to get the complete political picture. I contend that under McCarran-Walter, our visa policy with respect to Northern Ireland, has been both arbitrary and the height of selective morality.

For example, it has been the policy of the Department of State to deny all visa applications made by representatives of the Sinn Féin Political Party. One should understand that Sinn Féin is a legally sanctioned political party participating in elections in both the North of Ireland and in the Republic. It is also the political party of the Provisional Irish Republican Army; however, membership in Sinn Féin is not always contingent on membership in the IRA. Over the years a number of prominent leaders of the Sinn Féin Party have applied for and have been denied visas to enter the United States.

Let me cite some cases. In November of 1961, Owen Carron, an elected member of the British Parliament, was scheduled to come to the United States to speak to a number of Irish American organizations and to meet with members of our Ad Hoc Committee. Mr. Carron's visa was denied by the Department of State citing Section 212(a) (27) which, as we all know, "prohibits the issuance of a visa to any foreign national who seeks to enter the United States to engage in activities prejudicial to the American public interest."

In a November 9, 1981 letter of explanation, the Department stated that "Among the factors that led to Mr. Carron's refusal were Mr. Carron's public statements in support of the legitimacy of violence and paramilitary efforts in Northern Ireland. It was the Department's opinion that Mr. Carron's entry would have had serious and adverse effects on American foreign policy interests vis a vis both the United Kingdom and Ireland."

On several occasions in recent years, the president of Sinn Féin, Mr. Gerry Adams, has been invited by Irish-American groups to speak. One such invitation was issued by the Ancient Order of Hibernians, our nation's oldest and largest Irish-American organization. They invited Adams to address their 160th Anniversary Dinner held at the AOH's national convention. He was denied under Section 212(a) (28)(f) in the words of the State Department, "because of his personal advocacy of violence." Bernadette Devlin, another leading political figure from Northern Ireland, has also been denied a visa on a number of occasions because of McCarran-Walter.

Then we have the case of the Reverend Ian Paisley. Paisley is listed officially as leader of the Democratic Unionist Party in Northern Ireland. Reverend Paisley has also in recent years been the leader of a para-military organization known as the "Third Force" which has as its aim to foster violence within the six counties of Northern Ireland. Reverend Paisley has also been one of the leading and most vocal opponents of the Anglo-Irish Agreement of November 1985. In a statement after the agreement was signed, Reverend Paisley vowed to make Northern Ireland "ungovernable" through his opposition to the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

What has been Reverend Paisley's fate when it comes to obtaining a visa to visit the United States? In August of 1986, Reverend Paisley was granted a visa to address a religious conference at Bob Jones University. Approval came only three weeks after the Adams request was denied. Paisley, in fact, entered the US under the terms of a multiple entry visa. Consider a December 1983 letter I received from the Department of State outlining the reasons why his application was approved.

"Reverend Paisley indicated that he would be participating in a religious gathering as the principal speaker at the Tenth Annual Congress on Fundamentalism. Since every visa is considered on a case by case basis, the issuance of a visa to Reverend Paisley does not constitute a change in our visa policy."

To illustrate the point about lack of consistency in the policy, I would point out that Paisley has also been denied a visa under the terms of McCarran-Walter. Let me reference a February 1983 letter from the State Department to me about Paisley.

"We are concerned about Dr. Paisley's record of inflammatory actions and statements, which we regard as contrary to the interest of the United States in the achievement of a peaceful settlement of the problems in Northern Ireland. After careful consideration, his application was denied under 212(a) (27)."

In what turned out to be a most prophetic statement, the same State Department letter stated, "Should Dr. Paisley reapply for a visa, that application will be adjudicated on the basis of the information available at that time and applicable U.S. Immigration law." A mere seven months later, the world, according to the State Department, must have changed dramatically as Paisley was granted a visa as he has been on several occasions since then.

I could go on ad infinitum about the ludicrous nature of our visa policy solely as it pertains to political figures from Northern Ireland. Suffice it to say that the vehicle to bring about some consistency is the Frank bill. I support its provisions to repeal the policy that would deny an individual a visa solely because of his/her political beliefs. I support the provisions in the bill which would draw the necessary distinction between dangerous activities, which would continue to be grounds for exclusion, and political beliefs and affiliations. I support the fact that this bill continues to make it clear that terrorists, criminals and other people who pose a genuine danger to public order, would remain excludable. However, I also strongly support the language that would not allow political dissent and terrorism to be confused as grounds for a visa approval.

We need one visa policy whether it relates to Northern Ireland or any other nation whose citizens apply for a visa to enter the United States. Our visa policy should not be a vehicle to impose a moral order over the world. It should be a policy which prohibits the entry of known terrorists and criminals. It should not be a policy which excludes persons because their political philosophy differs from ours.

I have advocated for an open visa policy as it relates to Northern Ireland throughout my 18 years in the Congress. My support for a particular person's application for a visa does not necessarily mean that I support the message they wish to impart. Similarly, a lack of support of the message should not be the grounds upon which the United States bars the messenger. Yet that has clearly been the case with respect to certain segments of legitimate political thought from Northern Ireland. It has been a shameful policy which is inimical to our democratic system. It also gives credence to the long held argument that the British government exerts far too much influence over the Department of State when it comes to Northern Ireland. We are a free people, capable of hearing diverse views and making independent judgements. No policy of the United States government should threaten the right granted us by the First Amendment, the most important individual freedoms we all enjoy.

Again, thank you Mr. Chairman for allowing me to submit testimony in support of H.R. 1119, the Immigration Exclusion and Deportation Amendments of 1987.

Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference Meeting

The Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference met in London on 16 July 1987. The Irish Joint Chairman, Mr. Brian Lenihan, TD, (Tánaiste, Deputy Prime Minister, and Minister for Foreign Affairs) was accompanied by Mr. Gerard Collins, TD (Minister for Justice). The British Joint Chairman, Mr. Tom King, MP (Secretary of State for Northern Ireland) was accompanied by Mr. John Stanley, MP (Minister of State for Northern Ireland). The Commissioner of the Garda Síochána (Irish Police Force), the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, and officials were also present.

The Conference reaffirmed the particular importance which it attaches to effective action in the field of equal opportunity in employment, both as a protection for the rights of individuals and for its beneficial effect in encouraging investment and employment. The Irish side welcomed as progress the further steps announced on 15 July 1987 by the British Government, including decisions to concentrate legislative and other action on the vital religious issue, to promote employment equality through "affirmative action" where necessary, to publish in September a new Guide to effective practice, and (in advance of wider changes to its role) to provide the Fair Employment Agency with additional resources.

The Conference considered a report by officials on the scope for improving cross-border cooperation on economic, social and cultural matters. Both sides agreed that further contact between those concerned at Ministerial and official levels in both Governments would take place. The Conference agreed to keep under review the progress made. The Conference also noted that since the establishment of the International Fund for Ireland, new opportunities for economic development had opened up.

Both sides agreed on the desirability of progress in building up the confidence of all sections of the community in the security forces, including action on the programme of special measures to improve relations between the security forces (including the Armed Forces) and the community in Northern Ireland. They expressed their determination to work towards this goal.

The Conference agreed that at its next meeting it would consider security cooperation, legal affairs, economic cooperation and the position of the Irish language in Northern Ireland.

Britain, which is said to require the deportation of Mr. Doherty to Great Britain as a terrorist, we have the right and the obligation to keep him in jail here while he is exhausting all legal processes to avoid deportation to Great Britain. Therefore, this argument suggests, we should really be happy that full legal process has been and is being made available to Mr. Doherty, and that it is precisely because of the availability of such legal process that he has been in jail all this time. We could have denied him any legal process and deported him to Great Britain as soon as we identified him.

I repeat what is evident, I am no lawyer. But I am worried by such an argument, particularly when I am told that the Board of Immigration Appeals has accused the government of unconscionably dragging its feet, and when I learn also that the attorney general has the authority to review the final decision of the board and could deport Mr. Doherty to Great Britain regardless of the fact that his office has lost each successive legal battle it has fought to achieve this very end. Is that a strange situation, that the very executive who is repeatedly defeated by the administrative board has final review of that board's decision?

I have thought and consulted and prayed a great deal about this case. Many wise people, including lawyers, have told me not to go near it. I respect but can not accept such advice. Nor am I alone. On June 18, 1987, the New York State Assembly unanimously passed a legislative resolution "strongly urging the United States Attorney General Edwin Meese III to immediately carry out and execute the court order of deportation of Joseph Patrick Doherty to the Republic of Ireland."

The sponsors of that resolution were by no means all Irish-Americans.

I repeat. I am not a lawyer. I know this is a legally complicated case. I recognize, as well, its political dimensions in terms of international relations and questions of terrorism. But in 1984, the U.S. District Court ruled that Mr. Doherty is a "political offender" (rather than a terrorist) and while the executive branch made numerous appeals, that decision stands. And so it is that those, like myself, untrained in the legal field, are uneasy when a United States court makes a decision, yet a prisoner continues to be held on allegations which were rejected by that decision.

It seems to me that however noble may be the motives of the attorney general's office in delaying the case of Mr. Doherty, ultimately whatever good might be achieved can be outweighed by the erosion of respect for our judicial processes if they are perceived as being resisted by the government itself. Justice delayed is justice denied.

As I am not a lawyer, so I am not a judge. I can not and will not judge the case of Joseph Doherty. Whether he should be in prison here or anywhere, or for how long, is for the courts to judge. The courts seem to have judged, however, that he has a legal right to be deported to the Republic of Ireland. Until it is clear that the government is listening, my uneasiness will perdure.

FREEDOM FOR ALL IRELAND

Message from Freedom For All Ireland Committee Chairman

It is very important that every Division appoint a Freedom For All Ireland Chairman and send his name and address to me. Please print and include the proper zip code. I will then be able to communicate directly with him in all things pertinent to the workings of this Committee.

I am in contact with some of the prisoners' families in Northeast Ireland, and they wish me to advise our membership of their appreciation of our efforts.

We must be able to continue our assistance, and I am confident that this committee will operate even more efficiently if every Division complies with my request by appointing a Chairman and advising me of his name and address. My address is listed below.

I hope you all enjoy a happy and safe summer.

We're Absolutely Wrong

How many times has the same thing happened to you? You find yourself at an AOH meeting, social event, or just relaxing "at the hall," when suddenly the light discussion has turned heavy. One of our own is launched into an explanation of "the real truth" or "the facts" gleaned from a letter, a conversation, or a personal visit to the "North." (Isn't it unfortunate how many of us never venture there, implicitly recognizing its detachment from the rest of Ireland?)

The myths evaporate like mist as we are treated to the disturbing revelation that the Catholic-nationalist-minority in the Six Counties is all or some of the following — it varies:

- lazy, not interested in working;
- not discriminated against in any way;
- enjoys better social programs than we have;
- is opposed to unification with the Republic;
- is not very Catholic anyway.

And we Irish-Americans are all of the following — it never varies:

- paranoid when it comes to the British;
- lacking in genuine understanding;
- totally misinformed;
- misled by trouble-makers.

You want to counter: "But what about — any or all of these — Amnesty International's repeated condemnations of British misrule in the north of Ireland;

— the Report of the International

Caucus Blasts Bush, Babbitt and Du Pont

WASHINGTON D.C. — The Irish National Caucus is asking all presidential candidates to (1) support Irish Unity and (2) to support the MacBride Principles.

To date three candidates have responded, Vice President George Bush, Mr. Pete Du Pont and Mr. Bruce Babbitt.

"All three positions are terrible," said Fr. Sean McManus, Irish National Caucus National Director. All three refused to support the MacBride Principles."

"Vice President Bush," explained

Fr. McManus, "wrote a two page response and never once mentioned the words England or Britain. He simply refers to Ireland as if it were not divided and part of it — the six counties — not under British Rule."

"The internal problems currently facing Ireland," writes Mr. Bush, "can only be solved through the concerted and cooperative efforts of all the people of Ireland . . . The people of Ireland are proud and they possess many skills, but these skills cannot be used to bring about economic recovery so necessary in Ireland as long as the bloodshed continues."

"I find that to be a very condescending and ill-formed statement," commented Fr. McManus.

"The Vice President's position on the MacBride Principles" said Fr. McManus, "is equally unsatisfactory. This is what he says:"

"With regard to the MacBride Principles, I do not believe that they will solve the long history of employment discrimination nor would they improve the long-term economic outlook for Ireland. It seems to me that you would want to improve the economic and investment climate rather than creating uncertainty and restrictions on business. If the Irish can bring about certainty, predictability and safety to their country, then the climate for investment, both foreign and domestic, will be greatly improved. Economic development is one way towards reconciliation as it will bring Irishmen together to work on a common and non-sectarian goal. This may be hard for some but necessary when we look at the future of Ireland."

"Mr. Babbitt's position," said Fr. McManus, "is also unsatisfactory. To say that the U.S. should support the elimination of discrimination in the manner preferred by the elected leaders representing Catholics is to pass the buck . . . Americans have a corporate and investment responsibility to stop U.S. dollars subsidizing discrimination in Northern Ireland."

"Furthermore," added Fr. McManus, "many elected representatives of the Catholic community support the MacBride Principles."

Mr. Du Pont did not state his position on Irish Unity. This is his position on the MacBride Principles:

"Thank you for your good letter of February 5, concerning the need to work against discrimination against Catholics in Northern Ireland."

"I fully share your conviction that such discrimination is unacceptable, and I was pleased to see in the materials you enclosed a report indicating the Du Pont Company plant in Ireland has an excellent record in this regard."

"With respect to what additional steps need to be taken, I believe we must be careful to learn from the mistakes we've made here in the United States in dealing with our civil rights problems. In particular, numerical quotas are a very unwieldy and intrusive means of ensuring equal protection, and I would be very reluctant to endorse legislation that could lead to the use of quotas in enforcement."

"Readers can see," said Fr. McManus, "that all three candidates have a very poor position on the Irish issue. Irish-Americans should simply not stand for this. They should let these candidates know immediately their positions are not acceptable."

"As we receive the positions of other candidates we will rate them and make them public. Now is the time for Irish-Americans to let their voices be heard," Fr. McManus concluded.

IRISH HISTORY CLARIFICATION

Dear Editor:

The very fine outline of Irish History and Northern Ireland in your May-June issue contained one or two inaccuracies where it touched on England-Scotland. Permit me to correct them and while I am about it, add one or two further items that your readers might find interesting.

It is true that Oliver Cromwell went to Ireland in 1649, but he was not sent by Elizabeth I; she died in 1603. When Cromwell visited Ireland there was no monarch in England. Charles I had been beheaded, his trial having been instituted by Cromwell. Cromwell later became king in all but name.

James II was not the Catholic son of Mary. The Mary to whom reference is made must be Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots. Her son James I of England, VI of Scotland, was not a Catholic. When his mother fled Scotland to take refuge in England, where she was subsequently beheaded, her infant son James was brought up by Presbyterian divines. It was that James who succeeded Elizabeth I in 1603, becoming king of both England and Scotland, and, unfortunately, also claiming Ireland. It was he who was king during the first plantation of Ulster, beginning the policy of creating a Protestant majority in the northeastern region of Ireland. We know with what consequences. (We may note in passing that James I's mother was beheaded by Elizabeth, whose father Henry VIII had beheaded her mother, and that James I's son, Charles I, was beheaded under Cromwell). At the restoration, Charles II, son of Charles I, became king to be succeeded after dying in his bed, an unusual event in those heady times, by his brother James II. Their mother was Henrietta Maria, the Catholic sister of King Louis XIII of France. The sister of Charles II and James II was the mother of William of Orange. Her name was Mary. James II openly converted to Catholicism. His brother, Charles II, when asked on his death bed if he would like to see a Catholic priest, responded, "With all my heart."

The two daughters of James II, Mary and Anne, were brought up Protestants. Mary married her first cousin, William of Orange. Thus James II was ousted by his own daughter and son-in-law cum nephew at the battle of the Boyne. What a model of the unholy family!

HOW TO HELP JOE DOHERTY SOMERSTEIN & PIKE Attorneys At Law

Dear Readers:

Joe Doherty is beginning his fifth year in prison here in America. He is imprisoned without having ever been charged with committing any crime in this country. In addition, he has consistently defeated the governments — English and American — at every significant juncture of the litigation, six decisions in his favor over the past four years.

Nonetheless, Joe remains in prison. As the grim anniversary of his incarceration comes yet again, we have begun to receive inquiries from people concerned about Joe and eager to show their concern.

One way of doing so is to remember with a telegram mailgram, or card. Every message of support to Joe is, at the same time, a message to his jailers that Joe is respected, and cared for and that he does not stand alone. Joe's address is:

SELF-HELP GROUP SEEKS FUNDING SOURCE

Dear Mr. Henshaw,

I received a letter from a friend in Ireland requesting advice on securing aid from various funds being set up in the United States to help various types of projects in Ireland.

I believe this self-help program is a very commendable endeavor on their part, and I would very much like to help them in any way I can.

If you know of such funds or other means of aid I would appreciate you forwarding to myself or Margaret Donoghue any information that would aid the group to continue their great work.

I have enclosed a copy of her original letter which I believe will help you in understanding this request.

Once again I thank you for any help you may be able to give us in this regard.

Editor: Can any readers help?

Dear Charlie and Doreen,

I was thinking about your visit to Ireland in July and am looking forward to meeting you then. The reason for writing to you now is that I am working in a centre in Waterford with a self-help philosophy that sets about helping people to help themselves. We have a very high level of unemployment here in Waterford. The average in the country is 20% and here it goes up as high as 75% in some areas. In our centre we research projects that could provide viable employment and then find people with the skills to suit the particular type of work. To date we have set up a successful clothing company, a light engineering company, a health food restaurant, a graphic arts company and a company manufacturing protective units will be opened very shortly.

We have read in the papers of different funds being set up in the United States to help various types of projects in Ireland. We find that very often these funds are tied up in red tape and it is difficult for a project like ours to avail of these funds. This was discussed at our Board of Directors meeting and I volunteered to try and find out some more information and the possibility of setting up such a fund. We would see this fund being set up to directly support our efforts here and we would supply a detailed plan of what our needs are in this regard.

So I am writing to you for your advice on the setting up of such a project and what would be the best way to go about doing it. I will appreciate any advice you can give us on this and look forward to hearing from you.

Looking forward to seeing you in summer.

SCHULTZ APPRISED OF DOHERTY CASE

Honorable George Schultz
Secretary, Dept. of State
Dear Mr. Schultz:

The membership of the American Irish Congress is very concerned about the image foreign nations have been given of the United States over the past several years and have, therefore, directed me to convey these concerns to you.

The loss of 250 US Marines in Beirut, followed most recently by the deaths of thirty-seven sailors aboard the USS Stark, has awakened many Americans to pay closer attention to the actions of government officials concerning foreign affairs. Certainly, the Iran-Contra hearings have been an embarrassment for the United States internationally as well as domestically, rightly or wrongly.

We feel that the United States government is going to find itself in a further embarrassing situation because of its blatant abuse of constitutional law and disregard of the federal justice system. I refer specifically to the case of Mr. Joseph Doherty, an internee starting his fifth year of incarceration at the Metropolitan Correctional Center in New York City, uncharged and unconvicted of any crime whatsoever, imprisoned in defiance of federal court orders to the contrary, all on the demand of the government of Britain. I enclose a condensed history fact-sheet on Mr. Doherty for your information.

The continued imprisonment of Joseph Doherty coupled with the cat-and-mouse game being played out in federal courts by the Justice Department, which awaits the most advantageous political moment for service of another British extradition warrant upon Mr. Doherty, is putting many Administration officials in questionable circumstances and opening the door to further international embarrassment for the United States.

We realize that the Department of Justice is specifically responsible and answerable for the Doherty case. However, it has not escaped us that career bureaucrats within your department, whose political sympathies are openly pro-British and virulently anti-Irish, have convinced this Administration to scrap the Constitution and ignore the Judiciary in favor of the whims of Britain and to the detriment of this nation and its ideals.

The Story of Thomas J. Clarke

The dedication of a memorial monument to the memory of Irish Patriot Thomas J. Clarke, on May 17, 1987 in Suffolk County, New York, was the culmination of an intense and successful search prompted by an historic find by AOH New York State Historian Mike McCormack in 1983. First some background on this revered Irishman.

Every nation honors patriots who fought for its freedom. George Washington is the personification of the American Revolution, even na Gael, the American branch of the Fenian movement. Apprehended on a trip to England in 1883, Clarke was sentenced to penal servitude for Fenian activities. He persevered through a 15-year prison existence so severe that two men sentenced with him were driven insane. Eventually released in 1898, he married Miss Kattie Daly and returned to the U.S. He settled in Brooklyn, returned to Fenian activities and was employed by an Irish-American newspaper edited by John Devoy — the most though Sam Adams was its architect and Nathan Hale a martyr for its cause. In Ireland's long struggle for independence, the 1916 Easter Rising is the milestone that led to the modern Republic of Ireland. It is the Lexington and Concord of Irish history — when a handful of hopefuls challenged the Crown for the principle of freedom. Padraig Pearse is the personification of that rising, yet its architect and a man who gave his life in its cause was Thomas J. Clarke.

Born in 1858, Clarke was raised in Co. Tyrone where a landlord-dominated population bordered on serfdom. In 1878, he joined the Fenian Irish Republican Brotherhood (IRB), a secret revolutionary organization not unlike America's Sons of Liberty. In 1881, he fled to New York and became active in Clan powerful figure in Clan na Gael at the time. Highly respected for the suffering he endured for Irish freedom, Clarke became one of the Clan's most trusted members. Yet his love for his adopted home was manifested in 1905 when the southern district Court of New York accepted applicant Thomas J. Clarke as a United States Citizen on certificate number 7405.

In 1906, Clarke moved to Suffolk County in hope of improving his wife's ill health. Though prematurely aged at 48, he was not put out to pasture. In December 1907, he answered the call and returned to Ireland to reorganize the IRB. As the trusted link between Clan na Gael and the IRB, he governed the Supreme Council and was its most powerful advocate of revolutionary (Continued on Page Nineteen)

MORE ON PROTESTANT ENROLLMENT IN AOH

Dear Editor:

In his letter in the March-April Digest on Irish Protestants seeking admittance to the AOH, Pat Gorman makes a couple of disturbing statements.

The AOH is Catholic as well as Irish for historical reasons related to its very reasons for coming into being; and if it lost its religious character, it would no longer be the same organization. Still, it seems contradictory that while the AOH today works for an end to the religious distinctions and prejudices in Ireland that caused its own creation, like-minded Protestant Irishmen and women cannot take part in its own activities. It seems to me that there should be some way for Irish Protestants to participate in the AOH.

Mr. Gorman says that those wishing to participate in the AOH should become Catholics. Even given that the AOH is a private association, this should strike a disturbing note among people such as ourselves whose forefathers were repeatedly told to change their religion if they wanted better treatment.

Furthermore, Mr. Gorman's argument that he can't join the Orange Order (while they presumably can) makes sense only if he assumes that Hibernianism is the Catholic equivalent of Orangism. May that never be the case! Orangism is not an option for the Irish Protestants who would like to take part in AOH activities. They wouldn't join the Orange Order because they're Protestants any more than Mr. Gorman would join the Ku Klux Klan because he's white.

I hope a different approach can be found to this question. In any case, the Irish Protestants who have been involved in working for justice and unity in Ireland may take comfort from the fact that organizations such as the Irish American Unity Conference, the Political Education Committee, and Noraid would be proud to have them.

N.Y. St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee Grants Scholarships

The New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade and Celebration Committee has inaugurated a program of scholarship awards for high school and college students. "The purpose of the program," in the words of Parade Committee Chairman Frank Beirne, "is not only to stimulate scholarship and a greater awareness of Irish-American history among our young people, but also to demonstrate that the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America and those other organizations affiliated with the largest parade in the Free World are not once-a-year, only on Saint Patrick's Day Irishmen, but rather that we take seriously our role in the preservation and propagation of Irish culture in the New World as well as home in Ireland."

The scholarships were made possible due to the generosity of three men: Bill Burke of the Bank of Ireland, Dan Kelly of Kelly Furniture, and John Grimes of the Irish Echo.

Scholarship Awards

At the college level, three scholarships were awarded for research papers on The Irish Immigrant Ex- perience in America 1820-1870. The first prize ($600) for a paper on The Fenians, was won by Eileen Holt of Iona College (Eileen Holt is the daughter of Dr. Frank Holt of River Vale, N.J., and the grand-daughter of the late Charles Holt from Wicklow via Dublin). Second prize ($300) was won by Ann Walsh of Manhattan College (Ann's mother lives in Inchaboy, Gort, County Galway). Third prize ($200) was won by Eileen Moore of Iona College (Eileen is the daughter of Tom and Mary Holt Moore of the Bronx, and another grand-daughter of Charlie Holt).

For high school students there was an essay contest on the topic of Archbishop John Hughes and the Irish Immigrant. The first prize ($500) was won by Brian O'Connor of Magr. Farrell High School (Brian is the son of Mr. & Mrs. Michael O'Connor of Staten Island). Second prize ($200) was won by Kathleen McGreal of Spellman High School (Kathleen is the daughter of Frank and Sally McGreal of the Bronx). To insure impartiality, Scholarship Committee Chairman Jim McLaughlin prepared copies of the papers identified by number only to the panel of professional educators who did the grading.

Irish Books

An added feature of the New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade scholarship program is the awarding of $500 worth of Irish books (over 50 books) each to the libraries of the winning high school and college students. The books were obtained through a special arrangement with the Irish American Cultural Institute (College of St. Thomas - Box 5026, 2115 Summit Ave., St. Paul, Minnesota 55105-5545). The recipients this year were Magr. Farrell High School on Staten Island (represented by Brother Thomas O'Connor) and Iona College in New Rochelle, New York (represented by Brother Charles B. Quinn).

1988 Scholarship Program Expanded

Because of the tremendous response to the announcement of the parade scholarship program Parade

Committee Chairman Frank Beirne has announced that eligibility for competition will be expanded for 1988 to include not only schools affiliated with the parade committee, but also students belonging to or related to members of organizations affiliated with the New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade and Celebration Committee. Formal announcement of the details of the 1988 scholarship will be made early in the 1987/88 school year.

Heart Attack Fells Echo's John Grimes

MOUNT KISCO, NY—John Grimes, publisher of the Irish Echo, the largest-selling Irish-American newspaper in the United States, died of a heart attack recently at Northern Westchester Hospital Center here.

Grimes, 54, of Pound Ridge, had succeeded his father, Patrick J. Grimes, as publisher of the New York City-based newspaper a decade ago.

Under his leadership, the Echo started a Boston edition in 1981.

Officials of the weekly newspaper, which has a circulation of 46,000, said Grimes' wife, Claire, would succeed him as publisher.

Born in the Bronx, Grimes attended Manhattan Prep and the New York School of Music. He was a 1963 graduate of Manhattan College.

"He was one of the most honest individuals I ever met," said Jack Thornton, editor of the Echo. "He was involved in all aspects of the paper." Grimes "would sit down and set type and get into the makeup of a page, in addition to the administration of the paper, which took up most of his time," Thornton said.

Grimes is survived by his wife and two daughters, Jennifer, 20, and Katy, 17. The funeral mass was held in St. Patrick's Church in Bedford Village.

John Grimes was a member of AOH Division 1, New York County.

Edward Metzler Dies at Home

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Edward L. Metzler, whose mother's name was Teresa Alice O'Hare, died on March 11, 1987 at his home in Chevy Chase, MD. He was a member of the Emerald Isle Division, AOH.

Brother Metzler was born in Kansas City, MO. He grew up there and in Milwaukee. He graduated from Marquette University, where he earned a law degree. In 1934, he moved to Washington and earned a master's degree in international law at George Washington University.

In the mid-1930s, Brother Metzler went to work for the State Department. Shortly thereafter he joined the Justice Department where he remained until 1971, when he retired. He was a trial lawyer throughout his career, appearing before the U.S. Court of Claims and other courts on behalf of the government.

During World War II, he was a captain in the Army, Judge Advocate General's Corps, serving in the Philippines and Japan.

Brother Metzler was a member of the Blessed Sacrament Catholic Church, Fossils Club and the American Legion. He was a generous supporter of the Edward P. Keefe Memorial Fund, an on-going program sponsored by the Emerald Isle Division to assist men studying for the priesthood who will serve in the Archdiocese of Washington.

Survivors include his beloved wife, Elizabeth Costelloe Metzler of Chevy Chase; five children, Maria Johnson of Austin, Texas; John of Arlington, VA; Joseph of Alexandria, VA; Robert of Bethesda, MD and Mark of Silver Spring, MD and six grand-children.

JOBS IN IRELAND HOPE AND LITTLE ELSE — FOR MANY

The stones and castles crumble. The high cross, time-honed by the wet winds since ancient times, endures silently. The mossy skeletal ruins, the round towers, the tumbled stone cottages, all of olden days, stand as aged monuments offering muted homage to a past of simplistic grandeur. We may ask: is Ireland's past its present image? Is the new economy as non-productive as the crumbling stones? The old ruins cannot make new jobs. The round towers cannot pay the V.A.T. and the paycheck tax. Aside from our unshakable faith, the treasures of the past are not fitting into the new scheme of things.

Modern Ireland reflects, prophetically, the thoughts of William Butler Yeats: "To Fumble in a greasy till," he wrote of the nation-state built on ideology and with its survival needs dependent on shaky commerce. He also wrote: " . . . Romantic Ireland's dead and gone; it's with O'Leary in the grave." His words have come home to roost. Ask the young Irish women and men who search and travel for jobs what they think of Ireland's beauty and romantic history — now that potatoes are being imported, and livestock is shipped to EEC countries for profitable (not Irish) processing.

Wise minds have said over the years that the present fortunes and future destiny of any people evolve from their history. Historical treasures — artifacts, antiquities, great deeds, family and native traditions — Ireland has it all. Acquired gifts of skill and art developed by personal traits are handed down and are enhanced.

Each successive generation in recent Ireland has left its mark in literature, politics, soldiering, songs and music, visual arts and artful products; it's all there. But what is it really worth to the young adults looking for jobs? Unfortunately, each Irish generation must call itself poor. An Irish citizen can relish the past, but the past, magnificent as it is, cannot pay the rent or make the car payment. Flourishing countries have learned and prospered from the past. Those who have gone before have left legacies of financial success to their sons and daughters. Switzerland is a good example. The Swiss financiers are still complaining about William Tell wasting a good apple.

Her Solitary Anguish

By PETER KING

It was late evening as she sat alone in the front room of her stark Belfast flat — the darkness of her world broken only by the fitful glow from the flaming hearth. Outside, a wet wind raged.

Heavy wallpaper covered the walls to stave off Belfast's corrosive dampness. Nothing, however, could protect her from the endless agony of Belfast life.

She was a Catholic and being a Catholic in Belfast made her a victim — a victim of British oppression. Her family had always resisted the oppression, but the price was high — her father finally dying in prison after years of being brutalized; her brother blown apart in a bombing; and her husband serving a life sentence in Long Kesh. And so many friends and neighbors had suffered as well.

Life for her had become a pitiless montage of prison visits and funerals. All the while, she was raising her three sons.

Each day began as a test of survival and, to survive, she must stand defiant and never let life's sorrows break her spirit. No matter what, she would remain her own person. Her clothes were always tailored and as stylish as her meager funds would allow and her makeup was carefully applied each day.

But such a terribly draining struggle takes its toll and leaves its mark. Even though she was in her early 30s, the glare of the flame mercilessly revealed the deep lines which so prematurely seared the otherwise silk-like softness of her classic Celtic face. Her eyes, fatigued from years of fighting tears, had taken on a look of permanent sadness.

Tonight, her problem was more immediate. She feared that the moment she had so long dreaded was upon her. Her oldest son, not yet 17, had been more and more out of the house. It was for Gaelic lessons, he said. Though she hoped against hope that he was truthful, she knew better. His face betrayed him — it was the face of her father, her brother and her husband. Like so many Belfast mothers, she knew all too well that sons do indeed have sons as brave as their fathers. Today he had been more remote and secretive than ever and then suddenly — just after dark — he was out the door and gone.

Now she could do nothing but wait — alone. Her two younger sons were in deep sleep and only the howling wind, the crackling logs and the creaking of the rocker against the old wood floor broke the stillness.

She was no stranger to waiting. As a young girl and as a married woman, she had endured many nights of uncertainty. But it had been different then. Her mother had been alive and they drew strength from one another. Together, they had withstood even the most tragic news. Now, with her mother dead for almost a year, all strength had to come from within herself.

As the hours went by and he still had not returned, she gave a fleeting glance through the quivering shadows at the crucifix on the wall — her last link to a religion whose clerics had long since exchanged their birthright for the shilling. But still she felt alone and so she stared back into the fireplace at the flames' final tremors.

The fire went out. Shrouded in darkness, she wrapped her arms around herself and braced for the cruel cold of the long night.

It was after dawn when he finally returned. They exchanged knowing looks and her exhausted face smiled with the joy of relief. She did not ask him where he had been or what he done. It was enough for her that he was alive and that they had each survived the night.

Now she had to be ready for the new day which had already begun.

Hibernian Sports

Mike Heslin

BINGHAMTON, NY

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans!

Wrestling — Not pro wrestling; nothing to do with the WWF! Good, legitimate amateur wrestling! Mark Cody, son of Leo and Mary Cody of Binghamton, recently won a gold medal in the 198 lb. class in Canada. In reaching this pinnacle, Mark beat wrestlers from Asia and Europe. Congratulations, Mark. Mark's proud parents are members of Division 1, Broome County.

Tennis, anyone? — At Wimbledon, a young Australian player by the name of Pat Cash surprised the tennis buffs and experts by beating Ivan Lendl in the men's finals. Then he shocked those allegedly composed English sportsmen and ladies by climbing into the stands to hug his father. Right on, Patrick Cash.

Baseball — The Yankees owner, Geo. Steinbrenner, in hot water again. This time for calling the young black accountant he has working for the Yankees, "Boy", on national TV. John Thompson, the coach of Georgetown, who was also on the show, said that sometimes we get caught up in the semantics rather than what is being said. For all those who do not have access to the NY metro newspapers, this is how the story played. The New York Times gave it a small box of five paragraphs on page 20 or so, and the New York Post gave it slightly less coverage than the invasion of earth by Martians. Rupert Murdoch's paper is outdoing itself with self-proclaimed hype. The only thing they're missing is Jimmy Breslin, who is going to Newsday, YR believes, for the only reason, M-O-N-E-Y. Breslin even admits this.

The Mets aren't having much success lately. Lee Mazilli has taken Darryl Strawberry to task for not playing. Strawberry says he's hurting. Gooden's back pitching. Their All-Star catcher is playing hurt most everyday. It might be time for Bill Gallo to bring back "Basement Bertha".

The Yankees took over 1st place in the East. They swept the Blue Jays when no one expected them. Yet, the other night against Viola of Minnesota, they could not be untracked. This Viola has a better record than the other pitcher in the majors whose name begins with "V". Venezuela of the Dodgers. Check the stats.

This should prove an interesting season. The other teams appear to fade in and out. At this writing, it is almost time for the All-Star break. What happens after that only time will tell!

The minor leagues are in full swing. In the local area, Oneonta, Auburn and Elmira all have teams. So far, it looks as they take turns winning. Not that YR thinks it's fixed. It is just that these teams are comprised of many young ballplayers. Young ballplayers have tremendous mood swings and ups and downs in their careers. They are great to watch. So if there is a minor league team in your area, please support it.

On the local scene, the American Legion Baseball Tournament was held in Binghamton. The two local teams went out early. There were teams from Puerto Rico, Ohio, and farther West than that. The local sponsors would love to have it again next year.

Did you see the amount of money that the town in Florida is investing in a spring training facility for the KC Royals. YR would love to hear some owner refute that "Baseball is very, very good to me." They can't and the working class doesn't have the money to buy a club.

Basketball — The other Sunday, ABC Sports carried a college legend game. It was between UCLA and North Carolina. Both teams went all the way back to the late fifties, early sixties for some players. Other players were of more recent vintage, as in Michael Jordan, among others. The game actually meant nothing. It was fun to watch. Some of North Carolina's players da! J to the days of the Maguire railway which saw players from the NY Metro area suddenly take an interest in a school below the Mason-Dixon line.

Colleges appear to want it both ways. They want the big bucks that national TV gets them. At the same time, they want these young men who get in these schools, to have all the exposure as students (?); to be above reproach; to be pure of spirit and humble of heart. Yet, just recently, it was published in the media, that a certain college hasn't graduated one single solitary student who has gone there on an athletic scholarship for a very definite period. Now, ladies and gentlemen, whose fault is that? Is it the guy who accepts the scholarship? Or is it the school? Just like that old song, "Is the turtle soup real or is it the mock?"

This column will be short due to YR's being a delegate to the NYS AOH Convention in Niagara Falls. Keep those cards and letters coming, folks. Send them to PO Box 166 ESS, Binghamton, NY 13904.

Irish Sportsmen Triumphant in USA and France

FRANK O'MARA

SEAN KELLY

(From Ireland Today)

Irish victories as far apart as Indianapolis and Nice have delighted sports fans in recent weeks. Over the weekend of 7-8 March, the inaugural World Indoor Athletics Championships were held at the Hoosier Dome, Indianapolis, USA. Ireland's representation was strong, especially in the middle distances and hopes were high. The results amply confirmed these hopes; 2 gold medals, 1 silver.

The 1500 meters gold medal winner was Marcus O'Sullivan from Cork, now with the University of Pennsylvania, while Frank O'Mara took the gold in the 3000 meters event. Paul O'Donovan completed the Irish hat trick of medals by winning the silver in the 3000 meters race. Both O'Mara and O'Donovan are at present at the University of Arkansas.

On the other side of the Atlantic, Ireland's world cycling champion Sean Kelly from Carrick on Suir, Co. Tipperary, won the Paris-Nice cycling classic for a record sixth time. The other leading Irish contender, Stephen Roche, was fourth.

These great victories coincide with publication of a survey by the European Commission which shows that the Irish are ahead of most other EC countries in their enthusiasm for sports and membership of sports clubs. More than half of all Irish people — 56% — declared themselves sports enthusiasts, compared with 43% in Britain and Luxembourg. Some 26% of Irish people belong to sports clubs — the fourth highest figure after the Dutch, Luxembourgers and West Germans — but 15% of the Irish participate actively in sports, the second highest figure after Luxembourg with 19%.

Division 8 of Clinton held another successful tribute to Our Lady of Knock on August 21. Following 7 p.m. Mass the group gathered before the outdoor Shrine to Our Lady of Knock for the recitation of the Rosary. They regrouped in the church hall for a friendly Irish get-together featuring delicious deserts.

Division Eight of Springfield closed their season in a most appropriate way by observing the opening of the Marian Year with a Living Rosary. All the lights in the meeting room were turned off as the members gathered by candle light before a Shrine to Our Lady, Sisters of St. Joseph and Notre Dame, who are members of the Division, led the recitation of the Rosary, following which the members enjoyed a friendly social hour.

Division 14 is alive and functioning in Watertown. On June 26 a successful fund raiser was held for member Kathie Formisano, who had the misfortune of having her leg removed with possible loss of the other leg. Please remember her in your prayers.

The Kay McNamara Scholarship was awarded to Maureen Dunn on June 27. She is the daughter of Mary "Rusty" Dunn.

At the recent State Convention Sister Anne Devaney of Div. 14, Watertown, was endorsed as a candidate for a seat on the National Board. Anne has served in various capacities in her thirty years as a member, including past division, county and state president. In 1984 she was national Chairman of Catholic Action.

LAOH and AOH members will sponsor a celebration for Our Lady of Knock and also honor State President Mary Ann O'Brien on Sunday, August 23 at St. Thomas Church. Mass will be at 2:00 followed by refreshments and entertainment. Plans are being completed for Minnesota Irish Festival August 29-30, at St. Paul, MN. Initially started by the Catholic Golden Age group, the LAOH members carry this beautiful tradition for 365 days of the year by the daily burning of candles on either side of the Tabernacle.

State Conventions: If you have not already forwarded the list of state and county officers for 1987-1989, please do so immediately so our records are kept up to date.

Price Lists: Correction on the Price List. (The printer is trying, innocently, to help us get rich quick). Treasurer's report forms are not one dollar, but one thin dime.

Postage: Be sure to include enough postage when ordering supplies. Ten Rituals or fifty sheets of stationary and fifty envelopes cost $2.40. This is a guideline only.

MISSIONS

National Chairman of Missions Dorothy Fowler is concerned that her workload is too light. She has received contributions for the Columbian Missions from only eight states at halfway mark time, toward our goal of $44,000. It would be nice to receive your donations now instead of at the final push.

Rev. James O'Brien, Columbian Mission Education Director, is very pleased to report that many requests are being received for Mass Cards, Prayer Cards, video tape information, enrollments, etc. Write to Father. He will be happy to send you supplies and information.

Sheila M. Clifford
National President

The summer draws to a close and we are preparing for a season of renewed Hibernian activities. With vacations but a memory and the business of State Conventions behind us, we will concentrate our efforts on the Hibernian programs for 1987-1988.

The National Irish Essay Contest will soon be announced. National Historian, Kathie Linton, will be sending the necessary materials to all State Historians prior to September 1st.

Dorothy Fowler, National Chairman of Missions, has reached half of her goal, but has not heard from many states. Have you sent in your donation to the Columbian Missions? If not, please do so as soon as possible.

Catholic Action reports!! Many of you have been generous with your time and talents in Catholic Action activities. Has your state sent in its report to Mary Douville, National Chairman of Catholic Action?

GOOD NEWS: The two granite benches have been placed next to the Obelisk of Honor in the Medal of Honor Grove at Valley Forge, Pa. If you are visiting the Valley Forge area, please visit the Medal of Honor Grove and especially the Obelisk of Honor. During the past years donations from the AOH and the LAOH helped fund the Obelisk. Through the generous donations of the LAOH, we have been able to donate the benches.

During the past several months, several of you have inquired whether any of the cards received from Barton Cotton are available. We do have some available. Please contact Sally Murphy, 130 Stanmore Road, Baltimore, Md. 21212, if you would like additional cards.

On August 5, 1987, the Hibernian Forest was dedicated in Kilglin, Co. Kerry. This was the first joint project of the AOH and LAOH since the National Convention.

If we are to continue to be successful, we must remember that we are members of an organization that has been in existence for 93 years. We must continue to increase our numbers. Each division should seek new members and where possible, new divisions should be started. We must remember that our goals are to foster the ideals and perpetuate the history and traditions of the Irish people and promote Irish culture. We must promote "Friendship, Unity, and Christian Charity."

FRIENDSHIP — we should regard all members as one family; and assist one another in sickness and distress. UNITY — this is the foundation of every virtue. Friendship has little force in the struggle to exist, unity is needed to bind. We cannot hope to achieve our goals unless we are true to one another.

CHRISTIAN CHARITY — Christian Charity strengthens and cements both friendship and unity. We should regard the sacred teachings of Our Holy Mother the Church as a light and guide. If all members will practice our Motto—Friendship, Unity, Christian Charity, we will encourage our membership to grow.

Brigid of Kildare (A Bit of Irish History)

It was only twenty years after the "Days of Lamentation" for beloved Patrick that the quest for sanctity inspired another great patron saint of Ireland—Brigid of Kildare.

Brigid was born around the year 450 near Dundalk. Although born from a noble family, Brigid remained close to the land and worked as a milkmaid. She was known for her outstanding beauty as well as her virtue and many noble youths asked her hand in marriage. But Brigid declined because she was attracted to the religious life. She sought out the poor and gave everything she received to them. She told her father, "I'm a Christian and Christians should give." Brigid eventually went to work among the poor of Connaught. However, the people of Kildare begged her to come back to them. She eventually returned to found a famous monastery church and school at Kildare where both rich and poor came to study and pray.

The name of the church was Cill-dara (Kildare) or "Church of the Oak Tree." Though gentle, Brigid confronted King Diarmait (Diarmuid) because of his strict judgment. She condemned most tyrants: "Children of kings are serpents—save for a few God hath chosen."

Brigid died in 525 A.D., and such was her regard among the Irish that they buried her remains near Patrick in County Down. The connection between the two saints in Irish tradition is seen in the humorous saying which notes: "When it storms on St. Patrick's Day it is only through the jealousy of Brigid."

The Celts of both Ireland and Scotland hold her in particular honor. The fame of her sanctity spread to the continent where entire cities adopted her as a patron. It is estimated that over the whole world 10,000 women bear her name and honor her as "Mary of the Gael."

Irish Nannies in America

FALL CLASS 1986, The new England School for Nannies, East Longmeadow, Massachusetts.

100 job possibilities for every nanny in the USA! That is what New England School for Nannies, Inc. has to offer each new Irish immigrant with a non-preference visa. New England School for Nannies, Inc. is the only nanny school with immigration approval; consequently, they are extending an invitation to the newly arriving Irish to train to become nannies just as their ancestors did. Today the nanny has returned due to the extraordinary demand for in-home child care which is primarily caused by the dual-working couple.

Training programs at New England School for Nannies, Inc. is offered twice per year in the fall and spring. The course is 14 weeks long and includes Growth & Development, Special Needs Children, Educational Play, The Modern Nanny, CPR, First Aid, Nutrition, Child Psychology, Child Safety and Family Dynamics. English and American Culture is also taught to foreign students. Although this is an intensive program, the classes are quite small (10-15 students) and each student receives a great deal of personal attention by a very dedicated faculty of four teachers, a student advisor and an academic advisor. The students also enjoy several field trips and social gatherings.

Living arrangements for out-of-town students are provided by local host families: students get free room and board in exchange for limited child care.

Due to the great demand, the school prepares the students for interviews early in the program and most of the students secure their jobs even before graduation. Basic benefits to our graduates may include: private room and board; a minimum starting salary of $200-$250 per week; travel; use of a car;

two weeks paid vacation. There is a broad spectrum of jobs to choose from nationwide. Positions that NESN graduates have secured for example have included famous movie stars (Meryl Streep for instance), doctors, lawyers, investment bankers, CEO's, pilots, ranchers, professors, rock stars, etc. And each job reflects a different type of lifestyle that the nanny adopts depending on the job she/he selects—because when the nanny accepts a job, she/he becomes part of the family.

If you or someone you know is interested in a nanny career, you may contact New England School for Nannies, Inc. in East Longmeadow, Massachusetts, for more information at (413) 525-1861. NESN is licensed by the Department of Education, Commonwealth of Massachusetts, as a vocational school. It is also a full member of ACNS and MAPS.

laws, the work of Margaret Murphy and Helen Walton, was unanimously approved by the delegates. President Rosemary Hoffman appointed Kathy Gibbons as publicity chairman for the state board.

Congratulations went out to Dick and Sue Lauster of the Rose Kennedy Division on the adoption of their son Jeffrey. Sue is division president. Activities of the division included participation in the Pontiac Irish Festival in August, with Kathy Gibbons and Rose Trapp as chairmen and charitable contributions of $500 to the Columbian Missions and $100 to Hanna Meals.

Upcoming are a mass in honor of Our Lady of Knock on August 23 and the Pallotine Dinner Dance on September 20, with dancing music by Noel Henry.

Before closing shop for July and August, the Ethel Kennedy Division held their seventh annual "Greatest Garage Sale," which was its usual unqualified success.

Hurt Learns Irish Jig

WILLIAM HURT will dance an Irish jig in his next movie. Laureen N'Neil-James, with him after a lesson, had the distinct pleasure of teaching him the side step and rising step. She learned that Mr. Hurt's good foot positions stem from the dancing he studied in the Juilliard School in New York. William is proud of his Celtic heritage (middle name is McChord) and promised Laureen that although short, his dance would represent his very best.

Flatley's Corner

God bless it, is strong, but it is seasonal and job billets are quickly filled. While it is certainly true that economic development is under way, and the government is organizationally geared to make things happen, it is not happening at a pace sufficient to catch and reverse the rate of emigration.

There is a cadre of young professionals and technicians in Ireland today who are staying and prospering. They are busily involved in good careers in the developing industrial and business growth. However, there is a large number of the young onlookers who don't seem to fit into the hi-tech picture. They need the instant push to survive. The options are few. Emigration is the only hope for a job within a reasonable period of time for these desperate seekers. It is sad to see the government of the Republic of Ireland unofficially encouraging the youth of the nation to leave because funds for the dole handout are not available. Many of the young Irish arriving in the U.S. soon become illegals and must eventually return to Ireland, some more than once. The periodic hiatus has a delaying and interfering effect on the development of working careers either in or out of Ireland. There was a time when the young Irish immigrant had only to work and wait a few years for U.S. citizenship. The new U.S. immigration legislation, signed into law November 6, 1986, makes it difficult for the young Irish greenhorn to obtain a green card and permanent residence in the U.S. The new law will dampen Irish hopes, and has created a new social predicament. They cannot overstay their U.S. visit and they cannot make a go of it in Ireland. For these young outcast Irish workers life is certainly tough and hope is slim.

Recent (AOH) discussions on the subject with the Consul General of Ireland in New York, Mr. Jim Flavin, left no doubt that the cognizant government officials are deeply concerned, but resources are tight. Ireland is a small country and the tax yield is low.

As the stones and castles crumble an economic fortress must be built. A way must be found to push the hard times into past history—push it into a corner of history with the ruins of the past.

Help is needed. It can only come from two sources: the Irish government, and concerned Irish Americans. If some of the sentimental fervor of the Irish Americans can be channeled from the zealous interest, valid as it is, in the Northern Ireland politics and directed toward the less intriguing, steady economy/jobs problems in the Republic, the lives of many young Irish people would benefit. A sound economy solves a lot of political problems. Good jobs and prosperity in the south will wake up the northern neighbors, and hopefully, would help in achieving a favorable political settlement. If by some miracle the Republic of Ireland was suddenly handed sovereignty over the 6 counties, the Irish government would likely go bankrupt. It is presently costing the British government more than a billion pounds a year to govern Northern Ireland. The Irish economy in its present state would be in turmoil readjusting to a 32 county nation. Ireland's future, regarding both political goals and financial stability, will be decisively influenced by the way the government of the Republic of Ireland handles the economic and emigration dilemma.

Questions and Answers

By Professor Robert T. Meyer, Catholic University

Note: Please forward questions to Professor Robert T. Meyer, Chair of Celtic Studies, Catholic University, Washington, D.C. 20064.

Q. Would you be able to tell me something of the origin of the name Brankin? Rev. Anthony J. Brankin, Chicago, ILL.

A. In Irish your name was O Branagáin, which means 'descendant of Branagan' which was a diminutive of Bran, 'raven'. It was the name of a family of the Cinel Eoghain in Derry. You were close by there when you were in Armagh. There are variant spellings and pronunciations of the name: O Branagan, O Branigan, O Brenegan, Branagan, Branigan, Brennigan, Brangan, Brankin, Brankan.

Q. I am interested in the best method of securing copies of birth, marriage and death certificates of my grandparents and great-grandparents in County Cork. Jerome J. Bradley, Dallas, Texas.

A. Write to the Bureau of Vital Statistics in Cork, Co. Cork, Ireland.

Q. Will you please send me information on the name Moor? John Moor, Fleming, Ohio.

A. Your name in Irish was O Mordha, meaning 'descendant of Mordhe' the majestic one. This was the name of an illustrious family of Leinster and they were chiefs of Leix. Their chief fortress was at Dunemawe, near Maryborough, and its ruins are still there. The O More's made a remarkable figure in Irish history for they defied English rule and power for many centuries. Rory O More was a celebrated chieftain and waged many wars against both Mary and Elizabeth. Father Woulfe says that probably no Irish family suffered greater cruelties at the hands of the English. In 1609 the remnants of the clan were transplanted to Kerry where they settled near Tarbert, but many of them gradually returned to their native home and the family is now well represented in Leinster. There are variants of the name: O Mora, O Marey, O More, O Moore, Morey, Moor.

Q. Could you please give me information on the name Quinliak. Michael Quinliak, Florissant, Missouri

A. In Irish your name was O Cuindliak, and it meant 'descendant of Cuindliak'. This was the name of a literary family and no one seems to know the meaning of the name, nor who Cuindliak was. It was the family that partook in the compiling of the famous Book of Lecan manuscript. The name is mentioned in the Annals of the Four Masters for the year 1342. According to Father Woulfe, Irish Names and Surnames (Dublin 1932) your spelling of the name is now used in County Mayo. There are variants in the spelling and pronunciation as Cundlish, Cunlish, Quinliak, Quinliak.

Q. Could you please give me the origin and meaning of my mother's surname, Aughwan. Her folks came from County Mayo and the name does not seem to be a common one. Frances C. LaMoy, Camillus, New York.

A. Originally in Irish the name was O hEachdhubhain, meaning 'descendant of Eachdhubhain', meaning 'the black steed.' You must remember that the ancient Irish were very fond of horses and even today the Dublin Horse Show draws as many people as would a visit from the Pope (well almost!). To call a man a steed meant that he had staying powers in battle, great strength, speed, etc. Father Woulfe also says it is a rare Mayo surname and he gives only the form Aghoon. Apparently he had never met up with the spelling Aughwan.

Q. Could you please give me some information on the name Lynett? Thomas F. Lynett, Akron, Ohio.

A. Your name in Irish was Lionoid, meaning 'son of Lionot' possibly a diminutive of Leonard, certainly from the same root and meaning 'little lion' just as English Lionel. The name came into Ireland with the Normans. Your ancestors must have come over to Ireland in the 12th century and settled in the West. Father Woulfe concurs with you in saying that your name comes from County Mayo. There are variants to the name as Lyncoid, Lyncod, Lynett.

NOTA BENE: If you desire an immediate reply to your request please send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a check for $10.00 (ten dollars) payable to Prof. Robert T. Meyer, Box 255, Division of Celtic Studies, The Catholic University of America, Washington, D.C. 20064. The money is used to buy books for the Celtic collection. Beannachtlibh anois.

YES! THERE IS A HIBERNIAN LIFE INSURANCE FUND

What it is...

The Hibernian Life Insurance Fund was founded in 1896 by the Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians, Minnesota. Its rapid growth led to its incorporation of all AOH and LAOH members by 1953 and subsequently to extended family members and all persons otherwise eligible for membership in the AOH and the LAOH. In 1963, the Illinois Hibernian Insurance Fund merged with the Hibernian Life Insurance Fund of Minnesota to form the present fraternal association. Now, everyone with a 'drop of Irish' can be a part of the Hibernian Fraternal family.

Minnesota and Illinois Irish may apply through their Hibernian Divisions. Irish living elsewhere may apply through the mail — directly to the Home Office.

FRATERNAL SUPPORT • The Hibernian Life Insurance Fund has supported — financially and actively — the AOH & LAOH, The University of Notre Dame/Hibernian Fund ($12,500), Irish American Cultural Institute, American Irish PEC, Marathon for Non-Public Education, the Hibernian Bursar Fund for education of Clergy, the Columban Missions, the Irish-American Unity Conference.

Attend National President's Dinner

Address Issues Troubling Irish Americans

Over 600 enthusiastic Hibernian members and friends turned out for the traditional National President's Dinner, honoring the incumbent leader of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America. The occasion helps to focus the effort and skills of the large Irish-American community on the goals and aspirations vital for their times.

This year the principal speaker was the Irish Government's Foreign Minister, Brian Lenihan. His address was followed by remarks from U.S. Congressman Joseph DioGuardi of Westchester, New York.

Sharing center stage with the national president on the dais were his wife Eileen; new Consul General to New York, David O'Kelly, and his wife Antoinette; Deputy Consul Martin Ruane; Foreign Minister Lenihan and his wife Ann; National Chaplain Fr. John Abernethy; Robert Blacato, representing Irish Ad Hoc Committee Chairman Congressman Mario Biaggi; Ladies National President Sheila Clifford; general chairman of the event and National Catholic Action Chairman John Foody; Westchester County Presidents John Caughen and Marie Noone; New York State Presidents Edward Carley and Ann Helion; New York State Comptroller Edward Regan; Chairman Westchester Legislature Robert Zebrecki; Fran Ryan, representing Governor Mario Cuomo; Mayor of County Wexford, Dominick Kiernan; Congressman DioGuardi; Westchester County Executive John Grant; Senior Vice President Bank of Ireland Bill Burke; National AOH Vice President Michael Coogan; and Master of Ceremonies Jack Irwin, chairman, National FFAI Committee.

In his address, Foreign Minister Lenihan extended the good wishes of the Irish Government to President Murphy and its desire to work with the AOH to further their mutual interests. He spoke of the economic plight of Ireland today, resulting in the large exodus of young people to the United States. He asked that the AOH continue to oversee the Irish illegals in this country, and expressed hope that a new immigration law would be enacted to provide for them.

As he moved to the area of the injustices suffered by the Nationalists in Northern Ireland, Mr. Lenihan berated the English Government for dragging its feet in enforcing the reforms agreed to by both governments in the signing of the Anglo-Irish treaty, a breakthrough lauded by all the countries in the world. When he stated that the Irish Government was in support of the MacBride Principles, the audience was moved to wild applause.

In his remarks, Congressman DioGuardi reported on the findings of his recent AOH-sponsored trip to Ireland, both north and south, during which he was able to meet with all party factions in Ireland except Ian Paisley, who refused to meet with him. The congressman was pleased to report that a review of the disbursements of the American Fund showed no outlays for security purposes of any kind.

DioGuardi and Congressman Bruce Morrison of Connecticut, who accompanied him on the trip, were able to spend four hours with U.S. Ambassador to Ireland, Margaret O'Shaughnessy Heckler, at her residence in Phoenix Park. They discussed immigration reform legislation at length, and Ambassador Heckler pledged to cooperate with Congress and the AOH in seeking the needed reforms. Congressman DioGuardi has played a leading role in acquiring immigration visas for Irish citizens. He has re-introduced the Hibernian immigration bill, H.R. 242, in the House of Representatives.

In accepting the accolades, proclamations and tokens of appreciation presented him, National President Nick Murphy said he could not accept these recognitions for himself, but rather on behalf of those people behind him — his wife Eileen, his family and members of the National Board.

Entertainment for the evening was of excellent caliber, provided by the Noel Kingston Orchestra, featuring Mary Kingston and Paddy Farrell. The colorful Rockland County Pipe Band also performed.

The forums are sponsored by every major Irish-American organization from the six eastern regional states of New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Pennsylvania, according to Assemblyman John C. Dearie (D-Bronx).

"Millions of Irish-Americans in our country are determined to play an active, involved role in selection of our next President and, to that end, we have developed a national 'Irish-American Political Agenda,' which we are addressing to all announced presidential candidates.

City Recreation Director Insults Irish Community

POMPANO BEACH, FL — When the Irish Institute of Florida, Inc., headed by Rory O'Dwyer, requested permission to hold a three-day Irish cultural event in the city's Municipal Stadium next March 1988, it was agast at the reaction of the city's parks and recreation director, Timothy Tapp.

In a September 3, 1987 memo to the city commissioners advising he was denying O'Dwyer's request, Tapp stated that "St. Patrick's Day is the one day of the year that everyone is apt to get inebriated — over-indulgence in alcohol is the theme of the day." He further stated that "while organizers could gear the event to be family-oriented, I have no doubt that alcohol would be the fare of the day."

On September 29 an article appeared in the Miami Herald by staff writer Emilia Askari, entitled, "Irish Eyes Aren't Smiling." She disclosed that a memo from Mayor E. Pat Larkins stated, "I'm going to have to ask Mr. Tapp about this; I don't know what to make of it."

The article quotes Commissioner Nathan Braverman as saying, "The least that should be demanded is an apology. What's he going to say — no Oktoberfest because the Germans drink beer? No Cuban festivals because the Cubans drink rum?"

The writer stated that Tapp could not be reached on Monday afternoon, but the city's special events coordinator confirmed that Tapp met with Rory O'Dwyer of the Irish Institute, and that Tapp no longer opposes the festival. "After going over the schedule of events," she said, "he acknowledged that a great many of them seemed to be family-oriented."

In a letter to Mayor Larkins, AOH National Director Thomas Gilligan stated, "To say I am outraged at the statements made by your parks and recreation director, Timothy Tapp, is an understatement. The debasing remarks I am referring to are contained in a memo he wrote on September 3 to the City Commission concerning St. Patrick's Day and the planned Irish festival. I consider this an ethnic slur by a city official, and this should not be tolerated. I certainly hope that you will investigate this matter and take appropriate action, including a complete retraction of these remarks by the perpetrator."

Gilligan suggests that protests be sent to either Mayor E. Pat Larkins or Timothy Tapp, addressed to City of Pompano Beach, 101 S.W. 1st Avenue, Pompano Beach, FL 33062.

IMMIGRATION

The Ancient Order of Hibernians is not a single issue organization. Hibernians are concerned with a number of civic, fraternal, religious and national issues. Founded in Ireland in 1565, our original purpose was to protect the priest and the Mass. To this original purpose the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, in 1838, added the giving of assistance to Irish immigrants in the New World. The demographic trends of the last few years have resulted in immigration problems of crisis proportions. Our own Tom Murray was one of the first to recognize the severity of the immigration problem. Tom spent two years of his own time working full-time, researching U.S. immigration legislation.

The fruits of his mighty labors can be seen in the immigration policy adopted by your last national convention in Buffalo and in the introduction of that policy as legislation into the House of Representatives by Congressman Joseph DioGuardi of New York and a number of co-sponsors of both parties including Tom Manton of New York and Bob Dornan of California, and into the United States Senate by Senator John F. Kerry of Massachusetts. Had it passed in its original form, the Hibernian immigration reform bill would have provided over 4,500 non-preference visas for the Irish this year alone. Instead, the 10,000 visa, one-shot lottery was a compromise between the Hibernian solution and those who would have it that no Irish need apply.

In 1987, Mr. DioGuardi has reintroduced the Hibernian Immigration legislation, H.R. 1683, at our request. It is incumbent upon each and every Hibernian, not only to request that your own Member of Congress become a co-sponsor of H.R. 1683, but to be perceived by the community as Hibernians leading the fight for immigration reform. Do not hide your light under a basket. Set a public example and recruit new Hibernians in the process.

•Those of you who are in a position to influence any 1988 presidential hopeful have an even greater opportunity to influence public policy.

•In the meantime, on the immigration front, we have established an office in New York City at 3130 Decatur Avenue (Near 204th Street in St. Brendan's Parish in the Bronx) under the aegis of the Bronx County Board; this office addresses not only legislative needs but also administrative relief and legal assistance for individual cases (Postal address: P.O. Box 287, Fordham Station, The Bronx, N.Y. 10458). We have an attorney in the office every Tuesday evening

(Telephone (212) 515-8863) as well as a list of attorneys to take cases on referral. This is a pattern which should be repeated by Hibernians wherever there are Irish immigrants needing assistance in the U.S. or Canada.

Several Members of Congress have expressed willingness to work with Ambassador Margaret Heckler and the AOH for immigration reform; among these are Joseph DioGuardi of New York, Bruce Morrison of Connecticut and Joseph P. Kennedy and Brian Donnelly of Massachusetts. We are actively pursuing the drafting of omnibus legislation which will also address the problem of well over 100,000 young Irish people in the US having over-stayed their visas, including the possibility of opening armed forces, including the National Guard, for enlistment of young Irishmen who have not been admitted for permanent residence in the United States. As in other things, many hands made light work; and when those hands are the hands of registered voters enrolled in the party of their choice, they will be ignored only at great electoral peril.

COMMODORE JOHN BARRY

It was in Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love, that Wexford-born Jack Barry found a home and the Freedom that was denied him as an Irish Catholic under English rule in his native Ireland. Commodore John Barry is not only the premier Irish Catholic hero of the War for Independence, but also the Constitution of the United States, of the US Navy and of the AOH.

Philadelphia is the Cradle of American Liberty; the city is hallowed by the Churchyard of Saint Mary's which contains the last mortal remains of Commodore John Barry. Barry is honored there by a public holiday on his birthday, September 13th. The AOH should have the mission of lobbying the Congress to make Commodore John Barry Day, September 13th, a national observance. What we should seek is not another paid holiday (for the rest of the country outside Pennsylvania, where John Barry Day is already a holiday) so much as a public observance whereby the American people generally, and our school children in particular, will be reminded of the contributions of John Barry and of Irish Catholics generally to the defense of American Liberty. This would also be a good time to begin the campaign for a Commodore John Barry stamp to be issued on September 13, 1991, during the bi-centennial year of his appointment by President George Washington to lead the infant United States Navy. This would be a Hibernian civic activity which would benefit the entire country. Such a policy should be adopted by our next National Convention.

This year of the bi-centennial of the Constitution of the United States would be the year to move into high gear in promoting the commemoration of John Barry. For it is no accident that his statue stands before Independence Hall — not only did he give us our most significant naval victories of the Revolution, and organize the boats used by Washington in his famous crossing of the Delaware, it was John Barry who organized the rounding up of Members of the U.S. Constitutional Convention back in 1787, compelling their presence to assure a quorum for the final vote of the Convention on the Constitution whose benefits we all enjoy today.

Let me recommend an excellent book on John Barry, Barry or Jones by Magr. Leo Gregory Fink. In it can be found much of the ammunition we will need in promoting the cause of Commodore John Barry.

A sense of history is an important thing, and the Irish as a race seem to have been blessed with a very highly developed sense of history indeed. As Hibernians we should guard not only Irish history in general, but Hibernian history in particular. You can read about the role of the AOH in nineteenth century America in John Ridges's book Erin's Sons in America.

If you visit the National Museum in Dublin, or if you read an old article in the National Hibernian Digest by John Duffy, you can discover that American Hibernian rifles were with Pearce and the Irish Volunteers in Dublin during Easter Week, 1916. When next you visit Old Saint Patrick's in New York, you can read how the AOH prevented the Know-Nothings (who had already burned a number of Catholic churches in the Philadelphia area) from burning that church in 1844. More recently, you can visit the Medal of Honor Grove in Valley Forge and see the AOH monument to all foreign-born winners of the Congressional Medal of Honor who could not be attributed to any State.

The Irish own the Medal of Honor; the record is clear.

You need look no further for example than our own Brother Hibernian Michael Doherty of Company B, 13th Pennsylvania Cavalry. A native of Falcarragh, County Donegal, Michael Doherty met President-elect Lincoln in Bristol, Pennsylvania, at the age of 17 on February 21, 1861; soon a veteran of many fierce combat actions, on October 12, 1863 Michael Doherty won his adopted country's highest honor when he led a charge against an enemy force ten times greater than his own and stalled the Confederate attack long enough to allow 2,500 Union soldiers to escape Lee's trap. Doherty, himself, was captured and spent the remainder of the war in the H-Block of the American Civil War — Andersonville. He survived to return to Bucks County and a long and fruitful public life. Michael Doherty, Irishman, Pennsylvanian, Hibernian, American.

AOH — MANY ISSUES

The charitable and religious works of our order may not be as spectacular, but they are in many ways the more important. The AOH is indeed an organization of many issues. We have a great potential to do good, a potential which will grow as we reach out and increase our numbers.

Our motto is "Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity." Saint Paul has already told us that the greatest of these is love — charity. In the end we will be judged by our Faith and by our Good Works. Let the good works of the AOH be manifest. Please contact our National Chairman for Charities and Missions, David R. Burke (6 Mount Vernon Terrace, Lawrence, MA), with your suggestions or requests for information.

Together we can take the right actions for the right reasons and follow the example of Christ and of His Vicar on Earth.

A Tree Grows in Kerry

CO. KERRY, IRELAND: Not far from Cleenac and the Carra Lake in the rich verdant forest of Killorglin, County Kerry, there lies an emerald jewel of a forest glen in a place called Lickkeen.

In a countryside so rich in beauty, where the cameras sigh as their imagery is clicked off, there is now a magnificent monument of natural Kerry stone faced with a plaque of finely chiseled letters, in Irish and English, as is customary in Ireland, commemorating the Ancient Order of Hibernians for their charitable service.

Women and men of our Order stood proudly in the glen of Lickkeen as the eight foot high stone was unveiled. People of prominence in the Government of Ireland, officers of the AOH, and a distinguished gentleman, Mr. Brendan Shortall, president of the Irish American Cultural Institute, spoke with eloquence, sincerity, and emotional spontaneity.

The Boy Scouts of Ireland, traditional music makers, dancers, and, singers graced the scene and regaled the many onlookers with their fine performances. Our proud president, Mr. Nick Murphy, spoke inspiringly and planted the ceremonial oak sapling, signifying the AOH contribution to Ireland's program of reforestation.

The good Lord blessed the day with sunshine and warmth. The Government reception treat at the Tower Hotel in Glenbeigh was a fitting finale to a day to be remembered in the history of the AOH.

The following Irish guests were in attendance: Very Reverend Brian Kelly, parish priest, Glenbeigh; Reverend Malcolm Shannon, Kilcolman Rectory, Church of Ireland; Jack and Mrs. O'Leary, T.D. of Killarney; Senator Jack Daly, Killarney; Tom Cahill, County Counsellor, Kerry; Eamon Barry, County Officer, Kerry; Michael Keon, Chief Supt., Garda, Tralee; Noel O'Reilly, Officer, Irish Forest Service; Michael Donnelly, Officer, Irish Forest Service, Killorglin. Contributing their talents were:

Killorglin Comhaltas Set Dancers; O'Leary School of Dancing from Killarney; Mrs. Murphy and the McCann sisters (singers); Seamus O'Rahilly and Paul Langton (accordion) with Anthony O'Conner and Michael O'Grady; Mr. Declan Mangan, Killarney, acting as Fear an Ti; and Boy Scouts from Milltown and Killorglin under the leadership of Myles O'Brien providing the guard of honor.

Also present were the Foresters of Killorglin: Michael Donnelly, Forester in Charge; Dan Walsh, District Inspector, Tralee; Enda O'Conner, Principal Officer; Liam O'Flanagan, Ass't Principal Officer; Paddy Dugan, Ass't Principal Officer; Noel O'Reilly, Executive Officer; and Denis Mehigan, Secretary to the Minister.

Doors of Hope Seeks Support

Unemployment is a terrible thing. It lowers self-esteem; causes family tensions; and can lead to depression and despair. Unemployment is very high in Ireland especially in the nationalist enclaves in Belfast and Derry. The reasons for this are complex and include religious discrimination, political favoritism, and a terribly difficult economy.

Several small community self-help groups have been started by local people in these communities. These groups teach Irish culture, to build pride and self-worth, and they provide instruction in home economics and small business management to encourage Irish people to help themselves.

Since these self-help centers are in nationalist areas, they get little or no government support. Even EEC grants and American aid are "unavailable," "delayed" or severely

Topics explored by legal scholars from the Republic of Ireland and the United States included: "The State and the Family," "The Role of the Supreme Court in Constitutional Policy Making," "Church-State Relations," and "Aspects of the Separation of Powers Doctrine."

Speakers from Ireland were Gerard Hogan and Gerard Whyte, law professors at Trinity College, Dublin; David Morgan, law professor at University College, Cork; and Justice Niall McCarthy of the Irish Supreme Court.

American commentators were law professors Robert Burt, Yale University; Jesse Choper, University of California in Berkeley; Sanford Levinson, University of Texas; and Michael Perry of Northwestern University.

The event received official recognition from the Commission on the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution and funding from the American Irish Bicentennial Committee. It was sponsored by CUA's Columbus School of Law in cooperation with St. Louis University, Villanova University and the University of San Francisco.

presidential candidates toured the major cities of New York State. At every stop Irish-Americans questioned the candidates on whether they would support the appointment of a U.S. Envoy to Northern Ireland. Four of seven respondents affirmed to the initiative.

"At the 'Irish-American Issues Forum '86', hundreds of Irish-Americans gathered to hear the positions of candidates seeking statewide office in New York State. The participation and response were very positive," Dearie stated.

According to Dearie, "The Forums will offer Irish-Americans another opportunity to utilize the strength of their numbers to elevate the status of Irish-American concerns and to advance the Irish-American political agenda."

Candidates invited to participate in the "Presidential Forums" include: Robert Dole, Richard Gephardt, Bruce Babbitt, Jack Kemp, Albert Gore, Jesse Jackson, Paul Simon, Peter DuPont, Alexander Haig, Bill Clinton, Pat Robertson, and George Bush.

STATE NEWS: Massachusetts

WATERTOWN, MA: The AOH Beano Committee Division 14 is continuing another successful campaign in 1987. Many thousands of dollars have already been distributed to various charitable organizations.

Recently at Anthony's Pier 4 Restaurant in Boston, the Hibernian Beano Committee made a generous donation to the Jimmy Fund. The Boston Red Sox have made the Jimmy Fund, a children's cancer fund, their number one charity. Accepting a check from Division 14 AOH Beano worker Bob Stone was Sam Horn, sensational rookie of the Red Sox, and Jeff Sellars, Red Sox pitcher.

We here at Division 14 are proud of our Beano Committee and salute them for their charitable work. We all owe a debt of gratitude to this fine committee consisting of a handful of Division 14 AOH and Ladies AOH members.

Among the many recipients of donations from the division during 1987 are the following: In youth activities, the Boys and Girls Clubs, Little League, Pop Warner Football, school organizations, and Two-Summer Basketball League. Donations were also given to the Pine Street Inn, Rosie's Place of Boston, the American Cancer Society, S.M.A. Fathers, the Muscular Dystrophy Association, and Beaverbrook Guidance Center for Children. In addition, use of Hibernians Hall was donated to the Cerebral Palsy Society and to the Watertown Senior Citizens for a sit-down dinner for over 250 people.

A "tip of the hat" to all the Beano Committee men and women whose hard and dedicated work, under the leadership of Don Rooney and President Jack Bowles, made 1987 a year of great success and accomplishment in charitable work.

The 1987 recipient of the Connecticut AOH Irish Way Scholarship was Kathleen Reilly of Norwalk. The 1987 Golf Tournament will be held October 11 at the Tuxis Plantation Country Club in Farmington.

Divisions have been asked to sponsor a flag (hole) for $50, to be donated to the State Irish Way Program. The Golf banquet will again be held in the Waterbury AOH Hall.

The Bridgeport Division hosted the Major Degree of the Order on September 13. The Tara Degree Team, from Long Island, put on the Degree.

The Waterbury Hibernians and the State Board Ladies AOH have planned a testimonial dinner and dance for Ladies National President Sheila Clifford, on October 31. This gala event will be held at the Sheraton Hotel in Waterbury. Tickets for the dinner cost $45.00. Sue Sweeney and Dot Kasey are co-chairpersons.

The New London Division hosted a picnic for about 15 students from Trinity College, Dublin, who were attending a theatrical training session at the Eugene O'Neill Theater in Waterford. This Division also raised $250 for donation to the Ireland Fund. Members of the New London and Bridgeport Divisions are spending a weekend at Cape Cod. They expect to be frequent visitors to Eamonn McGirr's Pub and Restaurant in Dennisport.

Irish music and dance are alive and well in Connecticut. Four feisanna were held in the State over the summer. The annual Comhaltas Ceoltóirí Eireann concert was held in New Haven on September 28, and the Jim Seery Branch of Comhaltas, in Connecticut, is set to resume the free monthly céili dances.

Kathleen Kelly To Receive LeMoynes Medal

CATHERINE "KATHLEEN" KELLY

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Catherine "Kathleen" Kelly, Central New York coordinator of Project Children, will receive the prestigious Simon LeMoynes Medal from LeMoynes College, announced the Rev. James C. Finlay, S.J., interim president of the college.

The award will be presented as part of Le Moynes' 22nd annual Founders' Day dinner to be held on Wednesday, November 4 at the Hotels at Syracuse Square.

This medal is presented annually to a prominent leader for significant and humanitarian contributions to society. Like the college itself, the award is named for the Rev. Simon Le Moynes, S.J., a French Jesuit who established the first mission among the Iroquois nation of Central New York in 1664.

In 1980 Kelly became the area organizer of Project Children, which brings youngsters to the Syracuse region every summer from war-torn Northern Ireland. These children live for six weeks with local families who provide love and understanding as well as room and board. They are carefully matched with the host families to ensure a rewarding experience for all involved. Project Children shows the children of Northern Ireland that it is possible to live together without fear, in peace, with freedom and dignity.

When Kelly was informed that she was to receive the Simon Le Moynes Medal she said, "I am not worthy of this honor. I will accept the medal in the name of the host families who have been so supportive and the dedicated volunteers who have helped to raise funds for Project Children."

Kelly, who came to the United States in 1958, was born in County Wicklow outside of Dublin. She lives in Syracuse with her husband David and their four children.

SLIGO IN THE SUMMERTIME

As I headed west from Sligo town, the dark gray Atlantic clouds scudded by with occasional flares of sunshine and racing moments of blue sky. Sweaters and jackets are comfortable and the umbrella in the car is a safe bet. The farms and bogs of Dunbekein lie between Dromore West and Templeboy on Sligo's rugged coast, off the main road, and near the slopes of the Ox Mountains.

I drove the Ford Fiesta through Dunbekein's narrow lanes — some paved, some not — to Aunt Kate's old house. It's one of the few thatched stone cottages still in use. Kate is long dead. Maggie and Pat live there. Old now, and just out of the hospital — both of them. We talked of old times; of my father, my grandfather, and the ones gone to America over the years. I gave Maggie a twenty pound note. "Too much," she said, without seeing it. I left them there, seemingly entombed in the darkened room; not at all well yet. Maureen was with me, thank God for that. Cousin Joe was working in Sligo town that day.

I was emotionally captivated by the green rolling hills, bright green, the goats running ahead of my car, the smell of cows, and the rich thick Irish grass. I had first met Pat Kilgallen on the road. He went to school with my father, "a great step-dancer, he was," he said. Pat must be ninety or more. Pointing across the fields, he said: "See there, that is your cousin Maureen's new house; go there and tell her you are giving her a summons; she won't know you. It will scare the hell out of her." But, she knew me right away.

I hadn't seen her since she was fifteen. It was in nineteen-sixty-four. She was pretty, red-haired, freckled. I often thought of her since then. She's married now and almost forty. Still pretty, red-haired and freckled. I felt the pull of the past as I drove away. A part of me came from these green fields. It was sad to leave. I thought to myself: who would want to leave this beautiful land? The tragedy of Ireland has been the forced exodus of the Irish to other countries. Those who remained lived in peaceful poverty; yet, were rich in the touch of the Lord's blessings.

Sligo town is busy on Saturday. The narrow streets with shops crowd it more. Drizzle after drizzle does not dampen the parade of energetic walkers. It's Bank Holiday weekend. They're all out today, going every which way. The kids are cute as buttons; blue eyed, blond or red haired, freckles galore, with faces you can't help loving.

In my room in the fancy hotel at Rosser's Point, I wait for half-eleven and Cousin Joe. Mass at Saint Columban's is late on Sunday morning here in Sligo. Like all Irish churches it was packed. It was nice to see the women and girls in dresses. Many wore hats, like in the old days.

Irish Lads Enjoy Summer in Delco

By CLAIRE P. HUSHION
Town Talk Reporter

It's a long way to Tipperary, and much farther to Concordville and Thornton (two towns in Delaware Co., PA), but two Irish teenagers are certainly glad they made the trip.

Colm (pronounced Collum) Smith, 15, and Gerard Cinnamond, 13, landed in the U.S.A. July 1, along with a planeload of colleagues and colleen from the Emerald Isle.

Altogether, "Project Children" arranged for 1100 underprivileged youngsters from the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland to spend six weeks with American host families from Maine to California.

The non-sectarian organization had been doing this since 1972, with the help of many groups and individuals who finance the plane fare.

When members of the local Ancient Order of Hibernians (AOH) learned last year of Project Children, it seemed tailor-made for the Irish cultural society. They decided to sponsor two youngsters, raising most of the air fare. Colm and Gerard have been such a delight that AOH is already planning to sponsor four children next summer.

Colm, the youngest of five children whose parents are among the massive numbers of Ireland's unemployed, quickly became "one of the family" at the friendly Concord home of Mike and Lynne Cabry.

At a recent backyard gathering, the freckled teenager whose intelligence is exceeded only by his sparkling personality, raised his soda mug for a toast with an interviewer.

"May you be in Heaven a half-hour before the devil knows you're dead!" rattled off the rogue with the brogue. "That's typical... he's loaded with charming blarney," said Mike. "He's the life of every party we take him to."

In his hometown of Dundalk, six miles south of the border with Northern Ireland, Colm is "the only student ever to skip three years of school," graduating from high school at 15. As a three year old in nursery school, he learned by observation how to read and write, and thus began school in the third grade.

Colm likes to cook and wants to become a chef, which might be a good way to support his habit — eating. In Dundalk, hamburger costs $4.50 per pound.

Colm made a rapid transition from stews and curry to American fast food. "He can make an entire, large pizza disappear faster than a magician," laughed Lynne.

After devouring six slices of Lynne's meatloaf, Colm delivered the supreme compliment. "Ah, that was beautiful!" (If a dish is merely good, it's "lovely.")

The Cabrys are enchanted by Colm's politeness and terminology.

At the supermarket, he pushes the wee one (granddaughter Kristin, 3) in the trolley (cart), making sure to load up on rashers, mince and minerals (bacon, hamburger and soda).

"Is there a community pill?" Colm inquired on the way to his summer home from the airport.

"Are you ill?" worried the Cabrys. "No, I like to swim," the lad explained.

At home, he swims in the Toperona section of the Castletown River.

"It's cleaner than rivers here, as are most Irish Rivers. Our family gets drinking water from it, like many of the townspeople," said Colm, his brogue becoming easier to understand.

With recent temperatures in the 90s, Delco has been a bit warmer than Ireland, which averages 50 degrees at this time of year. A hot day would be 65-70 degrees. The boys recalled a "terrible heat wave of 80 degrees for three days." Needless to say they have found air conditioners and backyard "pills" a great comfort.

Slightly more serious, but no less charming, is Gerard, who's staying with John and Dolores Munley three miles away in Thornton. Gerard has also taken to American food, especially scrapple, creamed beef on toast and hot dogs. Both boys like Amish-style French fries with vinegar.

Handsone and rugged, Gerard hopes to become a pro soccer player (footballer). The 13 year old center-back must be talented — the Manchester United team in England has promised him a tryout when he's 16. "At the rate he's growing, Gerard could end up kicking field goals in a (Continued on Page Twenty-Seven)

Gilligan Pens Appeals On AOH Issues

Lawton Chiles
U. S. Senate
Russell Senate Office Bldg.
Washington, D.C. 20510
Dear Senator Chiles:

A very disturbing incident is taking place in our legal justice system in regards to one individual, Joseph Doherty. Over the last several years courts and administrative boards have held that Joseph Doherty has the right to be deported to the Republic of Ireland as he has requested.

After these trials and hearings the Attorney General, Edwin Meese, continues to disobey the orders. The comments of Cardinal John J. O'Connor are enclosed for your perusal. I enclose these because I feel that they, in a much better way than I can, convey the message that something must be done.

We, members and friends of the Irish community in Florida, would ask you to contact the Justice Department and the Office of the Attorney General and demand that the rulings of the courts and the Immigration and Appeals Board be carried out without further delay.

Also, on behalf of the Florida Irish community I wish to ask for your support of House Resolution 242 which will be introduced by your colleague from the 20th Congressional District of New York Joseph DioGuardi.

The "One Ireland" Resolution, as it is called, is a simple statement and expression, yet it states perfectly a solution to the Irish issue. We are seeking bi-partisan support for this

New Division in Cincinnati, Ohio

The newly formed division of Our Lady of Knock, AOH, Hamilton Co., Cincinnati, celebrated its namesake's feast day with a Mass at their hall in Norwood. Fr. John Beckman, S.J. was celebrant. The Blessed Virgin appeared at Knock, County Mayo, Ireland, in 1879. This is the reason the new division chose her for their Patroness.

The Mass was celebrated on a portable altar which had been used by the late Archbishop John T. McNicholas, O.P., who was born in County Mayo, Ireland. At the conclusion of the Mass, Fr. Beckman blessed the new hall and all of those in attendance with holy water from the shrine of Our Lady of Knock.

Mass was followed by a dinner, at which time the new division was presented with a gift of $500.00 by the St. Bridget division of the LAOH.

Report from NATIONAL ADVERTISING DIRECTOR

Although the nation's economy appears to be wavering a bit, advertising revenues for the National Hibernian Digest continue to post healthy patterns.

Even though the revenues should be much better than they have been over the past two years, one cannot blink at the improvements.

Apparently for years the advertising revenues for your newspaper were, to say the least, dismal. When National Director Tom Gilligan of Florida held the advertising director's post, there were substantial gains in revenues.

Then during the tenure of his successor (Jim Brennan) advertising revenues continue to improve. Yet the fact remains that even the current revenue results can be and must be increased.

With support of AOH State Boards, County Boards and local divisions as well as individual members, the financial picture can improve.

Please remember: it is your newspaper. Support it by not only reading the fine news stories and editorials, but back it by advertising in the NHD before placing an ad elsewhere.

JAMES J. BRENNAN

Catholic lay organization, has many times asked the Catholic Conference of Bishops for an endorsement of the MacBride Principles for Northern Ireland and its efforts to have American companies doing business in Northern Ireland subscribe to these principles. Our current National President, Nicholas Murphy, and our immediate past National President, Joseph Roche, have written many times for this endorsement and have been unsuccessful in convincing American Bishops to do this.

I am sure you are familiar with the MacBride Principles and their purpose. Your Labor Day statement addresses one of the reasons the MacBride Principles were formulated, "that people have a right to employment." It would appear that the Council of Bishops might now endorse these principles as an extension of both the teaching of the Church on workers rights and the Labor Day statement.

Therefore, I would respectfully ask that an endorsement of the MacBride Principles be discussed immediately, and the appropriate positive statement be issued.

Pennsylvania Legislature Hears Roche on MacBride Principles

TESTIMONY OF JOSEPH ROCHE, PRESIDENT OF THE IRISH AMERICAN UNITY CONFERENCE (IAUC) AND MEMBER, NATIONAL BOARD OF THE ANCIENT ORDER OF HIBERNIANS (AOH)
SEPTEMBER 15, 1987

LEGISLATIVE HEARING ON MACBRIDE PRINCIPLES
INVESTMENT BILLS (H.B. 948, 949, 1079, 1080, 1081)
HARRISBURG, PA.

Thank you, Chairman Trello, for the opportunity to address you on this legislation. You may know that the Ancient Order of Hibernians — the oldest and largest Irish Catholic lay organization in America — includes men and women active in communities across the state from Turtle Creek to Tamaqua, to Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Erie and Altoona. We are proud to note that the late President John Kennedy was a Hibernian and that the Honorable Governor Robert Casey has been a Hibernian for 20 years. The much younger Irish American Unity Conference includes people from all ethnic and religious persuasions who are concerned with the conflict in Ireland.

The issue addressed in these bills is one which concerns not only the organizations and individuals I represent, but is important to many Pennsylvanians. Their concern and ours is that public pension fund investment decisions — those involving U.S. companies in the north of Ireland — be morally weighed as to the systematic anti-Catholic discrimination in that country and the violence it has generated. We have long tired of complaining about this problem and instead offer a solution crafted to combat decades of English malevolence. The solution is to link these investment decisions to the use of the MacBride Fair Employment Principles. These principles were crafted by and named in honor of Dr. Sean MacBride, Nobel Peace Laureate, Former Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations and former Irish Foreign Minister. Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Connecticut have adopted this mechanism to affirm the American values of fair employment and equal opportunity. Scores of other states, like Pennsylvania, are in the process of considering similar legislation.

In the past two years, Black and Puerto Rican legislators have spoken convincingly for this type of statute and the first Italian-American governor of New York signed a MacBride bill. The truly American nature of this legislation is readily apparent as legislators of all persuasions — businessmen, lawyers, Protestant, Catholic, Democrat and Republican — voiced their support for this positive step. The MacBride Principles have been endorsed by every major Irish-American organization, various Catholic bishops and religious orders, the State and National AFL-CIO and politicians ranging from U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (Utah) to Senator John Kerry (Mass.), and the Prime Minister of Ireland, the Honorable Charles Haughey.

The hearings conducted in the other states that have adopted the MacBride Principles have proven that there is no dispute over the presence and practice on anti-Catholic discrimination. Let me recount some of the documentation so that you can be assured of the cause and extent of the problem.

A. Anti-Catholic employment discrimination has been an integral part of England's Irish apartheid policy since the Ulster garrison was set up — without benefit of one Irish vote — in 1920. The New Ireland Forum Report released in 1985 and adopted by elected Irish officials representing 75% of the population notes "... The Catholic section of the community for over fifty years lived under a system of exclusively unionist power and privilege and suffered systematic discrimination."

B. In August, 1986 the prestigious journal Equal Opportunities Review cited government statistics showing the unemployment rate among Catholics to be twice that of the Protestant community with 35% of the Catholic men without work.

On August 16, 1986 the British journal The Economist noted that youth unemployment in Catholic ghettos like Strabane have reached crisis levels of 80%. Further analysis of unemployment data by professors Osborne and McCormack, the Continuous Household Survey (1983-84), and the Labor Force Survey (1984-85) all depict a social disaster if anti-Catholic discrimination is not forcefully and immediately addressed. Indeed, when examined by sex, religion and age, the data trends suggest that equality of a job opportunity is steadily worsening for Catholics.

McCarthy economic consultants in their report for New Ireland Forum predicted a 32% unemployment rate for Northern Ireland by 1993. Irish Times correspondent Helen Shea on April 2, 1987 leaves no doubt as to where the burden of that unemployment will be felt when she noted the current unemployment rates of predominantly Catholic communities of Strabane (39%), Cookstown (37%), Dungannon and Magherfelf (30%).

C. This devastating unemployment is not the inevitable result of a period of economic decline. The British ordained Sir Carson and Lord Basil Brooke to set up their "Protestant State for a Protestant People." In other words it was state policy that whatever the prosperity, Catholics were not to share in it. For 67 years the entire machinery of government in the north has carefully crafted England's apartheid policy for Ireland by locating plants, training centers, and educational facilities east of the Bann River to promote both Protestant/Loyalist prosperity and Catholic emigration and poverty. One need only examine the Matthew (1960), Benson (1963) and Wilson Reports (1975) for the proof of England's "final solution" strategy.

The Anglo-Irish accord is but one of the many techniques to continue this subjugation and to obscure the truth. Ms. Shaw of the Irish Times for example, reported on March 20, 1987 that "the method of calculating unemployment has been changed in several significant ways by the British government over the past two years" and noted that the current unemployment in the north would be 22% not 19% if the previous reporting methods were used.

This data manipulation, incidentally, began as the MacBride Principles corporate proxy resolutions and statutes began emerging in America. Her Majesty's government is "committed to the perpetuation of inequality," as Boston Mayor Flynn recently noted and the result is a pervasive second class citizenship which is not simply "unsatisfactory" as Mr. Viggers of the Northern Ireland Industrial Board put it, it is criminal. It would be so characterized in any court of law where human and civil rights were protected and promoted. We all know, however, that Northern Ireland contribution to law is the same as South Africa's contribution to racial equality and harmony.

Why should Americans and particularly the state of Pennsylvania adopt such legislation? The simple answer is because it is just. Pennsylvanians can send a message to those U.S. corporations that have gone along with anti-Catholic discrimination in order to get along with a government dedicated to this form of oppression. English hypocrisy is clear, the two largest employers in the North of Ireland are the government-owned Shorts Bros. and Harland/Wolf companies with workforces that include less than 10% Catholics. The citizens of Pennsylvania, as did those of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and Mass. can fire a warning shot over the bow of these U.S. corporations. They must not be allowed to do overseas that which they are prohibited from doing here by law. At a Holocaust commemoration Elie Wiesel stated "What hurts the victim most is not the cruelty of the oppressor but the silence of the bystander." Pennsylvania can show it will not be silent or indifferent to the injustice of anti-Catholic discrimination in Ireland by adopting these bills and putting the MacBride Principles to work.

IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT Facts for Illegal Aliens

The IMMIGRATION REFORM AND CONTROL ACT OF 1986 provides the opportunity for some aliens who have been in the United States illegally to apply for legal status.

Who Is Eligible?

Illegal aliens who meet all of the following requirements: • have lived in the United States since before January 1, 1982; • have not had legal resident status; • have not left the country since January 1, 1982, except for periods of less than 45 days, and • meet basic requirements, such as not having a felony record.

Don't Be Afraid!

Do NOT be afraid to apply for legal information you give when you apply to deport you. You can — and should — be completely honest. Only if you supply fake bills, records or papers can legal action be taken against you.

How Do You Apply?

The best way to apply is to go to a local volunteer agency like your church or community organization. They can help you get the right forms and fill them out. Local sources are shown at the end of this sheet. The volunteer agency will tell you what to do once the application is complete.

What Will You Need?

You MUST prove that you have lived in this country illegally since before January 1, 1982. Some things that can help you do that are:

- records of jobs, pay stubs
- tax records
- school or medical records
- gas, electric, water, and/or telephone company bills
- rent receipts
- leases

What Not To Do!

- Do NOT fake bills, records or papers to prove your eligibility. If you are caught, you will not qualify for legal status.
- Do NOT believe everyone who promises to get you legal status if you do not have the knowledge of U.S. Immigration and Naturalization and there are authorized volunteer agencies to help you apply. A list of authorized sources of help appears at the end of this sheet.

These things could hurt your chances of being approved.

How Much Will It Cost?

- There are some fees you must pay when you apply. They are:
- Authorized volunteer agencies may charge an assistance fee of up to $75.00. Volunteer agencies may also charge if they do fingerprinting or photography.
- INS application fees are:
 - $185 per adult's application
 - $50 per child's application
- The total for a family cannot exceed $420, no matter how many children.
- A medical exam is required. The cost of that will depend on where you have it done.

What Will Happen?

- If your application is approved:
- You will receive temporary legal status, which will be good for 30 months.
- You will be legally authorized to work. You can begin or continue to work as soon as you decide to apply, even before approval. However, you must give your employer an affidavit that you intend to apply or, after September 1, 1987, show proof that you have applied.
- You can apply for permanent legal status after 18 months of temporary legal status.
- If your application is not approved:
- You will remain in illegal alien status. No action can be taken against you as a result of information on the application.

Important Dates

- Here are some dates you should know:
- November 6, 1986 — The date the law went into effect.
- May 5, 1987 — May 4, 1988 — Application period for legalization.
- September 1, 1987 — Starting now, an application for legalization must be submitted to continue work.

Biaggi Co-Sponsors New Immigration Bill

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY), Chairman of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, has joined as a co-sponsor of H.R. 3143, the Immigration Act of 1987, legislation which he called "a simple bill of justice for thousands of Irish immigrants who deserve an opportunity to become Americans."

Biaggi, who supported provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, which made a limited number of immigrant visas available to a category of applicants for whom immigrant visas had not been available since 1978, said passage of H.R. 3143 is necessary to ensure that our efforts at immigration reform do not fail.

The Immigration Act of 1987 would make the system more flexible and generous and allow those without immediate family ties in the United States to apply for immigrant visas. If passed, the bill would separate the existing family reunification preferences from employment and skill-related preferences, by creating a new category with 50,000 additional visas. Biaggi stated that residents from Ireland, as well as other nations of Western Europe, would specifically benefit from the passage of this legislation. The bill is currently before the Judiciary's Subcommittee on Immigration, Refugees and International Law.

Biaggi said he would work to get support for the legislation from the membership of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs.

High Court Widens Discrimination Ban

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court, greatly expanding legal protection for minorities, ruled that civil rights laws aimed primarily at helping blacks may be used to ban and punish discrimination against Arabs and Jews.

A unanimous court held that anyone can sue under Sections 1981 and 1982 of Title 42 of the United States Code if he or she feels discriminated against because of ethnic background.

This law, which dates back to 1866, was previously interpreted as applying only to blacks. But the court ruled that when the framers of the law proscribed racial discrimination, they meant more than just the Caucasian-Negroid-Mongolian racial categories recognized today. Jews, Arabs, and Hispanics, for example, would all have been considered members of different races a century ago.

Justice Byron R. White, writing for the court, said, "We have little trouble in concluding that Congress intended to protect from discrimination identifiable classes of persons who are subjected to intentional discrimination solely because of their ancestry or ethnic characteristics."

"Such discrimination is racial discrimination that Congress intended to forbid, whether or not it would be classified as racial in terms of modern scientific theory," he wrote. White said that although Jews and Arabs today may be considered members of the Caucasian race, Congress had a different view of race when it enacted Reconstruction-era laws granting to all persons the same rights "enjoyed by white citizens."

Jeffrey Sieneky of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith said the court's action "is important for the message it sends. The message that will go out today is that (those who practice discrimination) will have a price to pay, and it will hit the hardest in the pocketbook."

"This ruling will have the greatest benefit to the Hispanic community in the country," said Antonia Hernandez, head of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund. "We're so happy, I can't tell you."

The unanimous decision broadly interpreted the 1866 Civil Rights Act that granted to racial minorities such as blacks a wide range of rights then enjoyed by whites. The rulings were based on laws that permit victims of race discrimination to sue for monetary damages. The melting pot has never done quite as good a job as Americans like to think. Blacks have been the biggest victims of prejudice. But

"The Irish Holocaust"

Before beginning a grisly documentation that probably is unparalleled in non-fiction, and, no doubt, even in fiction, Thomas Gallagher, author of Paddy's Lament, takes a moment to recall that, as a child, he, unlike his Irish-American neighborhood playmates, had no particular feelings of malice for the British. Indeed, Gallagher remembers having been slightly puzzled by their prevailing mood of disdain, for, remarkably, his immediate family's somewhat limited encounters with the British had been marked by kindly gestures.

The author's denial of personal ill-will, which, in turn, puzzled me, is, nevertheless, a noteworthy element of the prologue to the book. That is, with such a solid surname, and the troubling subject at hand — England's lack of response to the disease-ridden failure of the potato crop in Ireland some 140 years ago, and the catastrophic famine that resulted — Gallagher might otherwise have been suspected of positioning himself for the "hatchet-job" the Brits deserve.

For my part, Paddy's Lament, with "Ireland, 1846-1847, Prelude to Hatred," as its subtitle, ordinarily would be "a book I just couldn't put down." Yet, it was a book that I had to put down, for its nightmarish record of inhumanity becomes intolerable as if as many as only two or three chapters are read at a single sitting. Indeed, it's unlikely that anyone of Irish descent could thumb even idly through its bleak pages without some show of sorrow or anger.

It occurred to me during my reading that if the famine — linked directly to official British policy of the era (policy that remains disturbingly familiar) — hadn't been halted the death toll eventually would have outstripped the Holocaust, which, of course, is considered a particularly infamous chapter in the history of mankind because it involved the systematic slaughter of some six million Jews.

Properly, we hear frequent reminders of the plight of the Jews at the hands of Hitler. And the reminders invariably prompt universal, if momentary, tongue-clucking. But what of the Irish peasants? Were their lives any less dear? Where is the outcry on behalf of the Irish, now that what might be called "the facts of death" have been bared with such authority and finality? Are the facts being dismissed as "just another Irish myth?"

In the end, sadly, it might be said, in the case of the Holocaust, that "only the Jews care." And that a no less harsh truth, in the case of Paddy's Lament, is that "only the Irish care." What a pitiless world.

There's no question that the loss of six million Jews had a jarring impact on the course of history. Just as States I challenge you to repudiate these bigoted statements made by the head of your party." Robinson refused to repudiate Paisley claiming it was basic Church of England teaching that the Pope is the anti-Christ.

King continually referred to Robinson as a "convicted criminal" for his arrest and conviction in the Republic of Ireland last year after Robinson refused to repudiate Paisley claiming it was basic Church of England teaching that the Pope is the anti-Christ.

King called for a British withdrawal from Northern Ireland and said that "peace will only come when Ireland is united and free."

The citizens of Pennsylvania are no different than other Americans in responding generously to those in need. We are convinced from our travels across the state that many people would like to see more U.S. assistance and positive action for the needy in Northern Ireland. Ulster is a failed political entity — a colonial relic — and the most poverty stricken deprived area within the European Economic Community (EEC) next to Calabria, Italy. By targeting pension fund investment to the MacBride Principles, Pennsylvania will provide leadership, set a positive standard and, most importantly, not simply reinforce the institutional bigotry which has brought the economy to ruin.

Finally, many states in the past decade have adopted legislation which attempts to harness their economic power to combat the system of apartheid in South Africa and to confront and penalize American companies joining the Arab boycott of Israeli companies. It is our hope and prayer that Pennsylvania will join this nationwide campaign to use the MacBride Principles to reduce the leading cause of unrest in Northern Ireland. By harnessing the investment power of American Pension funds, we create an additional incentive for U.S. corporations to engage honestly and fairly in affirmative action and equal opportunity. Our dialogue to date with Ford Motor Co. suggests this strategy has merit.

Allow me to address criticisms of MacBride legislation. These criticisms, which are without substantive merit, are put forth by Her Majesty's public servants and hirelings like John Hume. I have yet to hear a creditable argument in opposition in legislative hearings in five states.

England's strategy to date might best be described as a "sting" or "flim flam" operation designed to confuse and dupe legislators. This strategy of deceit goes as follows:

(1) The Lie — The MacBride Principles are illegal and also unnecessary because the Fair Employment Agency (FEA) is improving the situation. Minister Scott of Northern Ireland, for example, states "The British government has clear commitment to equal opportunity." There is, in fact, no such commitment and the data clearly contradicts Mr. Scott. In 1982 in government training centers only two Catholics were promoted to full the 37 vacancies that occurred. Of the 248 school-leavers employed by Harland-Wolfe, Short Bros., Mackies, Scotts and the Northern Ireland Electricity Board in 1984 only 13 were Catholics!! As noted previously, Catholics rarely reach 8% of the workforce of these firms despite the fact they are wholly owned or substantially financed by the English government.

When the FEA was established in 1976, it failed to receive 1/10th of the $3.3 million funding provided to the Northern Ireland Arts Council that year. It has received only inflationary increases ever since. So much for commitment!!

The FEA is a cosmetic reform whose sole purpose was to quiet international criticism of British rule. In 1986, Christopher McCrudden, a law professor at Lincoln College, Oxford University, reviewed the agency and found it to be "... in need of a complete overhaul."

Peter Archer, a former Solicitor General of Great Britain has confirmed in affidavits before the SEC that there is nothing in the MacBride Principles which contravenes the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Act or violates English statutes. In the 1986 case involving American Brands, U.S. District Judge Carter declared that the MacBride Principles "Do not call for discrimination against anyone. All nine of the principles could be legally implemented by management in its Northern facility." Ford Motor Co. representatives have indicated that they will not contest the legality of the principles because "we have received good counsel on both sides of the argument."

(2) The Switch — Adoption of the MacBride Principles disinvestment bills will contribute to economic decline. The objective here is to switch your attention from the investment decisions of U.S. pension fund managers to the totally unrelated divestment decisions of corporations. The people who espouse this specious argument fail to acknowledge at least half a dozen more critical factors affecting business decisions such as devaluation of currencies, export/import imbalances, taxes and duties, availability of raw material, transportation costs, the cost of borrowing and British fiscal and economic policies.

The MacBride Fair Employment Principles were developed and promoted beginning in 1985. From June 1979 to June 1986 manufacturing jobs in Northern Ireland declined by 33% (48,000 jobs) and yet England would have you believe this decline is in some way attributable to the MacBride Principles. These same officials attempted to link the 1986 announced closing of Gallagher's Belfast plant to the threat of the MacBride Principles. In fact, the closing or rather consolidation was due to West German imports and the Thatcher government's duty increase on cigarettes!!

Finally, in over 30 hours of testimony in five states not one representative of the business or investment community testified against the principles. If these principles pose any threat to investment it apparently is unknown to fiscal officers or investors, or is so insubstantial as to not warrant a statement from them.

(3) The Bribe — offer something in exchange for delay or rejection of the MacBride Principles. In at least two states — Illinois and Rhode Island — British officials have attempted to influence state legislators by offering trips to Northern Ireland. In California, British investment was hinted as retaliation against the MacBride bill.

The bribe is actually a key component of the Northern Ireland occupation strategy. In the 1970's the British government threw tax incentives, loans and grants at bigoted unionist politicians in a parliamentary vote-buying ploy that rose to scandal. In the 1980's the English Government has chosen to make a Catholic ghetto out of the

By HARRISON J. GOLDIN
N.Y.C. Comptroller

Deep-seated and systematic discrimination against Catholics in employment is an important cause of the bitter division in Ireland. According to the British Government's own Fair Employment Agency, Catholics in Northern Ireland are more than twice as likely to be unemployed as Protestants.

Even when employed, Catholics are often relegated to the most menial jobs, effectively foreclosed from higher paying skilled and managerial positions. And Catholic workers are often the objects of intimidation, threats to their physical safety and, in some cases, deadly assault.

Many American companies in Northern Ireland, inadvertently or otherwise, participate in this pervasive pattern of economic discrimination against Catholics; the pattern is similar to that which oppressed blacks in the United States suffered until the civil rights movement began to help cure the disease in the 1960s.

As a young lawyer for the civil rights division of the U.S. Justice Department, I fought racial discrimination in the South. For the same reasons, as investment officer and trustee of New York City's public employee retirement systems, I am now committed to fighting religious discrimination in Northern Ireland.

In both situations the remedies are essentially the same: adherence to equal opportunity and tough government enforcement of strict laws against discrimination. They worked here; they can work there.

That Catholics are routinely discriminated against in employment in Northern Ireland is indisputable. Even the British Government does not deny the well-documented facts. Indeed, on a visit to Northern Ireland in 1985 I was surprised at the essential agreement among competing factions on the widespread, deeply institutionalized system of economic discrimination there against Catholics.

On how it ought to be ended, there is, of course, considerable disagreement.

British officials cite impressively-worded statutes embodying the finest ideals of English justice and equality, which prohibit discrimination and mandate redress wherever it occurs. The government has established the Fair Employment Agency (FEA) in Northern Ireland to vindicate those goals.

Although the British Government's own report setting up the FEA called for a staff of 40 and an annual budget of $1.2 million the agency has never received more than a fraction of that amount and has had to function with a staff of only 16. In addition, according to FEA staff, British officials have intervened to prevent agency investigations from "getting out of hand."

It is not surprising, therefore, that in the first six years of its existence the FEA was able to find only 13 cases of unlawful discrimination in a society where bias is endemic.

Indeed, in a recent paper the British Government acknowledged that despite the existence of the FEA over the past 10 years "the message of equality of opportunity does not appear to be making a significant impact." Its own statistics show that Catholics are as disadvantaged as ever. Consequently, only through other avenues can the goal of equal opportunity, that everyone applauds, be realized.

One approach is for businesses themselves to implement equal employment opportunity. And American companies that operate in Northern Ireland can set an example, doing the job at which government has failed, by endorsing and implementing the MacBride Principles.

The principles are a set of nine equal-employment and affirmative action guidelines developed by Dr.

Short Bros Reopens After Truce Reached

Short's, the Belfast aircraft company, is to reopen its factories, following agreement on a "truce" in the dispute over its refusal to allow Loyalist flags and emblems to fly in the plants.

The company closed three of its main production areas claiming that pickets had intimidated thousands of other workers from getting to work. The row started when a number of workers walked out after the management removed flags and bunting.

Short's warned, however, that if employees persisted in putting up flags and bunting, production areas would be closed down again. The company's statement said the unions had fully supported their "determination to provide a neutral working environment free from flags, bunting or emblems of any kind."

The statement continued: "With full trade union support the company has accordingly decided to reopen all its factories at the normal starting time on the understanding that the neutral working environment recreated will not be violated and that employees will accept the company's ruling on the flags and bunting issue."

Short's chairman, Sir Philip Foreman, said: "We accept the advice that the trade unions have given us in good faith to the effect that they endorse the view that the workplace should be a politically neutral environment and that they would advise their members of the trade union position."

"If, however, this does not prove to be the case, we will have no alternative but to close the production areas once again until the situation is satisfactorily resolved."

Three Short's plants — Queens Island, Castlereagh and Newtownards — were closed after the three-day dispute over displays of Loyalist flags and bunting on the factory floor.

Thank you.

FREEDOM FOR ALL IRELAND

Message from Freedom For All Ireland Committee Chairman

The National Freedom For All Ireland Committee is sponsoring a fund-raising event which will be a Dinner-Dance to be held on Friday, October 30, in St. Joseph's Auditorium, Hewlett, New York. Our fund-raiser, Michael O'Rourke, is chairing this project. Over 12,000 letters and award books have been mailed to individual members thus far, and many more will follow. We hope to be able to communicate with all our members, and trust we will get your support.

As Chairman of this Committee, I ask that you please give our fund-raiser, Michael O'Rourke, your wholehearted cooperation. Please circulate the awards information and make your checks payable to AOH National Board. Then, mail to:

The British Are Coming — Again?

The Grenadier Guards and the Gordon Highlanders may be marching through your area soon (as indicated in other parts of this issue).

Their performances of stirring martial music, coupled with precision drills, will be quite different from their usual performances when these two units are on active duty assignment in minority neighborhoods in Belfast and other areas of Occupied Ireland. Months of research indicate that these very groups — when not impressing naive Americans with their skills — are adept at terrorizing and "neutralizing" Irish people of every age group.

It is an affront to the American people in general, and Irish-Americans in particular, that such a charade of "pomp and pageantry" should be played out in their communities. Those responsible for local bookings are unwittingly serving as promoters of this British Gesteapo.

But not in Nassau County! Local Irish organizations as well as political leaders joined forces to mount a publicity campaign in Nassau which resulted in the cancellation of the performance scheduled at the Westbury Music Fair. These dedicated people have given us a model for how to approach the problem.

If you become aware of a scheduled local performance of the Grenadier Guards and Gordon Highlanders, alert organizations in your area. If the performance is booked at a private facility (theater, auditorium, etc.), contact the management relative to your reasons for opposing the performance, emphasizing potential demonstrations and future patronage fall-off which could result. If the venue is a federal, state, or state-supported institution (such as a university or college), contact elected representatives at the federal or state level to indicate that you oppose such use of facilities which operate with the aid of your tax dollars.

Above all, contact Kathleen Holmes (Chairperson, American-Irish Congress, P.O. Box 8, Lynbrook, New York 11563. Phone 516-599-1885) for documentation on "performances" in the north of Ireland, as well as advice. She spearheaded the successful Nassau effort to keep the Brits out and is an invaluable resource person.

DEPARTURE
Several facts become obvious as one reviews this list:
1. The British Army is scheduled to perform in 29 of the 50 United States.
2. Irish American organizations in ten of these states are presently working to cancel the performances: Alabama, Arizona, Connecticut, Maryland, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Vermont, and Washington.
3. There has not yet been any commitment from Irish Americans residing in the states of California and Illinois to begin working on this project.
Because of their large Irish American populations, the states of California and Illinois are as vital to our success as the states situated on the east coast. There are six scheduled performances throughout California, and no Irish American organization as yet committed to this challenge.
While it is understandable that Irish American energies in these states are presently concentrating on the MacBride Principles, this focused energy deployment would serve not only the British propaganda of 'pomp and pageantry,' it would also serve to diminish the support already garnered for the MacBride Principles. Neither California nor Illinois can afford to have this happen!!
4. Seventeen states remain vulnerable to British propaganda through displays of 'pomp and pageantry' of the British Army which remains unchallenged:
Colorado, Idaho, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Nebraska, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Utah, Virginia, and Wisconsin.

HELP DUBLIN CELEBRATE

Dear Sir,
In 1988 our capital city Dublin, celebrates its millennium. In order to mark this important event, we in Anner Communications Ltd., are making a television programme on the development of Dublin over the past 1000 years.

It will include the many major cultural, social, political, demographic and economic changes that have taken place in the city during this period.

I understand that there are 16 towns, townships and cities throughout America which are also called Dublin. We intend to examine their relationship and similarities, if any, to Dublin, Ireland, in our television programme.

The various places called Dublin are in the following states in America:

Maryland, Michigan, Maryland, Arkansas, Alabama, Arizona, Ohio, New York, California, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Virginia, and New York.

I have already contacted each Chamber of Commerce, local tourist agency and Mayor of each region.

I would be very grateful if you could give our millennium celebrations, and the information I am looking for on the various Dublins, a mention in your National Hibernian Digest as I feel it would generate a great response from many of your readers living in these areas.

The information I am looking for on the various Dublins throughout America is as follows:

- their population — the number of males and females and the number of young people under 25
- their employment and unemployment statistics
- climate and natural resources in each area
- their main industries, i.e., the numbers employed in the service sectors, agriculture and the manufacturing industries
- where the name Dublin originated from, if possible
- local history and folklore in each area
- the names and addresses of local facilities and amenities in the areas which could be used by our production crew, i.e., the names and addresses of local hotels and local television stations
- the names and addresses of cultural societies, particularly if they have links with Dublin, Ireland

Anner Communications Ltd., has worked with approximately 72 foreign organisations, including all the American networks, BBC, ITN, Thames, Granada, Yorkshire and all the national broadcast companies of France, Holland, Germany, Sweden, Australia, Japan and Switzerland.

I would be very grateful if you could also tell your readers to forward their information to me at the following address below.

I have no doubt that if you give our millennium celebrations a good plug in the National Hibernian Digest, it will generate a great response from many of your readers.

U.S. SENATOR CONCERNED

The Honorable Edwin Meese III
Attorney General of the United States
Department of Justice
Washington, DC

Dear Mr. Attorney General:

The case of Joseph Patrick Doherty continues to be of grave concern to many of my constituents and to members of this Congress.

Over the past four years, the English government has sought Mr. Doherty's extradition to northeast Ireland despite repeated judicial rulings against that request. When Congress passed the US-UK Extradition Treaty in 1986, the English government, with the assistance of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, again set out to deport Mr. Doherty to northeast Ireland.

However, at every level of the immigration process, the most recent being the May 22, 1987 Board of Immigration Appeals decision, it was determined that Mr. Doherty should be deported to the south of Ireland, not northeast Ireland.

It is my understanding that under Section 3.1(h) of Title 8 of the code of Federal Regulations, the Board referred its decision in the Matter of Doherty for your review and you have not yet issued an opinion.

The case of Joseph Doherty has come to be nationally and internationally known, and continues to be of significant interest to religious, judicial and civic organizations worldwide. Due to the tremendous attention given to this case, I respectfully request that you meet at your earliest convenience, with representatives of several Irish American organizations, including Mr. Richard Lawlor, Connecticut State President of the Irish American Unity Conference.

Should you require further information, do not hesitate to contact my office. I look forward to hearing from you and I thank you for your assistance.

Lowell P. Weicker, Jr.
U.S. Senator, Connecticut

JOE DOHERTY RESOLUTION PASSED

The following resolution, Assembly No. 1416, was recently passed by the State of New York:

BY: The Committee on Rules (at the request of Members of Assembly Murtaugh, Colman, Crowley, Bennett, Brennan, Brodsky, Connors, Daniels, Dearie, Diaz, Dugan, Engel, Feldman, Frisa, Greene, Healey, Keane, Lafayette, Larkin, Madison, Marshall, McCann, Nagle, O'Neil, O'Shea, Parola, Pataki, Seabrook, Yevoli and Zaleski)

URGING the United States Attorney General, Edwin Meese III, to immediately carry out and execute the court order of deportation of Joseph Patrick Doherty to the Republic of Ireland

WHEREAS, New York State on numerous occasions has expressed its support for and urged action upon matters of equal treatment and justice in upholding the basic principles upon which this nation was founded; and

WHEREAS, The case of Joseph Patrick Doherty clearly fits this principle in that execution of justice is being denied; and

WHEREAS, In December, nineteen hundred eighty-four, a judge of the United States District Court, in the Southern District of New York, after a full hearing denied a British request to extradite Mr. Doherty to Northern Ireland to spend the rest of his life in prison, finding that Mr. Doherty was a political offender in the classic sense and not a common criminal; and

WHEREAS, On September nineteenth, nineteen hundred eighty-six, after a complete and thorough judicial review, an order for deportation for Mr. Doherty was issued for him to be deported to the Republic of Ireland; and

WHEREAS, Mr. Joseph Doherty requested said order of deportation be issued as a humanitarian gesture to put an end to four years of litigation, during which time he has remained incarcerated in a United States jail charged with committing no crime in this country; and

WHEREAS, The Attorney General of the United States has given no indication of carrying out the order causing fear and concern that the order will be delayed so that the immigration and naturalization laws of this nation can be used properly to keep Mr. Doherty in prison and to achieve his extradition to Northern Ireland pursuant to the Supplemental Extradition Treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom; and

WHEREAS, The issue in this matter is not one involving the conflict in Northern Ireland nor the status of Mr. Doherty in such conflict but, rather, is strictly an issue of the United States government carrying out an order of the Court; now, therefore, be it

RESOLVED, This Legislative Body pause in its deliberations and go on record strongly urging United States Attorney General Edwin Meese III to immediately carry out and execute the order of deportation of Joseph Patrick Doherty to the Republic of Ireland; and be it further

RESOLVED, That a copy of this Resolution, suitably engrossed, be immediately transmitted to the United States Attorney General, Edwin Meese III.

ADOPTED IN ASSEMBLY on June 17, 1987

By order of the Assembly,
Francine M. Misasi, Clerk

NEW YORK TIMES CITED

Editorial Page Editor
New York Times

New York, New York 10036
Dear Editor:

The "Judge Who Became Partisan" editorial notes State Dept. legal advisor Sofaer finds ways "to shape the law to fit the U.S. policy of the moment." His defense of U.S. Nicaraguan policy before the World Court rivaled his equally diabolical support of a retroactive U.S.-U.K. extradition treaty.

Last year the Reagan-Thatcher axis endorsed Irish partition and put terrorist labels on those who resist the tyranny of English occupation. Only the legal sorcery of Mr. Sofaer could explain why the Contras are freedom fighters and those who resist a colonial garrison like Ulster are terrorists.

However it is not Mr. Sofaer's credibility and commitment to the rule of law which is worrisome. The Times in "Right to Response To Irish Terror" in June of last year swallowed his reasoning on the retroactive Extradition Treaty. Those in opposition included 3 U.S. jurists, 4 Deans of law schools, the ACLU, the ABA and 33 U.S.

PLANS PROCEED FOR IRISH BRIGADE MONUMENT

Mr. Jack O'Brien
Irish Cultural Society
11109 Belton Street
Upper Marlboro, Maryland 20772
Dear Mr. O'Brien:

It was a great pleasure to have you and Mr. Matthew Hannon meet with our staff Thursday, July 23, 1987, to discuss the monument your Irish Cultural Society is planning to erect at Antietam. We were also pleased to hear of your plans regarding the repair or replacement of the severely broken cast iron descriptive tablet, which marked the battleline of General Thomas F. Meagher's Irish Brigade at the Sunken Road (today's "Bloody Lane").

We have carefully assessed the damage of the cast iron descriptive tablet and believe that it can be reasonably repaired at an estimated cost of $500. A photograph of the damaged sign will be sent as soon as prints are developed. The dimensions and design of the tablets are enclosed. This rehabilitation work can be contracted locally through our park.

The Irish marble or granite that you and Mr. Hannon described would reflect a distinctive honor to the Irish Brigade at Antietam. This proposed monument, when completed, should be placed near the existing fence row, at the rise in the upper bank of the Sunken Road, across from the existing locust tree and approximately midway between the 132nd Pennsylvania and the 2nd Delaware Monuments. This approximate location would be historically correct. You may wish to send photocopies of the photographs that were taken to further identify this location for future references. In addition to the location, and proposed rock, we also discussed the height of the completed monument to be compatible with existing monuments and that a height up to 23 feet would be reasonable in scale for this location. We anxiously await receipt of your monument material and design plan so that our Park, Regional and Washington staff can respond within a reasonable time frame.

We, sincerely appreciate receiving a copy of the book, The Irish Brigade and Its Campaigns, by Captain D.P. Coyneham, Boston, MA, 1869 (reprint 1987). This book, a welcomed asset, has been placed in our park library which will assist interested researchers and our interpretive staff in furthering their knowledge regarding this phase of Civil War history.

It was my pleasure to be a small part of your plans regarding Antietam, and I wish you speedy success in achieving your goals. The best of luck to you and to Mr. Hannon, in acquiring an appropriate monument honoring the Irish Brigade at Antietam and your possible target dates for dedication and ceremonies during the 128th and 127th Anniversaries of the Battle of Antietam.

Stan Lock, Acting Superintendent
National Park Service,
Sharpsburg, MD

JACK O'BRIEN, member of Charles Carroll Division 2, Maryland, is presenting a copy of "The Irish Brigade and Its Campaigns" to Stan Lock, acting superintendent, Antietam National Battlefield, to be placed in the park library. At left are Richard Brown and Betty Otto of the park staff.

Senators. Name-calling to defend British propaganda by the New York Times is far more dangerous to free society than Mr. Sofaer's warped debasement of law.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT SCORED

Hon. Edwin Meese III
United States Department of Justice
Room 5111
10th Street & Constitution Av., NW
Washington, D.C. 20530
Dear Mr. Meese:

The Suffolk County Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians wishes to express its outrage with the Justice Department for its handling of the Joseph Doherty case. As you well know, Mr. Doherty, a citizen of the Republic of Ireland, has been continuously and unconsciously incarcerated in American prisons for over five years on charges of immigration violation. During this long ordeal, Mr. Doherty has been transferred, on two separate occasions without notice to counsel, to Otisville Correctional Facility, far from NY City, and there placed in solitary confinement for no explicable reason except, perhaps, to harass him and his supporters.

The Irish-American community has been a sleeping giant, slow to anger and lulled by a false sense of well-being with the body politic. You, sir, have done more than anyone else to amalgamate our Celtic spirit to campaign against the blatant injustice to Mr. Doherty. Moreover, you have treated the U.S. Constitution and our system of jurisprudence with cynicism and contempt—the very institution which you are sworn to uphold and defend.

On three separate occasions, the courts have rejected the Justice Department's attempts to extradite Joseph Doherty to British-occupied northeast Ireland. As stated by the courts, "The facts in the case present the political offense exception in its most classic form." 599F. Supp. 270 276 (SD NY 1984). The Justice Department has retorted with ridicule for the courts. Each time the INS, on behalf of Great Britain, has appealed the decision of the courts while keeping Joe Doherty behind bars. Finally, on September 19, 1986, the immigration court ordered Mr. Doherty deported to the Irish Republic. Once again the INS appealed and the BIA granted a hearing. Before there was a decision on the appeal, you, Mr. Attorney General, wrested the case from them. Having lost through due process of law, you now thumb your nose at the courts.

Hopefully, the moral indignation of Americans now awakened to the case will eventually prevail upon you where the courts have failed — to simply deport Joseph Doherty to the Republic of Ireland from whence he came.

Thomas J. Jordan, Jr., President
Suffolk Co., NY, AOH

CONGRESSMAN BACKS H.R. 722

Dear Mr. Henshaw:

Previously, you contacted me to express concern over the discrimination and violence which continue to plague Northern Ireland. I am taking this opportunity to write to inform you of recent developments which I believe may be of interest to you.

I have joined as a cosponsor of legislation, H.R. 722, which represents a major initiative to combat employment discrimination in Northern Ireland. This measure calls upon U.S. companies doing business in Northern Ireland to adopt the MacBride Principles of Fair Employment and Non-Discrimination. These principles call for increased employment of people from underrepresented religious groups, the banning of provocative sectarian emblems and the abolition of differential employment criteria that discriminate on the basis of religious or ethnic origins.

H.R. 722 is presently pending in the House Ways and Means Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Please be assured of my vigorous efforts to secure enactment of this much-needed legislation. I will continue to work to end the discrimination and bloodshed plaguing Northern Ireland and will support legislative remedies to end these injustices.

IT'S A LONG WAY TO TIPPERARY

Dear Editor:

The pope is believed to be infallible when he speaks ex cathedra in matters of faith and morals pertaining to the Catholic Church. The pope, it seems, proved that he is indeed fallible when he entered the secular world of Irish history. His statement to the clergy on the issue of women's role in the church proves this. He used the title of an Irish song to analogize this involvement stating, "It's A Long Way to Tipperary." What he and the American clergy (most of whom are Irish or of Irish descent) do not know is that this song was used by the English and Scottish troops of the British Army in the rear ranks of battle to mock the Irish troops of the British Army in the front ranks of battle as they were sent out to the slaughter in Britain's colonial wars around the globe.

The sorrowful part of this whole occurrence is not that a Polish Pope living in isolation in Italy should be aware of these small incidents of Irish history but that the American Catholic clergy (once again, mostly Irish and Irish descent) should.

Maybe, one day, a Pope of the Catholic Church and therefore his clergy in America will learn of these small incidents of centuries of Irish history which when totalled together in 1987 make up an ongoing oppression of a people by the British which at least equals and in Irish minds surpasses the oppression (past and present) of Blacks, Jews and others that the Pope has chosen to speak out against.

To those who would question the presence of Irish people in the British Army in the first place I say — oppression is oppression is oppression.

OUTFOXING KARL MARX

Dear Editor:

"Don't let anyone tell you we are relying on guns alone to carry the day." These were President Reagan's words last week as he congratulated the Presidential Task Force on their report, "High Road to Economic Justice."

The report recommends the implementation of ESOP (Employee Stock Ownership Plans) in Central America and the Caribbean. It points with pride to one pilot model, The La Perla Plantation in Guatemala. La Perla employee stockholders understand that the communist theory of economic power is based on abolition of private property. For this reason Marxist propaganda and intimidation does not influence them.

Time is running out. We must understand that the value neutral advocates of communism in Central America are falsely trying to convince us that the Marxist government in Nicaragua is the moral equivalent of democracy. Therefore we should be prepared to continue military aid to the "Freedom Fighters." Otherwise economic opportunity for ESOPs may fade away under communist government. President Reagan has instructed his staff to review the Task Force Report for implementation. This must be done quickly by energetic and committed staffers. The recommendations should be implemented under a halo of high visibility.

Widespread employee stock ownership can be a major force to ensure the ultimate decay of Marxism in our hemisphere. It will promote economic democracy. As President Reagan said in the forward of the Task Force Report, "Could there be a better answer to Karl Marx than millions of workers individually sharing in the means of production?"

Strip-Search Protests Set For November

PHILADELPHIA — In mid-November 1987, a picket is planned at Maghaberry Women's Prison in Northern Ireland to protest the indiscriminate strip-searching of women prisoners.

The Stop the Strip Searches Committee of Concerned Irish Americans, as well as men and women with no Irish heritage, is planning a rally in Philadelphia to coincide with the picket at Maghaberry.

The women in Maghaberry and Durham Prison in England would appreciate the cooperation of all people in the United States and other countries in planning rallies on the date to be announced.

November 11, 1987, will start the sixth year of this degrading, dehumanizing, psychological rape of women in Northern Ireland and England. We cannot, by our silence, allow this to continue and respectfully ask that all areas across this country hold rallies on the same date.

Any help we can provide with information and/or literature on strip searching will be gladly sent to any group planning rallies. Please write to Joe Montgomery, Stop the Strip Searches Committee, P.O. Box

STATE NEWS: Pennsylvania

By JIM CAWLEY, JR.

"Never before have I seen our motto of Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity better exemplified than at this convention." These words of outgoing State Board President John Gilroy serve as a fitting epitaph for the 84th Biennial Pennsylvania AOH State Convention. The "peaceful and productive" convention was held in Philadelphia for the first time in twenty years.

The opening mass was celebrated by Father Thomas Doyle, chaplain for the Philadelphia County Board, at Old Saint Joseph's Church, the oldest Catholic Church in Philadelphia. Immediately following the mass the congregation marched from the church back to the hotel for a communion breakfast. The speaker was noted Irish and American historian Doctor James Clark. Clark's speech on the Irish in Pennsylvania proved very informative and served as a reminder of the hardships that all immigrants have to overcome in the United States.

On Friday morning mass for deceased members was celebrated by Father Charles Mulrooney, State Board Chaplain, at Old Augustine's Church at 4th and Vine. Following the mass the delegates began the official sessions.

Upon opening the floor on Friday afternoon for nominations for state officers, two officers received single nominations and both candidates were elected by acclamation, namely incumbent Daniel Deasy, secretary, and incumbent David Fleming, treasurer. The following morning the contested elections were balloted with the result that Ronald "Bo" Bryan of Allegheny County won over Martin Madigan of the same county by 84 to 33. The vice president contest between Vincent Scully of Delaware Co. and Thomas Finnerty of Lackawanna Co. was resolved in favor of Scully, 85 to 33. The choice for the 1989 State Convention was Wilkes-Barre (Sheraton Crossgates) over Scranton.

On Friday evening the delegates gathered for the biennial "Night at the Races," the only fundraiser for the State Board.

On Saturday morning National President Nick Murphy addressed the convention about the progress being made during his tenure. In the evening a three hour closing dinner was highlighted by the music of Ty Eamon Harkins Band and an address by Rep. Robert A. Borski of the 3rd congressional district. This was followed by installation of officers.

Many of the delegates maintained that the location had something to do with the success of the convention. Perhaps being so close to America's "Cradle of Liberty" during the "We The People 200" celebration inspired the delegates to bond together. Whatever the reason, there can be no doubt that just as the constitutional convention is remembered for its harmonious success, so too will the 84th Biennial Pennsylvania State Convention go down in Hibernian history for its peaceful and unparalleled achievements.

Newly elected State President Ronald Bryan has appointed the following brothers as deputy organizers:

John J. Bonner, 2 Balsam Rd. Trailwood, Wilkes Barre, PA 18702.
Joseph J. Callahan, 515 Seven Oaks Dr., Clifton Heights, PA 19018.
Thomas J. Fay, 1117 Powers Run Rd., Pittsburgh, PA 15238.
Thomas J. Malloy, 149 S. Pine St., Hazleton, PA 18201.
John J. Murray, 305 Winston St., Pittsburgh, PA 15207.
Joseph F. Murrin, 440 Prescott Ave., Scranton, PA 18510.
David O'Connor, 5106 Second Ave., Pittsburgh, PA 15207.

According to Danniell Deasy, who is national historian, for the first time in over twenty years, Kenywood Park was the location for the annual Hibernian picnic. Irish men and women from all over Western Pennsylvania enjoyed the beautiful weather and a day full of Irish music and dancing provided by Jim Lamb, Guaranteed Irish, Mike Gallagher, The Crowns, and Cahal Dunne.

An outdoor Mass was celebrated by Father Garrett Dorsey, who is Division 15 chaplain. County Vice President Dave O'Connor is to be commended for his efforts in coordinating the work of several Irish-American organizations that participated in making the picnic a success.

Hibernians in Luzerne County will honor Past State President John "Red" Gilroy at a Testimonial Dinner on Saturday, November 14 at the American Legion Post 132 Home in Wilkes Barre. Reservations are

In the past year, Fr. Desmond Wilson, representing the Conway Street Mill and the Springhill Community in Belfast, and Mary Nellis, representing Dove House in Derry, visited the United States. They appealed to the Irish American community to help them — and that is why I am writing to you.

Friends of Fr. Wilson and Mary Nellis have created Doiree Dochais (Doors of Hope) to raise money in the United States to further the goals of being handled by Joseph Clark, 458 Hazle Street, Wilkes Barre, PA 18702.

Tickets are $22.00 per person and November 1 is the deadline for dinner reservations. This dinner will also commemorate the tenth anniversary of St. John Newman Division 2 which was founded through the efforts of John Gilroy. In the ten years of its existence this division has grown to be the largest in Pennsylvania and has produced a state president and a national director.

Irish Glossary — For Reference & Study

Ad Hoc Committee on Irish Affairs: Set up by Congressman Mario Biaggi for members of Congress with interest in Irish affairs.

Alliance Party: Formed April 1970 with both Catholic and Protestant members. General aim of reforming the northern state while maintaining the link with Britain. The most moderate of the Unionist parties.

Apprentice Boys: A Protestant fraternal organization with strong links to the Orange Order. Members hold an annual march on August 12 in Derry to commemorate the 13 Protestant apprentices who closed the gates of Derry in 1689 to prevent the entry of the forces of the Catholic King James II. Riots following the 1969 Apprentice Boys march precipitated riots throughout the north of Ireland and led to the British Government sending in the army to control the situation.

B-Specials: A part-time Protestant militia set up before Ireland was partitioned to reinforce the Royal Irish Constabulary in what were to become the six counties cut off from the rest of Ireland. Retained after the partition of Ireland as an auxiliary force for the Royal Ulster Constabulary. It was throughout its existence an exclusively Protestant and bigoted force. Disbanded following publication of the Hunt Report in 1970.

Campaign for Social Justice in Northern Ireland (CSJ): Group formed in 1984 to fight discrimination against Catholics in north Ireland. Its publicity campaign in Britain led to the formation of the Campaign for Democracy in Ulster (CDU), which was formed in 1985 and supported by Members of Parliament with Irish connections and others in the British Labor Party. CSJ was also the forerunner of the Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association.

Central Citizens' Defense Committee (CCDC): At first a co-ordinating body for Catholic defense groups formed after the 1969 attacks on Catholic ghettos. Some of the defense committees were later absorbed by the Provisional IRA while the CCDC came under the control of a more conservative and anti-republican group.

Cumann na mBan: Gaelic for the League or Society of Women. Formed in 1914 as the Irish Volunteers Women's auxiliary.

Dail Eireann: The Irish House of Parliament. Members of the Dail are known as Teachta Dala (abbreviated TD) gaelic for Parliamentary Deputy.

Democratic Unionist Party (DUP): Founded by Ian Paisley in 1971 and closely associated with the fundamentalist Free Presbyterian Church set up by Paisley in the 1950s. An extreme right wing Unionist group supported mainly by working class Protestants.

Diplock Courts: Special courts where specially selected judges operate without juries and using special rules of evidence can "convict" and sentence those charged with politically motivated offenses. Introduced to implement a suggestion of Brigadier Frank Kitson that the law could be used as a "propaganda cover for the disposal of unwanted members of the public."

Fenian Brotherhood: Group with branches in America and Ireland which organized the 1867 rising in Ireland. Survived as the Irish Republican Brotherhood which organized the Easter Rebellion of 1916. The term "Fenian" sometimes used by Protestants in north Ireland to describe Catholics.

Fianna Fail (FF): Gaelic for Soldiers of Destiny. Largest political party in the south of Ireland. Formed by Eamon de Valera in 1926 when he split from Sinn Fein. Viewed as the most Republican of the southern constitutional parties. Like these parties Fianna Fail seeks to end the partition of Ireland by peaceful means but differs from them in viewing the six county statelet as a failed political entity. FF is opposed to any form of devolved government there and says that Britain should withdraw its guarantee to the Unionists and prepare for eventual withdrawal at some time in the future.

Fine Gael (FG): Gaelic for the Irish Family. Formed in 1933 by a merger of Cumann na nGaedheal, the National Center Party and the Blueshirts. Cumann na nGaedheal (gaelic for the Irish League or Society) was formed in 1923 by pro-Treaty members of Sinn Fein. The National Center Party was a group with agricultural interests that came together in 1932 to oppose the Economic War brought on by the decision of Fianna Fail to withhold payment of Land Annuities to the British Exchequer. The Blueshirts (originally called the Army Comrades Association, then renamed the National Guard) received the name Blueshirts when the National Guard adopted a blue uniform modeled on Mussolini's Blackshirts. The group also used the Fascist salute. The leader of the Blueshirts, Col. O'Duffy, was the first President of Fine Gael but he was forced to resign and the party has become the Irish conservative party. Has only been able to form a government when in coalition with other groups. Under Garret Fitzgerald a devolved government in the north of Ireland is seen as the first step towards a resolution of the problem of partition.

Free State: Name given to the 26 southern counties of Ireland until 1949 when Ireland left the Commonwealth and became the "Republic of Ireland".

Friends of Ireland: A Republican-Democrat group set up in Washington March 16, 1981 following a visit by John Hume of the Social Democratic and Labor Party. Object: to "keep a close watching brief on the Northern issue." Associated with the Four Horsemen — Senators Kennedy and Moynihan, Congressman Tip O'Neill and former Governor Carey of New York. Would appear to back policies of Hume's SDLP and apparently also brought pressure to bear on Ireland's Haughey when he wanted to remove Ambassador Donlon from Washington.

Garda Siochana (or Gardai) also called Civic Guards: The police in the south of Ireland.

H-Blocks: The cell blocks in Long Kesh Concentration Camp — also called the Maze Prison. Named H-Blocks because of their shape.

Hunt Report: Report issued 10/10/69 by committee headed by Lord Hunt which recommended sweeping changes in what proved a vain effort to reform the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the police force in the north of Ireland.

Irish American Defense Fund: US based group formed to pay legal expenses and when necessary provide financial assistance to families of those charged in the US for offenses connected with the Irish struggle for self-determination.

Irish Citizen Army: Founded by James Larkin in 1913 as a workers' defense force and fashioned by James Connolly into a revolutionary socialist force. The Plough and the Stars was the flag of the Irish Citizen Army which took part with the Irish Volunteers in the 1916 Rising.

Irish Independence Party: Formed in 1977 with aim of seeking a British withdrawal from north Ireland.

Irish Labor Party: Founded in 1912 by James Larkin and James Connolly as a trade unionist's party with membership limited to union members, a restriction removed in 1930 in an effort to widen its power base. Irish workers have, however, tended to give their support to Fianna Fail. The Labor Party has formed coalition governments with Fine Gael since 1973.

Irish National Caucus: Set up as an umbrella group to lobby legislators on behalf of a united Ireland. Acting now for same aim but independently of other Irish organizations.

Irish National Liberation Army (INLA): See Irish Republican Socialist Party.

Irish Northern Aid Committee: See Noraid.

Irish Republican Army (IRA): Name given to the guerrilla army which fought against the British in the War of Independence, 1919-1921. After the signing of the treaty, the IRA split into two factions, with the anti-treaty faction going underground and retaining the name IRA. In 1939-40 they carried out a bombing campaign in England and campaigns in the north in 1942-44 and 1956-62. The failure to gain popular support for the 56-62 campaign led to a decision to give up the armed struggle, recognize the partition parliaments in Stormont and Dublin. This departure from the traditional aims of the movement resulted in a split in 1970 with the dissenting minority forming the Provisional Irish Republican Army. The majority was called first the Official IRA. Both factions claimed the name Sinn Fein for the political groups associated with them, and we thus had Provisional Sinn Fein and Official Sinn Fein. Later the Officials dropped the title IRA and called themselves Sinn Fein The Workers Party. They have since renounced the name Sinn Fein and are now known simply as The Workers Party.

Irish Volunteers: Formed in 1913 "to secure and maintain the rights and liberties common to all the people of Ireland." Later called the Irish Republican Army.

Loyalist: Term applied to individuals or groups favoring the retention of the link with the British Crown. Synonymous with Unionist.

MIF: Abbreviation for Military Intelligence 5, the branch of British Intelligence which operates in the United Kingdom. Sometimes referred to as the Security Service. Now called DI5 — for Defense Intelligence 5 — instead of MI5.

MI6: Abbreviation for Military Intelligence 6, the branch of British Intelligence which operates in foreign countries. Known also by the names

Secret Service and Secret Intelligence Service (SIS). Now called DI6 — for Defense Intelligence 6 — instead of MI6.

Military Reconnaissance Force (MRF): Undercover British Army units set up on lines recommended by Brigadier Frank Kitson in Low Intensity Operations. Operational procedures similar to those of Special Air Service units and the MRF units may be composed of SAS personnel or acting under the control of SAS personnel. They are the "dirty tricks" units and are responsible for setting of "IRA" bombs, sectarian and political assassinations, kidnappings etc. Have operated in both areas of partitioned Ireland.

Nationalist: Term applied to individuals or groups in Ireland favoring a united Ireland. The term "Republican" is reserved for those nationalists who are prepared to take up arms if necessary in pursuit of a united Ireland. Those who condone only peaceful means are called constitutional nationalists.

National H-Block Armagh Committee: Umbrella group of national organizations which publicized world-wide the case for political status throughout the 1980-1981 hunger strikes.

New Ireland Group: Started by John Robb in 1982 in effort to give new and independent approach to the problems caused by the partition of Ireland. Has advocated negotiated independence for north Ireland so that both north and south could work out new relationship with Great Britain and each other.

Noraid (Irish Northern Aid Committee): US based group formed to raise funds for the support of the families of republicans incarcerated in Ireland, England, Scotland or Wales and to publicize in America the facts about the situation in Ireland. Although political enemies charge that some of the funds raised go for the purchase of weapons the Noraid case upheld by Document 37. This was a secret intelligence estimate of IRA potential prepared by Britain's General Glover which was "acquired" and published by the press. Despite public claims by British officials to the contrary, the report showed that the Provisional IRA was spending more on prisoners' welfare etc. than the total amount received in contributions from abroad.

Normalisation Policy: Special Category Status — i.e. political prisoner status — was granted to all convicted of politically motivated offenses in north Ireland in 1972. The presence of such prisoners proved embarrassing and it was deemed necessary to brand all Irish freedom fighters as criminals. The Diplock Courts made it easy for the establishment to dispose of "unwanted members of the public." They were no longer "Freedom Fighters" but "convicted criminals." As part of the Normalization process also the Royal Ulster Constabulary were given a bigger role. The army was still there but deliberately kept in the background as much as possible. When RUC etc. were sufficiently prepared the announcement was made that all convicted after March 1976 would be housed in the H-Blocks of Long Kesh and denied special category status. The first prisoner affected by the new rule, Kieran Nugent, refused to wear prison clothes or accept prison work assignments. He was locked naked in a cell and had to use a blanket to cover his nakedness. This was the start of the Blanket Protest, which became the Dirty Protest when Long Kesh authorities refused to allow those protesting to empty the chambers containing their body wastes into buckets up to them provided for that purpose. After enduring barbaric conditions for almost five years a Hunger Strike was embarked on and ten young men died.

Northern Ireland Civil Rights Association (NICRA): Group modeled on the National Council for Civil Liberties (London) which was formed in north Ireland in 1967. Became a mass movement co-ordinating the activities of many groups in the civil rights campaign. Influenced by the Civil Rights marches in America. Received world wide media attention when Civil Rights marchers were attacked by Orange mobs led by members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Northern Ireland Labor Party: Trade union based party established 1924. Abandoned neutral position on partition in 1949 when it endorsed Union with Britain. Enjoys very little support.

Northern Ireland Office: The British administrative center, located in Stormont Castle, from which the province has been governed since Stormont, the parliament of the 6 counties, was prorogued in March 1972.

Orange Order: Founded in 1795 in time of Catholic-Protestant land disputes to protect Protestant interests. Spread with official encouragement and through the years has remained an exclusively Protestant force dedicated to maintaining Protestant supremacy and the link with the Crown. Has been used by government officials to inflame sectarian passions. A columnist in Fortnight, September 9, 1985, compared the Order to the KKK in the US.

Peace People: Group formed in 1976 for the promotion of a peaceful solution. Attracted large crowds at first until it was perceived in nationalist areas as one-sided in its condemnation of violence. The rapid rise of the Peace People described by one reporter as "a staggering example of new creation." (British Media and Ireland)

People's Democracy: A student-based organization launched in 1968 and active in the civil rights campaign. Influence has declined as it moved to the extreme left politically.

Red Hand Commandos: Loyalist sectarian paramilitary group that emerged in 1972 and was banned the following year.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC): Set up in 1922 to replace the Royal Irish Constabulary as the official police force in the six counties. Never a police force in the accepted sense of the term. It has always been an armed paramilitary predominantly Protestant force for the defense of Unionist interests.

Sinn Fein: Gaelic for "Ourselves" though the two Irish words are often, incorrectly, translated by "Ourselves alone." The name Sinn Fein was given to an umbrella organization formed in 1905 by Arthur Griffith with a policy designed to bring together constitutional and republican nationalists. The execution of the 1916 leaders turned many moderate nationalists into militants and they joined Sinn Féin which the British had charged was responsible for the rebellion. It became the political party with a republican philosophy. Twenty-seven elected Sinn Féin delegates were present at the first Dail in January, 1919. They ratified the Republic proclaimed in 1916 and decreed that the Irish Volunteers should be called the Irish Republican Army. The IRA, however, was acting independently of the Dail and continued to do so even after the first Minister of Defense, Cathal Brugha, succeeded in getting many of them to take an oath of allegiance which mentioned "Dail Eireann." The relationship between Sinn Féin and the IRA in modern Ireland is like that of 1919. Ruairi O'Bradaigh, President of Sinn Féin, made that clear in a conversation with Hamilton Fish, a member of Congress on a fact finding trip to Ireland in 1978: "The relationship is that those two organizations, and many other organizations, share the same objectives." (Northern Ireland: A role for the United States, 95th Congress, 2d Session, Committee Print No. 23, p. 17.) While the aim of Sinn Féin is to establish a 32 county democratic socialist Republic, Marxists charge that the socialism of Sinn Féin is not really socialism but an alternative to socialism which is derived from Papal encyclicals. (Ireland Divided Nation Divided Class, p. 90 ff.)

Social Democratic and Labor Party (SDLP): Formed by Gerry Fitt, John Hume, Ivan Cooper, Paddy O'Hanlon, Austin Currie, Paddy Devlin and Paddy Wilson in August 1970 with Fitt as party leader. Fitt and Wilson were members of the Republican Labor party though Fitt had always wanted to emphasize the social rather than the Republican philosophy. Hume, Cooper and O'Hanlon had been independent MPs active in the civil rights campaign. Currie was a Nationalist MP and O'Hanlon a member of the Northern Ireland Labor Party. On the national question the SDLP adopted a policy of unity by consent of the majority in the north. Has been accused of opportunistic politics, opposing the state in 1971 but joining in the power sharing 1974 Executive. Lost ground to Sinn Féin which made inroads into SDLP strongholds to secure 40 percent of the nationalist vote. Surprisingly, considering its public backing by the Friends of Ireland in Congress, the SDLP is a member of the Socialist International and the Confederation of Socialist Parties of the European Community.

Special Air Service (SAS): Unit of British Army set up during World War II for undercover operations. Used for plain-clothes "dirty-trick" operations as described under Military Reconnaissance Force. Details of SAS operations and personnel subject to a D notice in Britain — unauthorized publication a violation of the Official Secrets Acts.

Stormont: The six county Parliament.

Strip Searching: New procedures introduced into Armagh Women's Prison 11/9/82 which contravened all guidelines associated with such searches in US. Have been described as the moral equivalent of rape and are carried out simply to intimidate and degrade Irish female political prisoners.

Sunningdale Agreements: In November 1973 an announcement was made that some Unionists, the Alliance Party and the SDLP had agreed to form a power sharing Executive. The parties involved met at Sunningdale with representatives of the London and Dublin governments in December 1973 to discuss the political framework within which the newly formed N.I. Executive would operate as well as other items which included the setting up of a Council of Ireland. The Executive, headed by Brian Faulkner, began to function on 1/1/74 but was toppled when the British Army refused to take action against paramilitary groups intimidating workers during a strike called by the Ulster Workers' Council in May 1974.

Taoiseach: Head of government, i.e. Prime Minister, in the south of Ireland.

Ulster Defense Association (UDA): Largest Protestant paramilitary organization. Started in 1969 as an umbrella organization linking a number of vigilante groups. Responsible for many sectarian assassinations but never banned. Used name Ulster Freedom Fighters as a term of convenience when claiming responsibility for assassinations and this "fictional" organization has been banned. City branches of the UDA were particularly vulnerable to infiltration by SAS/MRF personnel who used the UDA to carry out political murders. Kennedy Lindsay, a loyalist, charges in The British Intelligence Services in Action, p. 160, that the Ulster Freedom Fighters may have been controlled by the British.

Ulster Defense Regiment (UDR): A locally recruited unit of the British Army formed in 1970 when the B-Specials were disbanded. Mainly Protestant force. Former B-Specials were encouraged to join and membership in the UDA etc. it was made clear, was no bar to joining. Composed of part-timers as well as full-time members, many of whom have been involved in sectarian crimes. There is, one writer has commented, a remarkable structural resemblance to the Gurka Brigade in that they are led by Englishers while no "native" can rise above a certain rank.

Ulster Loyalist Association: Group active in the period 1969-1972 calling for stronger security policies and opposed to any interference with the constitution of north Ireland.

Ulster Loyalist Democratic Party: Political party formed in 1981 and linked to the Ulster Defense Association.

Ulster Protestant Volunteers: A paramilitary body formed in 1966 by Ian Paisley "to uphold and maintain the Constitution of Northern Ireland as an integral part of the United Kingdom as long as the United Kingdom maintains a Protestant Monarchy and the terms of the Revolution Settlement." Linked with the Ulster Constitution Defense Committee formed at the same time. While committed to using "all lawful methods" to attain its aims some of its members were involved in bombings which led to Prime Minister O'Neill's fall from power. The Protestant Volunteers disappeared after 1969. Many of its members were also in the Ulster Volunteer Force.

Ulster Unionist Party: An Ulster Unionist Council was set up in 1906 to oppose Home Rule and this became the Ulster Unionist Party when Ireland was partitioned in 1921. The party maintained strong links with the Orange Order and with the British Conservative Party. It formed the government of north Ireland from 1921 until 1972 when Stormont was prorogued. Took the name "Official Unionist Party" to distinguish it from the Unionist Party of Northern Ireland formed by Brian Faulkner after the collapse of the power sharing Executive.

Ulster Volunteer Force: Protestant militia formed in 1912 to oppose Home Rule and were formed into a separate unit of the British Army — the 36th (Ulster) Division — during the First World War. Reformed in 1920 and engaged in attacks on Catholics 1920-1923. A sectarian group using the same name emerged in 1965 and though banned the following year continued on as an underground paramilitary organization. Controlled by British Intelligence who arranged to have their man rise rapidly within the UVF hierarchy by having other activists arrested.

Ulster Special Constabulary: Exclusively Protestant paramilitary forces organized by British in 1920. The A-Specials were full time helpers of the Royal Irish Constabulary, the B-Specials were part-timers while the Cs were armed and could be quickly mobilized.

Ulster Workers' Council: Loyalist trade unionists who came together under UDA auspices in 1973 and organized the May 1974 strike that toppled the power sharing Executive.

Ulster Vanguard: Umbrella organization initiated by William Craig early in 1972 to oppose direct rule from London then only a possibility. Strongly supported by loyalist paramilitary groups especially the Vanguard Service Corps with which it was linked. Accused of being a fascist movement — Craig given the Fascist salute at rallies. Craig changed the Vanguard from being an umbrella group into a political party in 1973 and called it the Vanguard Unionist Progressive Party. This lasted until 1978 when he resurrected Ulster Vanguard.

Unionist: Term applied to individuals or groups in favor of retaining the political link between the six northern counties of Ireland and the United Kingdom. Synonymous with loyalist.

United Ulster Unionist Coalition: Alliance formed by the Official Unionist Party, the Democratic Unionist Party and the Vanguard Party in 1974 to bring down the power sharing Executive.

Emigrants

(For Joe Doherty Entombed)

Ambition's inner worm gnawed the Irish immigrant heart — born of necessity incredible, refugees from gleeful, godly, genocide — exported to provide for those worn outside-in by England's famine worm,
England's 'satisfactory level' of righteous extirpation.

Ireland exported the pride of the hearth, sent in saecula saeculorum,
vanished in aeternam — bare survival inadequate, intolerable at such sacrifice,
but flourish and flourish again midst famine stream of Anglo-American waspery and trepidation — they, who feared your prowess, your avowed, manic, life-giving function — achieve!

They, who presumed a leisure without tedium as a right, making a virtue of minutia, a 'satisfactory level' of distilled lassitude:
romantic, adventuring, certifiable exiles fled of other fears — of timorous title,
threatening sire,
periled patrimony, of harlots, punting, and double-visioned hunting:

"Too much, sirrah! you shame me, sir!
to the colonies or to hell with you!"

So they came, glebeless both — we to build a country and rise memorially, they to ravage, misunderstand, and despoil a clay-based Empire from within, syphilis-like,
while we built brick upon brick,
we, out of the clay, attended the wake of their descent — like decent christians.

While, at the Club,
over a suitable claret,
Sir Cecil announced (with some relief),
the demise of his eldest,
'gone for England's glory!'
"Hear! hear!" (wink! wink!)

.....

Such bombast was my first lesson in history — boiled from Sligo and Kildare, Galway and Antrim roots to a youthful confusion, annealed in a familial pot of Christmas or Easter cheer — father rarely participated in the poisonous drink, or Hibernia's melancholy misery — understanding only relationships
he could control, possessor of only maintenance-free values — saloon-keeper, denied the luxury of free speech, doomed to impressions and agreement — necessary acquiescence, sublimation,

condescension —
patronizing patrons:
laugh, (foolish), take the cash — agree, (amadan), take the cash — calculated deference —
'More fool ye!'

Occasional benders, though, less controlled
near the end, provoked a personal, scab-picking,
revisionist history —

"The day I sailed in the tawler,
I knew I'd never see my mother again —
no fekkín' jets then — no money, either!
I stood on the deck with the other poor goms and innocents and saw the old men on the cliffs — I couldn't find my own father. The women had placed piles of straw along the ridge and some ran along lighting them and waving and calling our names in pitiful squeals — I say my mother waving her red shawl and finally falling to the ground, unable to run any further — then, a wave washed her out of view — forever.
She was only forty when I left but she was dead in a few years and they couldn't keep her till I got home — 'don't be laughing, you bollix, or I'll break your bloody back!' — whatever it was kept me on that boat, that turned my back to her mawing on a Sligo strand, took all my heart for aught —"

So it was —
and from such I learned, at the knee
as at the grave.

Hibernian Sports

Mike Heslin

BINGHAMTON, NY

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans!

Tour De France — By now everyone knows that Stephan Roche ran this endurance race. He also ran most of the other major bike races in Europe. The big flap was over the Charles Haughey being on the podium with the PM of France for the victory presentation. Some wags say this was strictly political. Others say it was because Roche is still an Irishman, no matter where he lives. YR thinks it was great that 2 PMs were there to greet the winner. As for the winner, YR liked the remark when he asked when the impact hit him. Roche said something to the effect that it was when they started playing the Irish National Anthem. Roche said they only play that on important occasions.

Baseball — The pennant races on in earnest. The Mets aren't winning when they should. The Yankees are doing their best but this doesn't seem to be good enough for their owner, George S. Punditis are marking the calendars as to the days Sweet Lou Pinella has left. St. Louis seems to be shaky. Well, time will tell. YR has no predictions; if your memory is good, he hasn't picked a winner since he married.

Football — The Colleges opened up in force this past weekend. Notre Dame went to Ann Arbor, MI and came home a winner. They looked good. Maybe this is their year. Penn State on the other hand, entertained Alabama and played the host right up to letting the visiting team win. Penn State is young; so is Notre Dame, but you'll see a lot of exciting football this year from these two teams among others. Support your local teams.

In the Pros, there is talk of a strike. Over free agency. YR can't get too shook up over guys talking about going out on strike when the average salary is around $200,000. Seattle's Bosworth gets something around $18,000/game and John Elway gets $62,000/game. YR is struggling to make ends meet on $26,000/year. Please do not think YR is anti-union. He isn't. He just has troubles with people making that kind of money being unhappy with what they are doing. If they were striking to give the lowly rank-and-file members a bigger piece of the action, that would be fine. Or if they were doing it for a noble principle. But the owners and the players seem to have one thing in mind, and it isn't the fans. Enough soapbox!

In the opening week, the Jets made good use of the players who are healthy. One of the announcers on the Jets-Bills game thought that Marty Lyons should be paid more as he had a speaking part. Lyons voiced his disapproval of a call which was picked up and carried nationwide. Marty should work on his vocabulary. Denver picked Seattle apart, Bosworth not withstanding. Washington handled Philadelphia easily. Buddy Ryan introduced some innovative plays. The one is strictly illegal, having a player come from the sideline and not the huddle. Ray Perkins team, Tampa Bay, turned in a fine performance on the first day. YR didn't get to see much of the other teams. But it should prove to be an interesting season.

On the local HS football scene, 2 Irish kids teamed up to beat the Catholic High School in the opening game. Ray Stanton and Kevin McHugh playing for the Binghamton Patriots did in Seton Catholic Central High School. Stanton is following in his father's footsteps, being the QB. McHugh is a receiver.

Gaelic Sports — The All-Ireland Championships are getting underway. YR will try catching these in the next column.

Odds 'N Ends — Now that football is underway, the baseball playoffs and World Series will be soon upon us. Basketball will soon be here also, as will hockey. Send your clips and letters concerning what your Division or members of your Division are doing.

YR received a notice that NYS AOH Softball tourney was held in Elmira on 8/22-23/87 but never received any word on who won. YR can't write about it if you don't inform him. Until next time on the sidelines, Slainte!

Irish Women Score Well on LPGA Tour

National Hibernian Digest, September-October 1987 — Page 23

Pat Bradley, 1986 Lady Golfer of the Year, Patty Sheehan, Leading Contender and Sally Quinlan, a golfer to be reckoned with, are all having fine seasons.

Pat Bradley, L.P.G.A., won almost $500,000 in 1986 and was voted the leading woman golfer in the world. Although she has won only one tournament this year, she has scored well and should bring home a few victories before the year is out. Every victory brings a cow bell salute from her mother, Kathleen, back in Westford, MA. Pat and Bradley's Ski & Tennis Shop, on Route No. 110, Westford, have been one of the top supporters of Division 14 AOH Tara Hall Sports Nights over the years. Father Owen O'Sullivan, S.M.A., and the boys at Tara Hall, Georgetown, S.C., are most grateful.

Patty Sheehan, a native of Vermont and now residing in California, is a force to be reckoned with in every tournament that she enters. For some unknown reason, the media has been slow to recognize her many talents. Finally, she is receiving credit for her fine performances over the years. Patty, a very benevolent person, supports "The Tia Sheehan" home for abused and misguided girls in California. Due to her generosity, these girls will be given a chance at a happier and more productive life.

Sally Quinlan, formerly of Framingham and now of Dennis on Cape Cod, has been playing outstanding golf since joining the tour four years ago. Sally was in the leading twenty-five (25) money winners on the L.P.G.A. tour prior to the recent Boston Five Classic at Danvers, MA. She had a second place finish at Indianapolis' Mayflower Classic and a fourth place finish in the Tucson Open. Sally won the Mastercard International in her rookie season, which is a major accomplishment.

She is a graduate of the University of Miami.

Perhaps the golf story of the year was the outstanding play of local amateur, Anne Marie Tobin of Bellevue C.C. and Mount Holyoke College. The young amateur went to a fifteen girl playoff before being eliminated for a spot in this year's U.S. Women's Open. As it was, she had a lower score than almost 60% of the lady pros in the qualifying round at a tough Winchester C.C. Ann Marie should definitely be heard from on the pro tour in a few years.

New York State Softball Teams Bat It Out

ELMIRA, N.Y.: The results of the 1987 Softball Tournament held on August 22, 1987 at Elmira Festival, Elmira, N.Y. county fairgrounds, are as follows:

The teams playing were Auburn and Oswego. The fields took you back to the 1940s — out in the pasture with rocks, dips and holes. But this makes you appreciate the nice fields that are smooth, levelled, lighted and a pleasure to play on today.

The two teams played a 3 out of 5 series and made a good showing under the circumstances. As usual, there were the small disagreements that were controlled, and decisions made by the cool umpire, Fran Woodward. The games were played under the threat of rain all day but the rain held off until we were under the tent with refreshments. Auburn won the 3 of 5 with a straight win of 3, but Oswego has nothing to feel bad about; they played good ball.

The MVP Award went to Auburn's left-fielder, Mike Young, who played well both defensively and offensively, contributing 4 round trippers in the 3 games.

This being the first year that Oswego has entered the tournament, I see a good competitive group in the future. Appreciation extends to all who participated and gave support at the games and to Elmira for being host on such short notice. Let's start planning now for next year.

The California State Convention was held this year in San Diego August 14-16. John Barry Division 1 was host to both the men's and ladies' Convention. The convention was pleased to have as special guest National President Sheila Clifford, who spent thirty-seven hours in a Chicago Airport on her way to California. She was accompanied by Sue Sweeney, national jewelry chairman. Although the ladies had a harrowing journey, the hospitality of the Californians quickly offset the discomfort.

A wonderful Celli Ice-Breaker was enjoyed at the home of John and Marilyn Schorr on Friday night; also a two-hour dinner-cruise around San Diego on Saturday and the Banquet and Installation on Sunday to the strains of Sean McVickers and entertainment by local young Hibernian champion Irish stepdancers.

National President Clifford installed the following 1987-89 state officers:

Maureen Murphy Edwards, president; Peggy McDonald, vice president; Peggy Cahill, secretary; Marilyn Schorr, treasurer; Peggy Kenny, historian; Catherine Healey, chairman of missions; and Marie Doherty, Catholic Action.

As Assistant Editor of the National Hibernian Digest, I have had the pleasure and honor of attending the Eleventh Annual Communicators Mass for professional personnel of television, radio, public relations, journalism, and advertising. This was celebrated on October 14 with the blessing and endorsement of His Eminence, Bernard Cardinal Law, D.D., Archbishop of Boston.

The scene was the capacity-filled upper Chapel of St. Anthony's Shrine, Arch Street, Boston. The principal celebrant and homilist was the Rev. Peter V. Conley, Communications Co-ordinator for the Archdiocese of Boston.

Paul La Camera, one of the country's leading television executives, was guest speaker. The renowned Regis College Glee Club served as ministers of music; Elaine Muise, one of New England's premiere organists, presented a one-half hour pre-Mass organ recital of sacred music.

The impressive ceremony was sponsored by St. Anthony's Fraternity, secular Franciscan order.

ESSAY CONTEST

Kathie Linton, national historian, has announced the kickoff of the 1987-1988 National Irish Essay Contest. Topics and requirements will be found elsewhere on this page.

Historians on all levels should already have placed the essay circulars in their respective schools, libraries, parishes and in the hands of their members. The contest opened on October 1, 1987 and will close on February 15, 1988. Kathie reminds us that children are the key to our future and hopefully, through this contest, they will gain a greater knowledge of our Irish heritage and an interest in our Order.

Please Note: For your information Kathie Linton's new address is: 1262 Pearwood Way, Uniontown, Ohio 44685.

I take this opportunity to express the LAOH's appreciation to those who so diligently judged the 1986-87 contest. Judging is a difficult and time consuming task. To Brother Michael Flannigan, Dean of Freshmen at Notre Dame; Brother Lewis Twohig and Molly McCabe, also of Notre Dame, we extend our heartfelt thanks.

The Buckeye State convention of July 9-11 in Akron generated much enthusiasm. Warm congratulations went to the new officers — President Marie Cooke; Vice President Kathie Linton; Secretary Pat Egan; Treasurer Shirley Keaton; Historian Evelyn Kuntz; Missions, Colleen Wooten and Catholic Action, Pat Oberrath. A long-to-be remembered highlight of the gathering was the first Exemplification of the Degrees given by the newly formed Ohio Degree Team. Forty-six sisters are especially grateful to Eileen Reynolds Wallenhorst, Marian O'Donnell Reynolds, Joan Cavanaugh, Sheila Crawford, Pat Oberrath, Marilyn Madigan and Pat Butke for a beautiful degree ceremony.

There was much anticipatory talk regarding the upcoming National Convention in Cleveland July 24-29, 1988, as well as the trips by officers to the National Board Meeting, and the testimonial dinners for National Presidents Nick Murphy and Sheila Clifford in September and October respectively.

Also discussed was the Bill introduced into the Ohio House of Representatives by Rep. Robert Hagen, titled "The Northern Ireland Fair Employment Act" (H.B. 417), promoting the MacBride Principles for American businesses in Ireland.

LAOH Franklin County Division, announced that John McFall, Artistic Director of Ballet Metropolitan, will serve as honorary chairman of "Dance '87". Sheila M. Clifford
National President

As this is the time for the start of the fall meetings, I am preparing to attend my last State Convention. Between the months of May and September, I have had the privilege to attend conventions in Florida, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, California and soon, Texas.

It has been a pleasure to attend these conventions and meet with the members of the Ladies AOH and the AOH. Many suggestions and questions were raised and during the Interim Board Meeting at the end of September, the National Board will discuss some of these items. During the summer months, all members of the Board have been busy. Some of the programs they were working on are listed below.

The National Vice President just completed a very successful fund raiser for the "Hibernian Forest". The forest was dedicated the first week of August in Kerry. At this time I would like to thank all the Divisions, County Boards, State Boards and members who contributed to this worthy cause. Without you, it could not have been a success.

The National Historian has mailed the information for the 1987-1988 National Essay Contest. This year the topic for grade schools will be "The Blarney Stone" and the topic for high schools will be "Bloody Sunday."

The National Chairman of Missions has been busy depositing donations to the Mission Fund but many states have not been heard from. Remember that our goal for 1988 is $43,000. If we are to have another successful campaign, we must all work towards it. Each Division should mail their donations to the county chairman, then to the state chairman, who will gladly forward it to Dorothy.

Many states and counties have elected new officers. Each officer should have a Ritual and Constitution. If you need to purchase either, please mail a check to Dolores E. Voelker and she will gladly fill your order. But remember when you order supplies, make checks payable to "The National Board LAOH." This would make the National Treasurer very happy. She would not have to explain to the bank why the check is made out different than the account name.

As you can see it has been a busy several months for the National Board. Now it is the Divisions that will start their fall programs. During the next month or so the Divisions will elect new officers. You must consider that the officers you elect will prevail for the next year. They will lead you into the future. We must continue to grow.

In the near future, you will receive communication on a Membership Drive. During the past couple of years we have lost several hundred members. If every member brings in a friend, we can reverse this trend. Remember that prospective members must be practicing Roman Catholics and of Irish birth or descent. Actually we can double our membership.

The members of the National Board would like to wish each and every member, a very Happy Thanksgiving.

Division Eight of Springfield, in compliance with the wishes of His Holiness Pope John II, offered a Living Rosary to officially open the Marian Year. Sisters of St. Joseph, members of the Division, provided the meditation for each Mystery.

A capacity crowd attended the Annual Supper and Dance on October 3rd. After a delicious chicken meal, Leo Doherty and his Shamrocks of Kerry provided toe tingling Irish music.

Division Eight is especially proud of member Sr. Patricia James Sweeney, SSJ, chairman of Catholic Action and principal of Cathedral High School. She was one of the chosen few to share the platform with Pope John Paul on his recent visit to the United States. Sr. Patricia will share her experiences at the next meeting.

The Anniversary of Our Lady of Knock was observed by Division 8, Clinton, with a special Liturgy in the Chapel of St. John's Church. The August 21st Mass was offered by Rev. Father Kivel, who also gave the homily.

Following Mass, candlelight prayer service was held before the outdoor Shrine of Our Lady of Knock. At the same time that the celebration was taking place in Clinton, State Chaplain Rev. James Champion and former State Chaplain Rev. Dan Bowen were offering their prayers at the Shrine of Our Lady in Ireland.

A testimonial honoring Mary Dolan, newly elected state president was held at the Old Timers Restaurant in Clinton. The large gathering enjoyed the meal and the music of "Jug of Punch", a popular Irish group. Dot Flury, state historian, and a member of Division 36, Worcester, which is also Mary's home Division, was chairman.

Among those in attendance were Mary's father, Mr. J. Dolan; Sheila Clifford, national president; Mrs. Clifford, Sheila's mother; Mary Bradley, national vice president; Sue Sweeney, national chairman of jewelry; Bill McNery, past national president and Bill Sullivan, state president AOH.

Mary L. Sullivan, 93, a Brockton resident and a state life member of St. Rita's Division, LAOH, went to her eternal reward after a lengthy illness. Mary had been an active member of St. Rita's, having served in all the offices on the division and county levels.

Worcester County Board, LAOH, welcomed 30 new sisters to its ranks on September 10, as Sr. Catherine Duvarney, county secretary, instituted the new Division. She was assisted in the rites of initiation by Sr. Kathleen Chiavaras, county treasurer; Sr. Mary Dolan, state president; and Sr. Ann Devaney, past state president. Immediately following the institution of Division 17 Sr. Duvarney installed the new officers, who are:

President Eileen Greene; Vice President Rita Glennon; Secretary Janet Ballou; Financial Sec. Kathryn McLaughlin; Treasurer Margaret Lee; Historian Margaret Maher; Missions, Mary Devlin; Catholic Action, Lu Ann Sullivan; Mistress at Arms Lucille Strickland; and Sentinel Mary Sitnik.

Also attending were Jackie Lamprey, state vice president; Mary Ryan, state treasurer; Ann Partridge, Worcester County historian; Alice Henry, Worcester County missions; Joan O'Brien, Middlesex County president; Kathleen McShane, Middlesex County historian; Catherine Shine, president, No. Andover; and Jackie Lee, treasurer of Worcester.

Signaling the end of summer, the second Annual Mass in honor of Our Lady of Knock was celebrated on August 23, at the Annual AOH Walsh Division picnic, with Rev. Thomas Flynn, AOH Chaplain, as celebrant. Kate MacIntosh, state chairman of Catholic Action and Rosemary Hoffman, state president made arrangements for the Mass which attracted a record crowd.

The Rose Kennedy Division participated in the seventh annual Pontiac Irish Festival on August 7-9 by having a booth abundant with Irish cheese, Irish soda bread and various baked goods. Generous helpers were State AOH President Jim Flynn, Super Salesman, and Woody Trap. In spite of the rain, hail and tornado warnings, the festival was a great success.

The Ladies are looking forward to the benefit for Oliver Kearney, to be held in October at AOH Hall. Oliver Kearney was General Secretary of the License Vintner's Federation of Northern Ireland, who was fired for testifying before the United States Legislature on the MacBride Principles.

PARTICIPATING with a bountiful booth at the Pontiac Irish Festival in Michigan are, left to right, Sue Lauster; LAOH Rose Kennedy Division president; Kathy Gibbons and Rose Trapp, who were co-chairmen.

The chance birthday present of a book on Irish folklore last fall led an eighth grader at St. Joseph's School, Norwalk, to the National title in the recent Annual Irish History Essay Contest, sponsored by the LAOH National Board.

Scott Heywood used the book and other resources in local libraries in writing the 1500-word piece that was judged best among the hundreds submitted by elementary school students around the nation.

As often happens in contests, Scott wasn't as successful locally as he was on higher levels. He came in third in the Norwalk area, then went on to win the county title and second place in the State. He received $250.00 for winning the National title and lesser amounts for the other placements. The National Award was presented to him by Lee Cullen, president of the Norwalk Division.

The members of Division 66, Waterbury will staff a booth at the Charity Fair at the Naugatuck Valley Mall, the profits going to the Notre Dame Hibernian Fund.

During November a Living Rosary will be held, while December harbors the Annual Banquet. Choice of giving will be baby clothes to a local hospital, and mittens and hats for older kids.

As part of the fall division meeting the 80th birthday of the National President's mother was celebrated and she was made a life member of the division.

St. Matthews Cathedral was filled to capacity with many standing outside. Among the Hibernians attending the ceremony were LAOH officers Katherine Back, Zelda Reilly, Dorothy Edwards, and Margaret Heasley.

Dorothy Edwards, Catholic Action chairman, attended the high noon Mass at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, where the Catholic Golden Age Group were celebrating. They were acknowledging the "Lighting of a Million Candles" all over the United States.

Thomas Murphy, son of Mrs. Anne Reilly of Division 9 LAOH, won awards for Juniors under the age of 14, with his Irish wolfhound, Wild. Isle Jupiter, at the Montgomery Co., MD, state fair.

Sean MacBride, the founder of Amnesty International and a recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize. While they apply specifically to Northern Ireland, they embody accepted American standards and traditions of equal rights, equality of opportunity and blind justice.

Their goals include meaningful minority-group representation in managerial and supervisory positions, assuring the security of minority group members on the job, publicly advertising job openings and developing training programs for minority group members.

These are hardly radical proposals. Moderate, in fact, they emphatically do not contemplate hiring quotas. No company, domestic or foreign, could operate in this country without adhering to them.

The British Government claims disingenuously that the MacBride Principles violate British law by requiring discrimination against Protestants. That, it says, would run counter to longstanding British anti-discrimination policies.

The Orwellian irony of this contention is manifest. The "illegality" argument is no more than a smokescreen for opposing the MacBride Principles. Noted English legal experts, including Britain's former solicitor general, Peter Archer, Q.C., and former Fair Employment Agency consultant Dr. Christopher McCrudden of Oxford University, have effectively refuted the government's assertions. In addition, in May 1986, in "NYCERS vs American Brands," the United States District Court found the British charges of "discrimination" under the MacBride Principles to be entirely without foundation: "Although the MacBride Principles . . . may be viewed as calling for affirmative action," the court wrote, "they do not call for discrimination against anyone."

Opponents claim that the MacBride Principles will insert politics into the workplace. That is also patent nonsense. As anyone familiar with Northern Ireland knows, Orange politics permeates industry there. A factory floor bedecked with orange flags and emblems, "Ulster Says No" banners and paramilitary recruitment posters is assuredly political already; realistically, equality of opportunity will make no headway in such an environment.

Indeed, we are urging that politics be taken out of the workplace. The MacBride Principles do just that by attacking the underpinnings of sectarianism, as well as its outward manifestations.

Finally, the British argue that the imposition of the MacBride Principles on companies will discourage American investment in Northern Ireland. That puts the cart before the horse; for Northern Ireland is not going to attract substantial new investment unless the political situation improves. And it is not going to improve significantly until matters as central as equality of opportunity are dealt with squarely, and improvements are seen by all elements of the minority communities.

American businesses, whether they like it or not, are virtual extensions of the United States itself when they operate abroad. As such, it is proper and appropriate that they adhere to our most basic moral standards and for us to insist that they do.

In Northern Ireland, where 24

American companies or their Irish subsidiaries have branches or facilities, and account for 12 percent of all industrial employment, U.S. interests have become, unwittingly or otherwise, instruments of the endemic economic discrimination that savages Catholics.

These firms should not be allowed to hide behind the ineffective efforts of the British Government to attack that discrimination. They should be compelled to adopt the MacBride Principles and implement them. No fair or decent corporate management should want to do any less.

For the situation is bound to worsen if the Catholic minority does not soon begin to feel it has obtained economic enfranchisement.

Irish Lads

South Bend stadium, waking up the echoes," quipped Munley.

Meanwhile, the versatile athlete plays Gaelic football on a team that just won the all-Ireland championship for 14 years and under.

A resident of Newry, outside Belfast, Northern Ireland, Gerard is the youngest of six children. His parents are also part of the unemployment rate, which Gerard says is 60% for both Northern Ireland and the Republic.

Political and religious strife, terrorism and poverty haven't dulled the boys' spirits or their concern for others even less fortunate.

In Newry, traditional Irish hospitality breaks out annually in the form of a seven mile road race to benefit the starving in Ethiopia. The town where even hot dogs are scarce sends what it can, perhaps mindful of Ireland's own national famine in 1846, when the potato blight caused the economy to go belly up.

"There's always someone worse off," said Gerard. "We're lucky for what we have."

Colm's town holds an annual Ethiopia Day, when all the merchants lower their prices and donate every penny from the gigantic sale to keep Ethiopians alive.

"Dunn's Supermarket, the biggest in Dunkalk (pop. 20,000) refuses to sell products from South Africa in protest of apartheid," Colm was proud to report.

Predictably, the person highest on the boys' list of heroes is Irish native Bob Geldof, the rock promoter who has raised millions for relief through Live Aid, Band Aid, Sport Aid, etc.

To help raise funds for a food delivery truck which could traverse deserts, Colm sold two cherished souvenirs for $400 . . . a ball and hurley used in a championship hurling contest.

The boys have been impressed with American generosity, as well as our freedom and our judicial system. And they have noted with pleasure the success which Irish immigrants have achieved in the New World.

On a recent tour of the Media Court House, they met a number of public officials who shared their Irish heritage, among them newly named Federal Judge Robert Kelly, and Common Pleas Judge William Toal, whose parents came from Colm's town in County Louth.

Everyone who meets the boys wants to take them somewhere.

On a Chesapeake weekend with Assistant District Attorney Howard Gallagher, the boys went crabbing and visited the Baltimore Aquarium and the Inner Harbor. On a weekend foray in Washington with Bill and Liz Kelly, they enjoyed the Marine Corps' famous Sunset Parade and formal lowering of the colors.

Help With Immigration Compliance

The United Irish American Immigration Committee continues its many years of working for fair and equitable immigration laws. It is a struggle that dates back to 1965. We are pleased to see that the "Irish Immigration Crisis" has many new committees operating, who in turn, hopefully, will help those who are in dire need of prompt assistance.

The new legislation being offered on a partisan basis will not help those who emigrated to the U.S.A. after January 1st, 1982, in spite of all the headlines in the Irish media, etc. The 1986 Immigration Act unfortunately will give no real help to anyone emigrating to the U.S.A. after December 31, 1981. However, the new bill (1986) has a number of items which must be thoroughly monitored, so that reports of failures in this bill can be used to correct discrimination. The U.I.A.I.C. is carefully studying the rather complex law, in hopes of getting help for the many undocumented persons living here at present.

The NP5 program has given some small relief to those who qualified. We have been made aware of individuals who were turned down for proper admission to the U.S.A., but they have requested and received the right to appeal this decision.

An area which the Irish who qualify are avoiding is the legalization program (a part of the 1986 Act). We strongly urge everyone who has been in this country prior to January 1, 1982, to check with any of the offices listed. You are positively assured of complete confidentiality and the people in these offices can and will give you 100% cooperation. Those who have filed under this new legalization section have received help and a majority have already received their proper I.D., as a legal person in the U.S.A. President's Message

Teachtaineacht An Uachtaráin
By Nicholas Murphy, National President

SCÉALA NA NODLAIG

Gloria in Excelsis Deo, et in terra pax hominibus bonae voluntatis. Glory to God in the Highest, and on Earth peace among men of good will.

Such is the traditional Christmas greeting ever since the angels proclaimed the good news on that very first Christmas. We must renew our efforts to build good will among all men, and most particularly among our own people still suffering injustice as a consequence of the current troubles in the "North" of Ireland. Only through a conscientious pursuit of Justice can we properly hope to build the foundation for the realization of our prayers for true and lasting Peace in Ireland.

HOME FOR CHRISTMAS

Wherever we may wander, there is no place like home for the holidays. Although most of us cannot make it home to Ireland every Christmas, most of us have made homes for our immediate families in the New World. Yet this Christmas, more than at any time in living memory, there are well over a hundred thousand young Irish people in the United States who are denied a round-trip home for Christmas as well as being denied the opportunity to build proper new homes in what for previous generations of Irish immigrants had been the "land of opportunity."

The United States is still a land of opportunity, but, for all the hoopla over the centennial of the Statue of Liberty, the fact remains that the rules changed some twenty years ago. The "golden door" was slammed in the face of the Irish, and an old sign was taken out of storage and hung on the outside — "No Irish Need Apply." That is, need not apply for equal opportunity or equal justice under law.

If you are Irish and just looking for the opportunity to work in the expanding American economy, well maybe you can work off the books, subject to exploitation and harassment, with no benefits and always looking over your shoulder — a life in the shadows, a life in which the mental habits developed for survival are not those which necessarily contribute to a wholesome stability in civil society. If you are a fugitive from English injustice, seeking asylum in North America, even if every court in the land proclaims that your "offence" was political and not criminal, you could wind up like Joe Doherty — imprisoned for years pending yet another round of deportation hearings, as an Anglophile government, unheeding of its own revolutionary origins, seeks to return you to the "justice" of a foreign imperial occupation force.

All Hibernians must do their utmost, both individually and collectively through Hibernian divisions, to bring the spirit of Christmas to all of our exiles in America. To the many who are out there out of economic necessity, open up your homes and share your Christmas now, and in the new year work all the harder for the immigration reforms that Justice demands for the Irish. We must reopen the "golden door" as well as regularize the status of over one hundred thousand Irish immigrants already working "out of status" in the American economy.

For those Irish exiles who are among us because they dared to oppose the subjection of our part of Ireland, to foreign domination, we must be especially watchful that no Irish political refugees are extradited to any place under the control of the British empire. Just as we must remember those few of our friends in the United States Senate who stuck with us in opposition to the New Supplemental Extradition Treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom, as well as those at home who opposed an even more infamous extradition proposal with England, so too must we aid in the resettlement of those who cannot return home.

CHRISTMAS TIME AND IRISH CUSTOM

One of the key elements found in pre-Christian Ireland, and indeed a major factor in Saint Patrick's ability to convert a Celtic people was their appreciation of Charity. Support of the less fortunate, a tradition of hospitality and brotherly love were traits of the race recognized by Patrick and built upon in bringing the message of Christ to the Gael.

As we approach the feast of the Nativity, all Christians become more aware of the precepts of their Creed. The will to express our love becomes manifest in traditional giving. Certainly then as Christians and as Hibernians our concern for the needy must stimulate us to action at this holy season.

Our Brother Hibernian Dave Burke, National Chairman for Charities and Missions, reminds us of the ongoing work by many Christian charities supported by our Order. Their needs must be addressed too at this time.

If every member would mail but one dollar to the AOH Charities and Missions Fund, c/o David R. Burke, 6 Mount Vernon Terrace, Lawrence, Massachusetts 01843, the Order as an entity could participate in the works of Christ on Earth.

Nodlaigh shona díbh agus go n-eirighidh an t-Adh libh rith na bliadhana nua.

Irish Man of Year Choice Applauded

AOH National President Nick Murphy issued this statement on the selection of John Cardinal O'Connor as Irish Man of the Year.

"We of the Ancient Order of Hibernians hail the selection of our fellow Hibernian, John Cardinal O'Connor, as Irish America magazine's 'Irish Man of the Year.'"

"The Cardinal Archbishop of New York is an outstanding Irish American, who knows and cherishes his ancestral heritage and culture. He is a man of charity and compassion, of principle and integrity, a Man of God who has endured mean, unfair and unjust criticism because he makes the tough decisions and takes the courageous stands. He speaks out forcefully in the liberty-loving, freedom-seeking, tyrannical tradition of his forebears."

"We liken Cardinal O'Connor to his early predecessor, the first Archbishop of New York, Tyrone-born John Hughes, who, in his time, courageously espoused the cause of the oppressed Irish in Ireland and in America. Cardinal O'Connor has been a stand-up-and-be-counted, steadfast friend of our Order and of Irish Americans. We take great pride in this Prince of the Church and his many accomplishments. We esteem, admire and respect him because of the things he stands for and the things he stands against."

Beirne Re-Elected Parade Chairman

NEW YORK, NY: Francis P. Beirne was re-elected Chairman of the St. Patrick's Day Parade Committee, which will conduct the 227th annual New York City St. Patrick's Day Parade on Thursday, March 17, 1988.

Beirne, who is a native of County Leitrim and resides in Yonkers, succeeded Judge James J. Comerford as Parade Committee Chairman in 1985.

Five Parade Committee officers were re-elected: Vice Chairman Richard J. Cunningham; Recording Secretary Margaret O'Rourke; Treasurer John Dunleavy; Financial Secretary Thomas Rogers; and Sergeant-at-Arms Patrick Reynolds. Veteran Parade Corresponding Secretary Martin Dunne was elected to that post.

The election, which was held at the Sheraton Centre Hotel, was chaired by Timothy Hartnett, assisted by Richard Cunningham, John Dunleavy and Margaret O'Rourke. Judge John Collins nominated Francis Beirne, with United Irish Counties President Frank Feighery nominating John Carroll. An estimated 400 men and women were present at the nominations and election of Parade officers.

1988 ST. PATRICK'S DAY COMMITTEE. The eight newly-elected officers of the Big Apple's 1988 Big Hibernian St. Patrick's Day Parade are, left to right, seated, Corresponding Secretary Martin Dunne; Treasurer John Dunleavy; Vice Chairman Richard Cunningham; Chairman Frank Beirne; and Recording Secretary Margaret O'Rourke. Standing, Parade Committee Directors Peter Cassels, Martin Kearns and Donald Sullivan. Also elected but not in photo: Financial Secretary Thomas Rogers and Sergeant-at-Arms Patrick Reynolds.

Historian Offers 3rd History Book

Mike McCormack, New York State Historian for the AOH and 3-time winner of the National Essay competition, has published Volume III of his Echoes of Irish History series. The original volume, bound in green, was published on St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1983; the second volume, bound in white, was published on the Fourth of July, 1985; and this latest volume, bound in orange, carries the publishing date of Commodore John Barry Day, September 13, 1987. The volumes represent the three colors of the Irish flag and the three original holidays of the Order, to whom volume III is dedicated.

Like the previous volumes, this offering contains stories adapted from the history segment of Mike's radio program "Echoes of Ireland," which airs each Sunday over WLIM (1580 A.M.) in Patchogue, Long Island. The stories are short vignettes from Irish history which have proven popular with the Irish American audience and are syndicated on several other Irish programs.

In response to requests from that audience for copies of his broadcast scripts, Mike published Echoes of Irish History in 1983, and within nine months was completely sold out. "It's a tremendous feeling to have your beliefs confirmed," Mike said. "Many people consider Irish history a difficult and uninteresting subject, but I believe that if it is presented in a popular style, folks might read it and learn just how enjoyable and rewarding it is. I selected a few interesting stories from our history and presented them just that way to test my theory; the results were very positive. My hope is that Echoes of Ireland, which airs each Sunday over WLIM, will create a genuine interest in the subject, and inspire people to pursue the topic in greater detail by seeking the source of the echo."

Turlough Folain, author of Blood on the Harp called Mike "a veritable treasure trove of the Irish arcane."

Thomas Gallagher, author of Paddy's Lament has endorsed the series, noting that Mike "discusses each subject with precision and eloquence." Morgan Llywelyn, author of Lion of Ireland, Bard and Grannia, compared Mike to a Master Storyteller of long ago, calling his work "as entertaining as it is scholarly."

Mike has been the historian for AOH Div 9, Port Jefferson and/or the AOH Suffolk County Board for the past 17 years. In 1979, 80, and 81 he received third, second, and first place Historians Medals awarded by the National Board of the Order — an unprecedented accomplishment. In 1983 Mike was elevated to the office of Historian of the New York State Board — a position he still holds. Mike McCormack also writes the popular "Shamrocks in Suffolk" column for the Irish Echo newspaper and has contributed articles and reviews to several other Irish newspapers and magazines.

Echoes of Irish History, Vol. III is enjoyable reading for Irish and non-Irish alike. Local AOH Historians are invited to use any of Mike's stories at their meetings, and he requests that anyone with an interesting writeup to share, please send a copy to: Mike McCormack, 37 Harrison Ave., Centereach, N.Y. 11720. Echoes of Irish History, volumes II and III may be ordered directly from Mike at the same address at a cost of $3.50 per copy plus 50¢ for postage.

President Murphy Meets With Ambassador Heckler

KILLORGLIN, KERRY: After the recent "trees" dedication ceremony in Co. Kerry Ireland, U.S. Ambassador to Ireland Margaret Heckler invited AOH President Murphy to Phoenix Park, Dublin, for a meeting. Murphy stated "We had a most enjoyable and productive talk. We talked for almost three hours about this and that, but mostly about the situation of Irish emigrants in the U.S. Ambassador Heckler was well informed on the situation. And she expressed an interest in doing all in her power to help alleviate the plight of undocumented Irish emigrants in the U.S. In the course of our conversation, I mentioned a family-separation matter that had been brought to my attention. Mrs. Heckler immediately went to work and succeeded in obtaining visas so that these Irish citizens could be quickly united with family members in the U.S., whom they had not seen in many a moon."

Concluded Murphy: "I look forward to working closely in the future with Ambassador Heckler on emigration and other matters of deep concern to Hibernians and Irish Americans. We note with pride that Ambassador Margaret O'Shaughnessy Heckler was one of the plighted members of the Ad Hoc Committee for Irish Affairs, when she was a member of Congress from Massachusetts."

Saint Brendan

By B.W. "MIKE" DONOVAN

As you all know, St. Patrick was a man who was born in Ireland and, having been captured in a pirate raid, was sold into slavery. But, being the stubborn sort, he escaped his captors and returned to spread Christianity throughout Ireland.

His life has inspired many Irishmen, both in Ireland and elsewhere in the world, to follow his path, helping the poor and doing other good works.

Another who followed in his wake was Saint Brendan, the Patron Saint of County Kerry. Recently the Diocese of Kerry, from where Brendan set sail on his voyage of discovery, celebrated the fifteenth centenary of the birth of its illustrious Patron. According to the commonly accepted opinion, Saint Brendan was born in 494 A.D., though some scholars favor the date 458, and he lived to the incredible (for that time) age of 93. The Diocese celebrated the centenary over the year beginning May 16, 1984, the Feast of Saint Brendan, and ending on May 16, 1985.

In the Vatican Library is a book called "Navigatio Sancti Brendani Abbatis" (The Voyage of Saint Brendan), written sometime before the 10th century by an anonymous Irishman.

"Navigatio," which was a medieval best seller translated into almost every European language, is a combination of myth and technical accuracy. The fact that the book was written in Latin tells us two things: that the author was an educated man and that he was almost certainly a monk. St. Brendan was a student of Bishop Erc, a Druid who had been converted to Christianity by Saint Patrick, and became an expert in mathematics and astronomy (necessary to navigation on the seas).

Thomas Moore's Melodies On Video Cassette

SEATTLE, WASH.: For the first time, the life and music of the multi-talented Thomas Moore, Ireland's beloved bard, have been filmed and recorded on an 80-minute video-cassette for the general public, according to Ann Williams Bush of Ireland Resource.

A four-year effort by Anner Communications, Ltd., of Co. Dublin, "Harp of My Country" was recently awarded the International Television Association Award for Excellence.

Tim Pat Coogan, former editor of the Irish Press, wrote the script and narrates the film. Though the central focus is on the famous "Moore's Melodies" collection, Coogan also tells of Moore's very early academic genius, great capacity for friendship, sense of integrity, and the enormous depth of Moore's two great loves: his wife, Bessy, and his country, Ireland.

As Coogan chronicles Moore's life, 14 melodies are heard. Among them are: Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms, The Meeting of the Waters, The Minstrel Boy, The Last Rose of Summer, and Dear Harp of My Country.

Irish Pipe Band Celebrates 25 Years

The Saffron Kilts recently celebrated their 25th Anniversary as a Pipe Band with a Pipers Ball. Being the very first Hibernian Pipe Band in the United States and still the only "all Hibernian" Pipe Band are accomplishments the group is very proud of.

The evening was well attended by over 600 people who were treated to not only a performance of the Saffron Kilts, but witnessed a performance later in the evening of the alumni. Led by honorary Pipe Major for the evening John Keating and honorary Drum Major Jim Sullivan, players who have been instrumental in the band's growth for the last 25 years came out of retirement to leave the audience without a dry eye. Also drummer par excellence Charlie McLoughlin received an award for his 25 years of dedication. Charlie is the only remaining original member of the Saffron Kilts, a band that has seen over 200 members pass through their ranks.

Mount Kisco, and by County Executive O'Rourke with a proclamation from Westchester County.

Also recognized for his many years of service to Division 16 was James Keefe, to whom Brother Michael Hurton, president of Division 16, presented a beautiful plaque. For his unselfish dedication to the cause of Irish freedom, Keefe also received proclamations from Mount Kisco and Westchester County. County Legislator Ursula La Monte had the honor of making these two presentations.

Congratulations were also forthcoming from Judge A. Robert Giordano, North Salem Town Justice and from the master of ceremonies, Brother John Flynn. Music was provided by the popular Erin Exiles Showband.

Albany AOH Adopts Irish Youth Center

KEVIN LEYDEN, a member of Division 5, Albany, New York, Chairman of the Irish Youth Foundation Charity Project.

At the October meeting of the Rev. Henry Tansey Div. 5, Albany, New York, AOH, the members assembled endorsed a resolution to adopt the Limerick Youth Center in Limerick City, Co. Limberick, Ireland. They will provide financial and other support to this youth program.

This decision came as a result of the National Board of the AOH's plea that divisions all around the country adopt a specific program and support it in whatever way possible. National President Nicholas Murphy has led this campaign and wholeheartedly embraces this venture. Murphy has appointed Kevin Leyden of Albany as chairman of the Irish Youth Foundation.

The Irish Youth Foundation, which the Limerick Center is part of, was established to aid various programs throughout Ireland in serving young people. The main thrust of the participating organizations is to offer young people acceptance, challenge, friendship, support and especially opportunities to better themselves. The programs offered vary from Leadership Courses for volunteers to Recreation and Parent Education Programs, from Literacy Learning through Computers to Training for Employment. The goal of this organization continues to be working on interpreting the needs of young people and responding to them.

Presently, the AOH is leading a campaign to get all 20 participating centers in Ireland adopted and in doing so helping the youth of Ireland. Anyone interested in this project is encouraged to contact Kevin Leyden at (518) 436-8572 or Nicholas Murphy at (914) 634-2304.

'Stories from Ireland' Video Succeeds 'Prairie Companion'

Rego Irish Records, Inc. are out to capture hearts and attention of American audiences with the release of their unique, new theatrical video entitled, "Stories from Ireland" which features premier Irish actor and "Master Storyteller," Eamon Kelly.

This light-hearted and entertaining production, based on the award-winning plays by Kelly, transports its viewers back to a time devoid of radio, TV or books — a time when the many events and happenstances of the period were passed along from town to town by the walking Genealogist, known in Ireland as the Seanchie or storyteller.

Filled with lively traditional music, dance, and many humorous "tall tales" (both old and new) — "Stories from Ireland" debuts in this country when public interest in theatrical storytelling is enjoying a strong revival, thanks in part to such pioneers as Garrison Keeler and his "Prairie Home Companion."

Eamon Kelly, one of Ireland's most respected international performers, is known throughout Europe as the "Master Storyteller" — a title he duly earned and has carried for over 25 years. Like "Prairie Companion," Kelly's historic career began with a popular radio show broadcast throughout Ireland in the 1950s. He later joined the Abbey Theatre, where the character of the Seanchie was brought to life and began its award-winning journey on stages in Ireland, England and the United States.

Co-produced by Paddy Noonan and Brian Molloy, "Stories from Ireland" is scheduled for release in Europe and the United States in November, 1987 exclusively by Rego Records Inc. The format is VHS, the time is 52 minutes. Retail price is $29.95.

STATE NEWS: Massachusetts

WATERTOWN, MA: At a sold-out affair on Friday evening, October 9, William T. Gildea was honored as the 1987 Hibernian of the Year at George Munhall Hall in Watertown. Bill, as he is generally known, son of the late John and Mary Gildea, grew up in Watertown where he attended St. Patrick's grammar and high schools. From 1948 to 1953 he served in the Air Force. Bill is married to the former Mary Gray of Dorchester. They make their home in Watertown, and are parents of four daughters, Susan Calden and Patricia Kennedy of Watertown, Maribeth Gildea of Waltham, Laura Jean Gildea, who is a student at Fitchburg State College; and one son, William, Jr. of Maynard.

Bill joined Division 14 in 1956, and received his major degree at Marlboro AOH in 1958. He has served as president of Division 14 and as president of the Building Association. Presently he is club steward, a position he has held for over ten years.

Bill's many accomplishments at Division 14 include reviving beano in 1973, during Jack McDermott's term as president; serving as director of the golf tournament for many years; and attracting the largest number of members in "the 150 Club", a charitable fund that raises money for scholarships and for the children's Christmas outing affairs.

Seated at the head table with Bill and his wife were Fathers Rooney and O'Driscoll of the SMA Fathers of Dedham, MA; Massachusetts State Representative John Bartley; National AOH Director Michael Carroll and Mrs. Carroll; Division 14 President Jack Bowles and Mrs. Bowles; and master of ceremonies and former National AOH President Jack Connolly.

Councilor-at-Large Marilyn Devaney read an official presentation from State Senate President William Bulger honoring Bill for his thirty-one years at Division 14. Councilor Devaney also read and presented a citation from State Auditor Joe DeNucci honoring Bill. Although unable to attend in person, Massachusetts Congressman Joe Kennedy sent a certificate honoring Bill for his Hibernian of the Year award. Watertown Councilor John DiLiberto presented a citation of greeting from the town of Watertown.

Representative John Bartley read and presented a citation from the Massachusetts House of Representatives honoring Bill for his service in the AOH since 1956. Division 14 President Jack Bowles presented Bill with a beautiful clock plaque from the Division.

Chaplain Father Rooney closed the ceremony with a prayer. The evening concluded with dancing to music provided by Mike Connolly and his Celtic Aires.

On Monday, September 14, 1987, the Twenty-fourth Annual Leo "Bubba" Sheehan Golf Tournament was held at Glen Ellen Country Club at Millis, MA. Tee time began at 8:30 A.M., and by 9:44 A.M. the last foursome had teed off. This foursome consisted of Hibernian chaplains Father Rooney and Father Driscoll from the S.M.A. Fathers of Dedham, Mass., Father Pete, also from S.M.A. Fathers, and Al Murphy, one of the better Hibernian golfers.

The late Leo "Bubba" Sheehan, for whom the tournament is named, was an outstanding local athlete who participated in many sports activities. "Bubba" served on the original golf committee which organized the first Division 14, AOH golf tournament.

This year's winner of the member Low-Gross was Brian Igoe with a score of 73. In second place was Al Murphy with an 83. Winner of the member Low-Net was Bob Ford who scored 74. Edmund Griffin was runner up. Guest Low-Gross winner was Peter Cavallo with a 70, followed by George Crupi with a 76. Winner of guest Low-Net was Noel Kelly (71), followed in second place by George Danielson (72). George Crupi won Closest to the Pin, and the longest drive went to Noel Kelly.

Following the tournament the golfers returned to Hibernian Hall in Watertown, for a family-style roast beef dinner prepared by Doyle Caterers of Bowdoin Street, Dorchester. Chaplain Father Rooney said grace.

After dinner all golfers received prizes for their performances on the golf course. Among the prizes were twelve gift certificates in the amount of twenty-five dollars for use at Glen Ellen Country Club.

In conjunction with the golf tournamer a special Sportsman of the Year Award has been established. This year's winner is Dick MacDonald. Dick, who is presently serving as vice president of Division 14, has for many years dedicated his time and energies to helping youths involved in sports at St. Patrick's High School. Both St. Patrick's and Division 14 have benefited enormously from Dick's superb leadership and vision.

Billy Gildea chaired this year's golf committee, ably assisted by Tom Brannelly, Fran Gildea, Ed Hines, and Bob Stone. Plans are already underway to line up the date and place for next year's 25th Annual Leo "Bubba" Sheehan Memorial Golf Tournament.

A "tip of the hat" to Dick MacDonald, our Sportsman of the Year, and a special thanks to Billy Gildea and his fine golf committee.

Notre Dame Fund Scholarship Program Overwhelming Success

NOTRE DAME, INDIANA — Among the achievements of the University of Notre Dame Hibernian Fund, the scholarship program can truly be classified as an overwhelming success. Since its inception in the Academic Year 1981-1982, many sons and daughters of AOH and LAOH members have received financial aid.

In the current academic year, six recipients are benefitting from this national effort of the men and women of the AOH. They are: Maureen and Michael Curran of Indiana, Paul Harren of New York, Terrence Loughran of Connecticut, Colleen Prentice, Aisling and Sineid Rigney of Pennsylvania.

To date, more funds have been raised for this campaign than for any other endeavor in which the organization has engaged.

To become a recipient of scholarship aid from the Notre Dame Hibernian Fund, a student (preferably a Junior in high school) must apply to Notre Dame. He needs to state in his or her letter that there is interest in the Notre Dame Hibernian Fund scholarship. At some future point, a letter verifying the membership of either the student or his/her parent(s) must be submitted to Notre Dame. The University of Notre Dame processes the application in the routine manner and at the conclusion of the process, the Director of Financial Aid notifies the Chairman of the Fund of those applicants who meet all Notre Dame's requirements. To date, every applicant has received financial assistance.

States are urged to heartily support this vital fundraising effort of our Order. At the National Convention next summer, the new President of the University of Notre Dame will be the guest speaker at the banquet. Every effort should be made to raise a significant sum of money for presentation to the President at the Banquet. Those States which have had scholarship recipients should feel so proud of their excellent students at Notre Dame and they should want to be in the forefront with their contributions.

Those proud States which have had or now have students at Notre Dame are as follows: New York — Donald E. Michalco, Patrick Logan, Paul M. Brennan, Emmett Murphy, and Paul Harren; Massachusetts — Timothy E. Reilly, Joseph E. Kelly, Joseph Murphy; Indiana — Maureen Curran and Michael Curran; Pennsylvania—Colleen Prentice, Aisling Rigney and Sineid Rigney; Michigan—Edward G. Lennon and Elizabeth Ann Fitzpatrick; Connecticut —Terrence Loughran; Florida—John J. Hearn; Missouri—Maureen A. McGlynn; and California—Daniel J. O'Hare.

Ohio Division Renamed

MARTINS FERRY — What's in a name? Plenty, if you ask Hibernians in Belmont County. After 10 years of using just Belmont County AOH Division No. 1, the unit's members unanimously approved changing its name to Commodore Jack Barry Division No. 1.

President James P. Hughes felt that the members couldn't have selected a finer name for the division, what with the historical significance of Commodore Barry and his heritage. A native of Wexford, Barry is considered by many historians of U.S. history, and President Reagan as the Father of the American Navy. His courage and dedication to the U.S. is almost without parallel.

So, the Commodore Jack Division is a true reflection of the name: dedicated and proud of its Irish-Catholic heritage, Hughes-related. Formed 10 years ago, the division's original membership has resulted in the formation of three other

Hibernians Tap Former Ambassador for Award

NEW CITY, NEW YORK: National President Nicholas Murphy announced that John Henning, Secretary-Treasurer of the California Labor Council and former Ambassador to New Zealand was nominated by the Hibernians for the prestigious divisions, two in Ohio and one in West Virginia. Although possibly one of the smallest units in Ohio, the division can boast of a past state president, a past state public relations director and a member on the current National AOH Board.

And the division doesn't rest on its laurels. It has been one of the most active units in the state, taking part in local parades (winning a trophy in a county parade) as well as marching in a St. Patrick's Day parade in Akron.

The division is planning its annual Christmas party for members under the sponsorship of the unit's Ladies AOH. This year the dinner is scheduled for a restaurant in Shadyside. Lena Muldowney, president of the LAOH of the division, is directing the annual party with able assistance from other members. The division will also take part in a parade scheduled for St. Clairsville, Ohio.

Hughes appointed a Nominating Committee of Immediate Past President James J. Brennan, Financial Secretary Michael Muldowney and John E. Gallagher, chairman, Standing Committee. The committee is scheduled to submit its report at the November meeting and the installation of officers is set for December. James J. Brennan Americans by Choice Award. Mr. Henning accepted the award at Ethnic American Day ceremonies at Constitution Hall in Washington, D.C. on September 20, 1987.

"Ambassador Hennings' service," stated Murphy, "to California, to this Nation and to freedom with justice in Ireland has added a new and much needed dimension to our sense of brotherhood." Murphy continued, "John's spirited testimony on behalf of the California MacBride Principles bill was yet another example of his reasoned and ringing defense of the dignity of man." "His leadership on the MacBride Fair Employment Principles," Murphy stated, "is reason enough for Her Majesty's Government to bring in fresh troops like Mr. King to try and defeat them."

Mr. Murphy concluded by thanking Joe Roche and his Committee for a selection "which truly honors all Americans of Irish descent."

Our Hibernian Image

Our Hibernian image today is the incubative precedent of our Hibernian image of the future. With the passage of time we continually mold an historic record of our era of membership in the Ancient Order of Hibernians. Like it or not, we are a living history of our public behavior.

Let us try some self-evaluation: what will the Irish-Americans say about us in the year 2007, or the year 2017? Will we get good marks? Will the Hibernians of the future remember us as we remember the members of the AOH of 30 or more years ago? The passing years will be our jury. Will we be remembered fondly? Will we have passed on, responsibly, to our Hibernian youth, the working principles of Friendship, Unity, and Christian Charity? It is our duty to pass on our Irish pride, our priceless Heritage, and our devotion to our Faith to the next generation of Hibernians. History has a habit of forming the future. Our best will be their best. Think of all who marched up New York's Fifth Avenue before us — those who felt that same proud feeling — more than 200 years.

It is the continuity of Irish pride and heritage, year after year, that cultivates the Irish image of goodness, decency, holiness, and moral integrity for the Hibernian harvest of the future. Portraying our good points on a continuing basis is a positive way of enhancing our image. Publicizing our good side is an important way to increase our membership — especially regarding young Irish-Americans who may be looking for identity with their Heritage.

In the olden days of the AOH the Irish-born dominated the membership. The Order was their oasis of friendship in America. The passing years and dwindling immigration has changed the profile of the membership rosters, and also, unfortunately, the demise of many Divisions. Young American-born Irish can be recruited along with the young Irish-born immigrants of today if the image of our Order can be presented to show our fine accomplishments and our many benefits. Let us not bury the AOH with the passing of our older members as the years go by.

Good AOH image making (good PR) involves publicizing the good things we do. All Divisions share in this responsibility. Access to the media is important, but the goodness in our deeds truly builds our image. The quickest way to catch an editor's eye is via our reputation for charity. There are many notable charities waiting for our Hibernian money and our Hibernian hands of labor. The Irish Youth Foundation is an excellent example. Sponsorship by Divisions for continuing charitable support for this Foundation, and for many needy Irish and U.S. charities, is an ideal way to start a Division program, leading to membership growth and public respect. An active, strong, local media contact effort publicizing the good deeds is essential for enhancement of our image, both local and national. The good works of our 330 divisions in 35 states throughout the U.S. is the heartbeat of our Order.

The National Organizer's Corner

Congratulations goes out in this issue to the newest Division of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, Division 1, Poughkeepsie, Dutchess County, New York State, and its newly elected president, Terrence McGowan. The entire National Board sends greetings and best wishes to Terry McGowan, the officers and members of Division 1, Dutchess County, New York. The new division was installed by Ed Carley, New York state president, assisted by State Organizer Jack Burns; National Secretary Tom McNabb; Randy Lynch, N.Y. Public Relations Chairman; and Bud Considine, chairman of Catholic Action.

Thanks goes to the President of Division 1 Kingston, Ulster County, James Noble, who with the help of Tom Hoffay, Bill Gallagher, Paul Geary, Jim Howard, was responsible for organizing this new Division. For a job well done, thanks.

On November 1, 1987, in Waterbury, Connecticut, I met with a committee of the Ladies National Board to map strategy for a new recruitment program which starts on December 1, 1987, and will continue through April 1988. On the Ladies committee were National President Sheila Clifford, Vice President Mary Bradley and Irish Historian Kathy Linton.

We agreed as a first step to mail a joint letter to all LAOH and AOH presidents of record, exhorting the State, County and Division Presidents to co-ordinate their recruitment efforts with that of the National Boards and to tie in with local advertising to promote the Ancient Order of Hibernians. State Boards and County Boards which collect initiation fees for the promotion of membership as per the National Constitution (Article XIV, section 1) should not spend this money for any other purpose. Advertising is the best vehicle to get your story before the public and prospective new members. Church bulletins are a very good means of reaching new members; also advertising in the local diocesan newspaper.

Recently we ran an ad in the Irish America magazine, with good results. It's amazing to learn how many people of Irish decent have never heard of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, or know nothing of what they do. We will be running ads in the Irish American newspapers for the Christmas season and again during the month of March. You may want to tie in your local ads at the same time for maximum effect.

The Irish American community can claim in excess of 40 million of Irish descent living in the United States. Why can't we have a larger membership in the AOH? It's up to you. If you are proud of your Irish heritage and your Catholic faith you should ask your friends and acquaintances to join the AOH and together we can realize the dreams of the Irish race, and perpetuate the history and traditions of the Irish people. We can promote Irish culture and work to enact legislation to help the people of Ireland. We can also continue to help the Church in its struggle against immorality. Just take a look at our national program; we have something there for every member of the family.

Concerning the survey published in the issue of the Digest, the response was very good and I will publish the results in the next issue of the Digest. I received many good suggestions and they will be brought to the attention of the proper persons.

I had a letter from Timothy J. Leary, a member of the Buffalo Division, with a suggestion that a column be devoted to Bagpipe bands and their activities. He is in the process of organizing a bagpipe band at the present time and any help he could get would be appreciated. He is willing to help with the column. If you are interested, please contact me.

Report from NATIONAL ADVERTISING DIRECTOR

ADVERTISE FOR ST. PATRICK'S DAY

If you think St. Patrick's Day is just too far off to worry about during the present holiday season, stand easy. Although it's about three months away (by the time this issue reaches you) the days will quickly pass by, and plans for the St. Patrick's Day festivities will be upon you.

And just what does that have to do with advertising? Almost everything. With probably every State Board and division planning some sort of celebration — perhaps a dinner/dance — it is always a good thing to advertise your project with us.

It is quite surprising how even a small (sixteenth-page advertisement, for example) will pay off with additional attendance at your function. There are literally hundreds of Hibernians and their friends throughout the nation who love to travel to attend a Hibernian dance or feis.

And don't think that the additional members and their guests don't pay off at the cash register. It does. Ask those who've advertised in the National Hibernian Digest. So, even though we're celebrating Christmas and the upcoming New Year's Days, keep St. Patrick's Day in mind.

A new advertiser with us for the November/December issue is Stanton B. Roemer's Premier Jewelers of Bristol, Pennsylvania. The company's quarter-page advertisement will also be in the National Hibernian Digest for January/February 1988.

The Irish Genealogical Foundation, owned by fellow-Hibernian, Michael O'Laughlin of Kansas City, Missouri, is with us again with a full-page advertisement. Thanks, Mike, it helps greatly.

Cooperation and thoughtfulness for the future of the National Hibernian Digest came from a most welcome source recently: Miss Sarah E. Murphy, past national president of the Ladies AOH. Miss Murphy called us on a Sunday evening with the name of a prospective advertiser in Fairfax, Virginia. The prospect was sent a couple of issues of your newspaper.

We hope that many of our other readers will copy the example set by Miss Murphy, a tireless and dedicated worker for the Hibernians, and keep a constant lookout for advertising prospects. Thanks very much, Miss Murphy.

STATE NEWS: Rhode Island

In 1987 several monthly events were held by Division 1, successfully engineered by various chairmen. Among them were Celtic Night and Lamb Night chaired by Leo Downey; Beefsteaks Night and Portuguese Night, chaired by Arthur Dias; Steak Night, with Norman King as chairman, and the golf tournament and league dinner under the guidance of Harry Winthrop.

The division supported the Muscular Dystrophy Foundation with a contribution of $1038. The drive was conducted by Harry Westley and Charles Burns.

Brother Burns was nominated by the division as a National Life Member during the year.

On the lighter side, Brother Martin Shea is being sued for hitting a fellow brother in the leg during the annual golf tournament... joke!

Hibernian Tom Kiernan Egan of Rutland, Vermont, Addresses the Annual Meeting of the Vermont Society of the Descendants of the Mayflower

Mendon, Vermont

Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen — I'm honored to be here. Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your gracious introduction.

I've been a principal speaker in many of the major cities in our country — and some foreign countries, too — but this is my first time before a group whose very name seems so distant, but to whom I feel very close. Like all of you, I've been in the audience too — through thousands of speeches and sermons — and, while I've forgotten the bland and smooth ones, I've remembered those where the speaker put some rough pebbles under my seat! And that's why — today — I'll pass out a few pebbles, delivered in the interest of truth. I'm sure you'll accept them that way.

First, our togetherness. Your ancestors left Britain — for religious reasons — went to Holland and then America, 367 years ago! My parents left a British-occupied Ireland — impoverished by religious-inspired differences — and came to America at the turn of this 20th century. Although that's a difference of 300 years, I'm sure the parting anguish was very much the same.

Because my wife is a gracious, understanding lady, she agreed that I should make my first visit to Ireland alone. And for six weeks I wandered, and found my roots. At one spot, Clonmacnoise, no more than an acre or two, I strolled and sat — strolled and sat — for more than three hours. That is County Offaly (called "Kings County" when my father was there) and a man said, "sure, you can't throw a stone around here without hitting an Egan." And I found five first cousins. A week later, I went up to County Leitrim, my mother's area, and five more first cousins took me to their bosoms. And one of them said, "We Beirnes have always been on these farms!"

On a later visit, with my wife, all six couples were standing in the middle of the town's little street going through late-night goodbyes. And one of them said to me, "Remember, Tom, when ye were home the last time . . ." when ye were home the last time. The "ye" was like music — my mother said "ye" but HOME? It told me that, even a generation away, they thought of me as still part of that land!

Later, I went down to Cobh (called "Queenstown" in my parents' time) to stand on the pier — the dock from which they and millions and millions and millions left their homeland. There never was a dock! The ship dropped anchor out in the bay and the emigrants were ferried out to it! Not even the convenience, the dignity, of a gang-plank! (The Mayflower was a chartered ship!) Looking out on that bay, I thought of my grandparents, as my father, a teenager, left that Offaly farm; as my mother, another teenager, left her Leitrim farm, each traveling so alone to this southern edge of the country — with an ocean still to cross!

As a parent myself, of three sons and three daughters, I could feel the bitter heartbreak of a goodbye to a son, a daughter, they knew they'd never ever see again. How far down the path did they walk together until that inevitable last hug? The last, distant wave of the hand? Three and a half centuries ago, it was just as poignant for your ancestors, and so I feel as one of you today.

The next similarity is more horrible than heart-breaking. It would be presumptuous for me to tell this audience about the religious pressures by the "established church" that forced the pilgrims from Britain to Holland to America. But you may not know about the religious pressures in 1649, only 29 years after the pilgrims landed at Plymouth: on the 2nd of October of that year, English Parliament voted a national Thanksgiving Day to God, "the House does approve the execution done at Drogheda." Let a quote from Oliver Cromwell explain that, "It has pleased God to bless our efforts at Drogheda . . . the enemy were about 3,000 strong in the town. I believe we put to the sword the whole number." Now these 3,000 included women and children. And that is the way they were hacked to death, by the sword! And this religious carnage continued from one Irish town to the next: 2,000 more in Wexford, 2,000 more in Cashel, and on and on. Some of these butchers showed imagination: a Dominican Friar had his fingers and toes cut off before he was hanged; the Bishop of Ross had his hands and feet chopped off before he was hanged; a Franciscan was first drawn on a rack and his hands and feet were burned off before his hanging! And this hideous slaughter was for "God and the established church!" How ironic, how sacrilegious that this religious conquest (still attempted in 3/16th of Ireland) is done in the name of the same God who made and loves you and me, who makes you and me sisters and brothers! Enough of that pebble — let's turn to a happier subject.

Your Chairman asked me to speak about our beloved U.S. Constitution and I'm delighted to oblige. However, instead of the urge to describe those squabbling compromisers in that hot Philadelphia summer of 1787 (and, of course, the windows had to be closed; and, of course, there were no electric fans) — all part of our history you're all familiar with, I'm going to pass out some pebbles instead. Here's a small one: I had 30,000 copies donated — of that bit of paper you just read from. That was for 5,000 people at 6 different performances at the Vermont State Fair in Rutland. (Because of rain the last day, we have these extras.) Even more dramatic, we had dozens of teams of students doing the same patriotic ritual at our federal building (your Chairman was involved in organizing this), but there were no news pictures of all those kids as they marched day after day. No pictures of 5,000 citizens in an exercise of Americanism. No, here's what showed on page one of our newspaper: these balloons in the sky and cupcakes with flags! I show this to illustrate that the gaudy often takes precedence over the essence of truth.

Here's a more serious case. American Express Company brought to our country the Lincoln copy of England's "Magna Carta" — 1215" during this birthday party for our own American Constitution! I was so indignant that, when the enormous van was parked on Dartmouth's campus, I went over and sat beside the long line of viewers with this sign on a tripod. The results were so enjoyable: everyone who chatted, a Dartmouth historian, a Vermont High School history teacher, about a dozen students, all agreed that an argument (one student called it a "power play") between 25 barons and a king (all so-called nobility), has no relevance at all to our Constitution. Indeed, they agreed that the "Mayflower Compact" (an agreement among the common people) was more the beginning of our "We, the people" document. But that "Magna Carta" intrusion was only a passing combination of brazen public relations, poor judgement, and bad manners. My last, very rough pebble will be an account of a very complicated, amazingly devious, stranger than fiction attack on our precious Constitution.

CBS "60 Minutes" told this story less than two weeks ago. Considering the restrictions of making the story visual, Harry Reasoner did a responsible job reporting this very complex matter. His camera moved between three countries — I'll mention many more than that. I'll be hopping back and forth, in dates, just the way he did. Let's start back in Philadelphia (our Constitution signed 200 years ago) and Virginia (our Bill of Rights adopted four years later). Following the "Preamble", there are various articles: Article 1 deals with our legislature; Article 2 deals with our executive; Article 3 deals with our judiciary. Like separate, different departments, called "separation of powers," we just saw Judge Bork nominated by the Executive, to the Judiciary, being judged by the Legislative. Although separate in powers, here is a joint endeavor — just the way it was spelled out 200 years ago. What is the lesson from all this? That our courts, our judiciary, our "rule of law" is very important, very precious, very sacred!

Now, let's move around the world:

London, 1975 — Parliament passes an act stating that, after March 1, 1976, all political prisoners, called "special category prisoners", would be treated as common criminals, wear prison uniforms, and so forth. This would affect American courts, our Constitution, 10 years later.

Belfast — After exactly 5 years of protest demonstrations, prisoner of war Robert Sands began a hunger strike on March 1, 1981. Elected to Parliament while in prison, his purpose was to bring world attention, in a non-violent manner, to Britain's criminalization policy.

New Delhi, India, May 5, 1981 — Parliament stood in one minute of silent respect at the news that Robert Sands had died after 66 days of fasting.

Belfast, August 20, 1981 — Michael Devine died in the same prison, in the same non-violent hunger protest as Robert Sands. Devine was the last of 10 such prisoners of war who starved to death protesting that their actions (like G. Washington, Mahatma Gandhi, Menachem Begin, and others) were not criminal.

Belfast — Let's step back one year, May 2, 1980 — Joseph Doherty is one of a group of Irish soldiers involved in a shootout with a group of British soldiers. A British captain is killed. The Irish are captured.

June 1981 — Between the deaths of the 4th and 5th hunger strikers, Joseph Doherty escapes from the prison. Later, he is convicted of murder, in absentia.

New York City, February 1982 — A man, with a passport name "Henry J. O'Reilly", arrives. It is Doherty.

June 18, 1983 — After more than a year of steady employment, without as much as a parking ticket, Doherty is located by our F.B.I. and arrested.

London, August 1983 — United Kingdom requests that Doherty be extradited from the United States.

GUEST EDITORIAL

The Enniskillen Massacre Deplored Hon. Mario Biaggi of New York In the House of Representatives Monday, November 9, 1987

Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. Speaker, for more than 10 years I have served with great pride as the chairman of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs. Our objective on a bipartisan and nonpartisan basis is to work for peace, justice, reconciliation, and freedom for all the people of Ireland. Our objective has been to work to have the U.S. Government play a more constructive role in the search for this peace.

Throughout our existence and each and every time it rears its ugly head, the committee again on a bipartisan and nonpartisan basis stands united in its condemnation of violence — all violence in Northern Ireland. As we have done when there have been acts of civilian violence and acts of official violence — the reaction is the same — it is wrong and counterproductive to the cause of peace in Ireland.

The horrific bombing which took place yesterday in Enniskillen, Northern Ireland, must be condemned for its savagery, and its indiscriminate nature in terms of its casualties. All too often when there are acts of violence in Northern Ireland, whether by paramilitary organizations or through more official channels, there is one common result — innocent people are often the victims. Among the more shocking elements of this bombing were the fact that 5 of the 11 fatalities were women and among the casualties were 13 children aged 2 months to 15 years. So, too, do we find that the British Government's indiscriminate use of plastic bullets over the years has claimed innocent victims, many of whom have been children.

Human Rights Problems Persist in Northern Ireland

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY) recently said that the 1987 Report of Amnesty International is "proof positive" that human rights violations and abuses in Northern Ireland remain a very serious problem.

Biaggi is Chairman of the bipartisan 118 Member Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs. He made his comments in a speech on the House floor. "The Amnesty report discusses human rights abuses by governments during 1986. The report focused on more than 125 different countries but the report included specific references to the government of the United Kingdom and their policies in Northern Ireland."

Among the problems specifically cited by Amnesty:

- The continued refusal of the British government to undertake an independent review of reports that the Royal Ulster Constabulary practices a "shoot to kill" policy
- The reliance by the Diplock Courts of Northern Ireland on so-called "supergrass" testimony
- Continued random "strip searches" of female inmates in the Armagh prison as well as two Irish women at the Brixton prison in London.

Biaggi also noted that Amnesty was "continuing" its investigation into allegations of ill treatment of

Despite this tragedy and the emotions that it produces there must be vigorous effort on the part of all segments of political thought in Northern Ireland and Ireland to press forward to pursue the course of peace and justice. There must be renewed efforts to bring about an end to the obvious discrimination which exists in Northern Ireland, relegating the Catholic minority to a status of being second-class citizens under policies sanctioned by the British Government.

The Enniskillen massacre has received a great deal of coverage in our major newspapers today because it was so brutal and resulted in a significant loss of life. Yet I was distressed to note that in many of the media's coverage of this tragedy, a chronology of violence over the past 15 to 20 years was included. Yet with few if any exceptions, the only acts of violence that were listed were those perpetrated by other than official violence. No acts of official violence, not even the murder of Sean Downes in August 1985 were included. This helps to perpetuate the myth that violence in Northern Ireland is one-sided. It is not. This is not to condone any of the violence which has affected the people of Northern Ireland over these years. It is wrong and there must be a total commitment to its abolition.

This is not a time for silence for those who care about peace and justice in Northern Ireland. It is a time to speak out in condemnation of another mindless act of violence. Another bloody Sunday has occurred in Northern Ireland. We must work to avert any others.

Ad Hoc Committee Acts on Doherty, Immigration, Ethnic Affairs

DOHERTY CASE

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY) has been advised by the United States Department of Justice that the Attorney General still has the case involving Joseph Patrick Doherty "under review".

The information was provided in a letter which came in response to a telegram sent by Biaggi and 17 House members urging the Attorney General to accept the recommendation of the Board of Immigration Appeals and allow Doherty to be deported to the Republic of Ireland. The telegram was signed by: Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-UT); Rep. Gary Ackerman (D-NY); Rep. Frank Annunzio (D-IL); Rep. Helen Bentley (R-MD); Rep. Robert Borski (D-PA); Rep. Ronald Dellums (D-CA); Rep. Thomas Downey (D-NY); Rep. Hamilton Fish (R-NY); Rep. Robert Garcia (D-NY); Rep. Benjamin Gilman (R-NY); Rep. Norman Lent (R-NY); Rep. Thomas Manton (D-NY); Rep. Raymond McGrath (R-NY); Rep. Robert Mrazek (D-NY); Rep. James Scheuer (R-NY); Rep. Edolphus Towns (D-NY) and Rep. James Traficant (D-OH).

In the letter to Biaggi, Assistant Attorney General John R. Bolton said, "The Attorney General has asked me to reply to the recent mailgram sent by you and several of your colleagues concerning his review of the decision by the Board of Immigration Appeals regarding Joseph Patrick Thomas Doherty."

The letter continued, "Precisely because the Doherty matter is under review by the Attorney General, it would be inappropriate to comment on the substantive issues relating to his case raised in your mailgram."

Biaggi, who is Chairman of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, indicated that he will continue to closely monitor the Doherty case and the decision of the Attorney General.

IMMIGRATION

Rep. Mario Biaggi announced that the Immigration and Naturalization Service will take steps to initiate a waiver program to certain individuals who have been found ineligible for the service's amnesty and legalization program. Biaggi, who is the Chairman of the 118 member Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, stated that the INS plans to publish this new amendment in the Federal Register within the next several weeks. The I-94 is the form number of the arrival and departure certificate which appears in a passport.

Biaggi noted, "Under the provisions of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, individuals who have resided in the United States illegally since January 1982, are eligible for legalization. The problem lies in the fact that many of these people have been declared ineligible for amnesty as they left the U.S. for a short period of time and reentered on a valid visa. This seems unfair, and I am happy to report that the INS will soon be accepting waiver applications from these individuals on the basis that the visa was not actually valid, as these individuals reentered the United States with the intent of staying permanently."

"This new regulation," Biaggi continued, "will allow those people who have applied for, and have been denied legalization, to submit a waiver to the INS. This will permit an individual who may have lived in the US for as many as twenty years, but returned home briefly within the past five years, the opportunity to remain in this country and continue to make a meaningful contribution to our society. This is a major step forward in legalizing hundreds of people, particularly the Irish."

Biaggi went on to emphasize that, by law, information submitted in the legalization application cannot be used to deport any alien, or any of his/her family members. He encouraged those who believe they might be eligible to apply, as there is really nothing to fear. Should anyone have any questions, Biaggi noted that there are two legalization hotlines which can be called for additional information; the toll free number 1-800-777-7000 or 718-899-4000.

ETHNIC AFFAIRS

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY) announced that nine national organizations have endorsed his legislation to establish a Clearinghouse for Ethnic and Minority Affairs within the Federal Communications Commission.

These organizations include the National Ethnic Coalition of Organizations (a coalition of over 40 ethnic organizations), UNICO National, the American-Arab Anti-Discrimination Committee, the Transport Workers Union of America, SELFRELANCE (Association of American Ukrainians), the Polish American Congress Inc., the Indochina Resource Action Center, the Anti-Bigotry Committee, and Americans of Italian Descent Inc.

The Biaggi bill, H.R. 1234, would establish a clearinghouse to handle complaints relative to negative ethnic and minority stereotyping on radio and television programming. "Currently, complaints on ethnic and minority stereotyping are but one of thirteen different categories the FCC logs," said Biaggi. "My proposed clearinghouse would provide follow-up research on these complaints to determine if repeat complaints have been filed against a station. This clearinghouse could also help promote a more positive image of ethnic and minority groups by radio and television programmers, including holding an annual conference to focus public attention on the issue."

Biaggi introduced this legislation noting a 70% increase over the past year in the number of complaints filed by persons offended by ethnic or racial broadcasting. "It should be noted that the FCC awards licenses to radio and television stations. This accrues great financial benefit in many instances. A station awarded a license is required to operate in the public interest. Subjecting an ethnic or minority group to ridicule, stereotyping or other denigration, in my mind, does not meet that mandate," said Biaggi. "The FCC should help ensure that stations operate more responsibly. Our objective is not greater censorship, but greater sensitivity."

Anti-Catholic Bias in North, Says Survey

BELFAST — Tough measures to combat religious discrimination were outlined in Belfast recently, following the publication of a major survey on the issue which shows Catholics as severely economically disadvantaged in comparison to Protestants.

The state-sponsored Standing Advisory Committee on Human Rights (SACHR) in Northern Ireland calls on the British Government to abolish the Fair Employment Agency and replace it with a tougher, more powerful agency.

The report and the SACHR recommendations were welcomed in Dublin by Irish Foreign Minister Brian Lenihan, who said it was a "clear indication" of the need for effective measures to redress the problems of inequality in the North. Seamus Mallon, deputy leader of the Social Democratic and Labor Party called on the Northern Secretary, Tom King, to act "quickly and decisively" on the report's recommendations.

In London, Kevin McNamara, British Labor Party spokesman on Northern Ireland, said the report exploded the "myth" that Catholic unemployment was due to problems of geography, family structure, age, education or misfortune.

In its 200-page report, SACHR makes 124 recommendations on how the State should redress the imbalance. It places strong emphasis on affirmative action programs, similar to the U.S. models, using targets and timetables, contract compliance, the State incentives to employers, as well as sanctions. While it broadly follows and supports the recent British Government initiative on fair employment, it goes further and calls on the government to set itself a five-year goal to achieve significant change.

At present, Catholics are two and a half times more likely to be unemployed than Protestants and SACHR recommends that the government should set out to reduce this differential to one and a half times by 1992. It warns that unless such urgent action is taken, the sense of grievance in the Catholic community will grow and political progress will be difficult to achieve.

The London-based survey, conducted by the Policies Studies Institute, an independent research organization commissioned by SACHR, states that religious discrimination is social rather than geographical and has resulted in a significantly lower standard of living for Catholics in comparison to Protestants.

Presenting SACHR's recommendations, the chairman, James O'Hara, said it could only advise and not compel government to act, but he stressed: "There is an urgent need for clear and comprehensive measures to secure equality of opportunity."

In response, the Northern Secretary welcomed both SACHR's report and the PSI survey, and said the government would take it into account when framing new legislation. With the current legislative time-table in the House of Commons, it would be at least a year before a new Fair Employment Bill could be presented, and it could be two years before the new act takes effect. King said the government had already taken action to redress inequalities, particularly in the publication last month of a new Guide to Effective Practice.

Extract from Tanaiste Brian Lenihan's Address to United Nations

The problem of Northern Ireland continues to be of major concern to the Irish Government. In successive years Irish Foreign Ministers have come to the General Assembly to describe the dimensions of the problem and to underline the urgency of finding a durable solution.

Since the meeting between the British and Irish heads of government in 1980 it has become an accepted principle that a solution to the Northern Ireland problem is to be found in the framework of Anglo-Irish co-operation. Out of that process has emerged the Anglo-Irish Agreement between the British and Irish Governments signed in November 1985 and registered with the United Nations.

The Anglo-Irish Agreement represents both a commitment and a challenge for the British and Irish Governments. For our part, the Irish Government which came into office in March of this year is determined to use the mechanisms of the Agreement to improve the position of all the people living in Northern Ireland and especially the members of the nationalist community. Within our overall programme for action, we have established certain priority areas where we believe change is urgently required. These areas include the achievement of fair employment practices and reforms in the administration of justice.

As indeed the United Nations and its specialised agencies have recognised in many pronouncements, equal opportunity in employment is one of the hallmarks of an acceptable society. The socio-economic rights of individuals must rank in equal importance with their political and other rights. The employment profile of Northern Ireland undoubtedly points to a legacy of discrimination against one community. It is the common objective of the British and

New York City, same August 1983 — Doherty's attorneys cite the "Political Exclusion" clause in the US-UK Extradition Treaty and request political asylum.

Now, let's go back almost a century, to London 1891 — The British courts, in the legal landmark "Angelo Castioni Case" refused to extradite the Swiss national because "he killed in furtherance of a political uprising."

California, 1894, three years later — The United States followed Britain's Castioni reasoning and began an American precedent refusing El Salvador's request to extradite Antonio Ezeta, ruling his offense was political.

Comment: This is very significant because it was the beginning of the United States arranging almost identical treaties, with almost 100 countries, many almost 100 years old, all containing this "Political Exclusion" clause. This world-respected American clause is very consistent with an America that won its own freedom by revolution.

Now, back to the judiciary part of our U.S. Constitution.

New York City, December 1984 — After almost a year of consideration, during which our state department warned the judge (highly irregular) that a favorable decision for Doherty would displease the British, Judge John E. Sprizzo of the United States District Court for the Southern District of N.Y., denied the British request for the extradition of Doherty. Here is a quote from his decision: "The facts of this case present the political offense exception in its most classic form." A follow-up tantrum, by our Justice Department, was "so demeaning to the judicial process" that the lead editorial, by the National Law Journal expressed "great concern."

February 1985 — In an unprecedented action, the Executive branch sued, saying Judge Sprizzo was wrong, and brought the case to trial all over again!

June 1985 — Judge Charles S. Haight, Jr., of the same U.S. District Court, ruled that Judge Sprizzo's order was not subject to review. Judge Haight commented that, if the Justice Department intended to intimidate him, it hadn't succeeded.

August 1985 — Judge Haight's decision was brought higher, to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 2nd circuit.

March 1986 — The U.S. Court of Appeals, by unanimous 3/0 decision, affirmed Judge Haight's decision, commenting that the tactics of the Executive Branch are "startling!"

Now, let's leave our 3 courtrooms that said Doherty should be free (and Doherty who's now 4 years in the slammer without charge) and review what was happening in the outside world. Let's start with the least mentioned in a list of shockers.

April 2, 1982 — Malvinas Islands off the coast of Argentina claimed by, and called Falklands, by the British. Corrupt Argentine leaders take the islands for prestige reasons. Britain's own prestige at stake, sets out to recapture them. America's "Good Neighbor Policy" (since President Roosevelt's 1930s) with South America is at stake and Alexander Haig tries to be intermediary. Finally, President Reagan forsooke "Good Neighbor and Monroe Doctrine" considerations and sides with Britain. Britain sets 200 miles around the islands as zone of combat. On May 3, Argentina's only cruiser "The Belgrano" (although on course away from the islands and outside the 200 mile zone) is sunk with 500 lives on direct orders from London. Most observers credit this "great Naval victory" as the deciding factor in the British election one month later. It is mentioned here as a microcosm of public opinion manipulation as a sort of overture to what will follow.

May 20 — Blacks kill 18 whites in South Africa
May 9 — Margaret Thatcher re-elected with 42% of the vote.

August 21 — Benigno Aquino, whom Ferdinand Marcos tried to extradite from U.S., is killed.
August 29 — 2 marines and 3 French soldiers killed in Lebanon.

September 1 — Soviets shoot down a plane over South Korea — 299 passengers killed.

October 23 — 241 marines and 58 French soldiers killed in Lebanon.

October 25 — U.S. invades Grenada — Margaret Thatcher displeased.

November 14 — 1st of 572 U.S. "cruise" intermediate range missiles arrives at Greenham Common Air Base in England.

1984
October 12 — Irish bombs, at Brighton, England, almost kill Margaret Thatcher and her party leaders.

1985
February 20 — In the first such address to a joint session of Congress since Winston Churchill, Margaret Thatcher condemns Americans who contribute to Irish political revolt.

March 8 — A unit, trained by our CIA, explodes a car-bomb that kills 80 people in Lebanon. Vermont's Senator Leahy states that his "Intelligence Committee" was aware of 6 or 7 such incidents.

May 13, Philadelphia — Police bombs destroy 61 houses — kill 11 "radicals".

July 4-11, in Washington; July 15-21 in London — Split convention of the American Bar Association. At the session in Westminster, Margaret Thatcher is the principal speaker.

October 7 — Leon Klinghofer, an American in a wheelchair, is shot and throw off the cruise ship Achille Lauro.

April 14 — In an air attack aimed at "terrorist centers," 18 U.S. planes take off from England and attack Libya. Ironically, one American plane is shot down by an aiming device sold to Libya by England.

This resume you just heard brought home to Americans all kinds of reactions. Who does what to whom? A frightening sense of the violence is so many places, in so many forms; a mixture of bewilderment, and indignation, frustration. And, for so many reasons during this critical period, there was orchestrated an obligation to make a pleasing gesture to England. But, while we have our Executive, our State Dept., our Justice Dept., and a well-stroked Legislature going in that direction, we have our "rule of law" (our judges, our courts, our judiciary) protecting the man that England wants. Or, to be more precise, resisting the criminalization policy that Britain is asking America to endorse! Granted that we owed Britain for certain concessions, can we, should we scuttle our legal system? Well, a way around was found, but it turned out to be not as easy as it first appeared.

Very quietly, no stories in the press, four months after the Thatcher speech to our Congress, a treaty was signed on the 25th of June 1985 between the United Kingdom and the United States.

On the 3rd of July, Secretary Shultz submitted it to our President. Two weeks later our President asked the Senate to "advise and consent." Two weeks the Senate Foreign Relations Committee heard testimony from two witnesses, deputy to the Attorney General and legal counsel to the State Department. All nice and tidy, the "Political Exclusion Clause" was removed from our Extradition Treaty... and... and, the removal would be dated back — back to before those three American courts made those three awkward decisions. All very neat. It made no difference that our Constitution forbids ex post facto laws. It made no difference that Americans would now be calling Nathan Hale and Seth Warner of Hubbardston and John Stark of Bennington criminals; and the 22 soldiers out of the 39 signers of our Constitution, all criminals!! That's what our Executive was about to do!

But word of this got out and telephones burned all over the country. All kinds of people descended on Washington. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee had to extend the hearings. The corridor outside was crushed with hundreds who couldn't fit inside. I was armed with a unique document, a U.S. Senate letterhead requesting my turn to testify, signed, jointly, by Republican Senator Stafford and Democratic Senator Leahy. And I was proud to be in distinguished company — constitutional professors, law school professors, senators, congressmen, retired senators like Eugene McCarthy, Irish American societies (notice I stress the American part there), law societies, civil rights and civil liberties groups — it was America in action! Even the book Ethan Allen, Frontier Rebel, by the respected author, Charles Jellison, was quoted. "The palpable fact that, whether or not His Majesty's government cared to admit it, Ethan and his men had been acting as soldiers, and to treat them as common felons would be bound to cause considerable awkwardness for the British government both at home and abroad." Well, there sure was awkwardness in 1985 and 1986 — because it dragged on for a year!

But the battle was an unequal one. The thrust of the purists for the Constitution was blunted for many reasons. In the press, it was made to look like an English-Irish squabble, and just like senators feared the "soft on communism" label during the hysteria of Senator Joe McCarthy in the 1950s, our senators were uneasy about appearing "soft on terrorism" at the time when it was discussed on news and talk-shows night after night and weekends, too. But the largest factor was our Republican Executive, involved in global NATO commitments with the head of an important NATO partner, and the leverage of a Republican Majority on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Look at this newspaper, USA Today, and listen to these headlines and quotes: "Year-old accord languishes in Senate — Irish terror suspect's fate is sticking point." Here's one with Daily News: "Senate may hold key to Thatcher's future," (and the key sentence) "Without the treaty in hand to offset economic woes, Thatcher's political future looks troubled." Here's the most disturbing quote of all: "In fact, Democrats on the Foreign Relations Committee blocked the treaty for months until Committee Chairman Richard Lugar (R-Ind.) tied its passage to a Democrat-backed bill giving $250 million dollars in aid to Northern Ireland." This is naked, open bribery, with your tax dollars and mine!! Here's another one for good measure: The American Bar Association, usually strict constitutionalists fresh from the echos of Prime Minister Thatcher and the pomp at Westminster — had a furious dispute at their convention that followed. After unprecedented, rancorous, opposite votes by two pertinent committees that did not confer as per custom, the more powerful one reported out endorsement of that unconstitutional gerrymander arrangement.

In the full Senate, Senator Stafford was one of two senators who did not vote. Senator Leahy voted against the retroactive insult, but later agreed to a compromise explained as "colloquy on Section 3" — too nebulous to explain here.

Time Magazine, July 28, 1986 — The Windup: "British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher received a phone call from Ronald Reagan last week that she said delighted her. The item ends with 'Britain has long been seeking such an agreement but it was Thatcher's aid in the April bombing raid on Libya that helped push the measure through. Many U.S. diplomats and senators felt that the U.S. ought to return a favor.' That's an understatement.

It seems fitting to close my description on this bizarre series of maneuvers against our Constitution by returning to prisoner of war, Joseph Doherty, symbol of Britain's (now American-endorsed) criminalization policy. Doherty's lawyers could see many more years ahead for corrective legislation or Supreme Court appeal, with their client still held 23 hours a day in a cell. So once again relying on our laws and courts, they turned completely about face! When Doherty wanted asylum here, three courts granted it. But he couldn't get it. Now, he'd ask to be deported because it is our immigration custom that if an undesirable person has a country that will agree to take him, off he goes. Good riddance.

The Republic of Ireland agreed to Doherty's

Attorney General Edwin Meese
Department of Justice
Constitution Ave. & 10th St. N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20530

Dear Attorney General Meese:

I have been following the case of Mr. Joseph Doherty and I must say that, judging from the facts presented to me, I can conceive of no reason why Mr. Doherty has not been deported to the south of Ireland.

My understanding of the facts is as follows:

1. In December 1984, the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York denied request for his extradition on the grounds that his offenses were of a political character; extradition, therefore, barred by the political offense exception provision of a controlling treaty.

2. In February 1985, the Executive Branch of the United States government filed a lawsuit against Mr. Doherty, asserting that the judge in the December 1984 hearing decided the case wrongly.

3. In June 1985, the case was heard again and the original decision was upheld.

4. In August 1985, the Executive Branch brought the case to the Court of Appeals.

5. In March 1986, Mr. Doherty prevailed for the third time, with unanimous 3-0 decision handed down March 13, 1986.

6. The decision to uphold the order to deport Mr. Doherty to the south of Ireland was subsequently ruled by the Bureau of Immigration Appeals in September 1986, and again in May of 1987.

7. At present, the disposition of Mr. Doherty's case rests with your office.

If my account of the proceedings is accurate, I must urge you to render a decision for deportation with all possible speed. Reflection on the decisions of the Courts on the one hand, and the harsh treatment of Mr. Doherty on the other, leads me to conclude that Mr. Doherty has been a victim of serious injustice.

The Roman Catholic Church, along with other religious communities, holds that all persons have intrinsic dignity and therefore must be treated justly. It is, then, the duty of the Church to be an advocate for persons or groups who are victims of injustice.

I urge you, then, to seek the expeditious deportation of Mr. Joseph Doherty to the south of Ireland.

Sincerely yours,

John R. McGann

Neither Fiction or History

Can a nation that treated Ireland's people to Oliver Cromwell and a contrived famine be all bad???

The 1985 Anglo-Irish Agreement's Article 8 recognizes "the importance of public confidence in the administration of justice" in the Six Counties. Without going back through history, let us consider how Britain has gone about this during our own lifetime:

- Diplock courts
- systematic discrimination in employment
- the Birmingham 6
- Supergrass trials
- plastic bullets
- the suppression of the Stalker Report
- internment
- the Prevention of Terrorism Act

- strip-searching
- the SAS
- H-Blocks
- the Guildford 4
- MI5
- discrimination in housing
- the Emergency Provisions Act
- the Military Reconnaissance Force ("dirty tricks" squad)
- economic apartheid
- etc., etc., etc., etc., etc., etc.,

Is Britain merely using the Agreement (and the Dublin government) for its own public relations purposes? Does Britain really want to clean up its act in the north of Ireland? What do you think?

Britain Refuses Diplock Concessions

The likelihood that the Dublin government will again postpone the introduction of the new Extradition Act, due to come into force on December 1, has increased dramatically following a call by the Tanaiste and Minister for Foreign Affairs, Brian Lenihan, for Britain to stick to its promise to introduce reforms in the administration of justice in Northern Ireland. Specifically this means a major reform of the one-judge, no-jury Diplock Courts.

The point was made forcefully to the British Foreign Secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, at the weekend, when he and Brian Lenihan met for a review of Anglo-Irish relations at a gathering of EEC foreign ministers at Nyborg in Denmark.

The issue is now firmly at the top of the agenda for the next meeting of the Anglo-Irish Inter-Governmental Conference due later this month and is likely to be a major stumbling block.

Britain has up to this time refused Dublin's suggestion that cases in the Diplock Courts be heard by three judges instead of one, but so far has come up with no alternative suggestions. No concessions were offered by Sir Geoffrey at the weekend. On the contrary, he insisted that the British government had given no formal commitments.

Britain as an important weapon in the fight against terrorism, was originally to come into force in December of last year but was put on ice by the then Minister for Justice, Alan Dukes, now leader of Fine Gael.

Brian Lenihan's beefing-up of his call to Britain was originally made at the end of a ten-day tour of America, though it was couched in diplomatic language. He did not specifically mention the Diplock Courts but his references were quite clear. He laid it on the line that his government wanted to see "substantial measures" to create public confidence in the administration of justice in Northern Ireland. In giving a positive response to the Irish government's position, he said, the British government would be "doing no more than giving effect to an explicit commitment" embodied in the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

The Tanaiste was in America for other reasons. His primary tasks were to attract more US investment in Ireland and to seek a better deal for Irish immigrants.

He also sought to rebuild bridges — an act not devoid of commercial considerations — to the Irish American community, in latter years disenchanted with the policies of successive Dublin governments towards Northern Ireland. The Tanaiste's visit has been notable for his address to the Ancient Order of Hibernians in Rockland County, New York, the first such ministerial address since one by Eamon de Valera.

The timing of his beefing-up on his government's stance towards Britain was therefore, not accidental, the more so since Northern Ireland Secretary Tom King has also been on tour in America and because, in a radio interview on September 20, Brian Lenihan gave the impression that extradition was not specifically linked to the Anglo-Irish Agreement. Charles Haughey is said to have been less than pleased by this, although it is the impression that has been fuelled for some months.

A softly-softly approach was adopted by the Haughey administration on its return to office earlier this year in an attempt to restore cordial relations with Margaret Thatcher. Hard line positions taken in opposition were ostensibly modified — the cases of the Birmingham Six, the Guildford Four and Maguire's being examples.

Letting, however, both Fine Gael and Labour, joined by the Progressive Democrats, have complained of Britain dragging its feet on commitments it made in negotiations surrounding the Anglo-Irish Agreement. For instance, the former Taoiseach, Garret Fitzgerald, has vigorously insisted at a private meeting of the British-Irish Association in Cambridge that Britain had agreed to reform the Diplock Courts in return for easier extradition procedures. The former Minister for Foreign Affairs, Peter Barry, has several times recently made his feelings known in public, insisting on the "linkage" principle. At the weekend he gave his backing to a tough negotiating position.

No formal decision has yet been taken by Dublin upon its course of action nor is one likely until after the inter-governmental conference. But the feeling is growing that Charles Haughey would be heading for trouble, not least with his own backbenchers, if he is seen to be less green than the opposition.

return, so in September 1986, immigration Judge Howard I. Cohen entered an order that he be deported to Ireland. But he was still held! The Immigration and Naturalization Service took the unprecedented step of appealing the Judge's order, claiming, with no evidence for the statement, that deportation was "prejudicial to the interests of the United States!"

On March 11, six months after Doherty should have been gone, The Board of Immigration Appeals overruled the INS appeal unanimously, with the comments that, 1. No "prejudicial to the U.S." claim had ever been made before and 2. Adjudgments granted to prove it had been wasted. Two days later, on March 13, I.N.S. asked to reopen the appeal so it could submit evidence already six months overdue!

May 22, — The Appeals Court made two rulings: 1. It granted the motion to reopen the case, and then: 2. It reaffirmed the correctness of Judge Cohen's order to deport Doherty to the Republic of Ireland, not to British-occupied Ireland. So, that's that!

No, there was a final curve, and you'll say, "Oh, he's making it up!" Within days of the Appeals Court decision, the Acting Commissioner of the I.N.S. referred the matter for review by Attorney General Meese. This means that the attorney general, who had been the losing party in all decisions in favor of Doherty, is now to be the final arbiter on whether he should have lost! Surely, this is "Judge-Fox" making the decision in the benyard! And, surely, this is not what the composers of our Bill of Rights had in mind for our America.

Is our Constitution damaged? Well, if we think of it as a battleship protecting our harbor, yes, it's been injured. But I think of our document as a barometer, a standard that gives Americans a measure of vigilance when rights may be wronged. And, in that sense it's not damaged; it has served its purpose. And like in the 10 Commandments, it is the offender that is besmirched!

If you turn those Constitution pieces sideways, like this, you'll notice words written by a 100-year-old Jewish immigrant. Let's read them together as a closing prayer: "God bless America — land that I love; stand beside her and guide her, through the night, with a light from above; from the mountains, through the prairies, to the oceans white with foam, God bless America — my home sweet home!" Yes, we are blessed, and I'm honored to be with you.

Dear Mr. Rubenstein:

Thank you for your reply to my letter protesting the appearance of the Grenadier Guards and Gordon Highlanders — Units of the British Army — at the Spectrum on December 12, 1987.

I am appalled and completely puzzled by your response. You have somehow managed to totally miss the point, or chosen to ignore it. Your statement that this event is "cultural" is absolutely repugnant. Your arrogance in comparing British Soldiers to "cultural" entertainers in the spirit of international understanding and cultural enrichment is ludicrous. No reason or purpose can justify promoting as "cultural entertainers" those British Soldiers who have been condemned by numerous international human rights organizations for murdering innocent Catholic men, women, and children.

In the past, other ethnic groups in other locations have protested the appearances of international entertainers such as the actors in Shoah, and the dancers of the Moiseyev Dance Company. While Polish and Jewish people undoubtedly had a legitimate grievance against the governments represented by the civilian entertainers of Shoah, and the Moiseyev Dance Company, and chose to exercise their Constitutional First Amendment rights to demonstrate against the offending nations, neither ethnic group could claim a grievance against the actual actors or dancers involved. THEREIN LIES THE DIFFERENCE! These co-called entertainers were involved as soldiers — who have killed innocent civilians. The difference between "cultural" and "political" is the point to be stressed here.

Would you expect Polish Americans or Afghan immigrants to sit silently by while the Russian Army strutted in America? Or Afro-Americans to quietly accept the proud parading of the Army of South Africa? Would you be host to military bands of Colonel Khadafy? I think not. If bands such as these, or South Korean riot police, or Chilean officers who tortured young people in that country wish to perform at the Spectrum, we believe you would deny their request. Please reflect on that when you consider this sensitive and important issue to Irish-Americans.

I cannot comprehend your insensitivity towards Irish Americans in this matter, and do not understand your defending these soldiers as only "marching bands." To emphasize the point, there are no ceremonial units in the British Army; all are soldiers first, trained to kill, harass, intimidate and repress. Their swirling kilts and skirling pipes in America are swapped for combat fatigues and automatic weapons on the streets of Belfast and Derry.

Ireland has 32 counties — as America has 50 states — and Britain's refusal to depart from 6 counties is the cause of the longest war in history. World opinion is so important that Britain maintains a more sophisticated, incessant public relations campaign than any other nation on earth. One example is sending these soldiers to stages across America for propaganda purposes. Do you believe that Britain needs the small amount of money charged for admission? No, it's the image of "pomp" that makes it hard to believe that such a magnificent country could have its conduct in Northern Ireland condemned by so many international human rights organizations.

As for the Grenadier/Gordons, the dates of their tours of Irish duty are documented — and the names of non-combatants, even children are documented as killed by these combat units. (See "Shoot to Kill" — International Lawyers Inquiry into the Lethal Use of Firearms by the Security Forces in Northern Ireland — 147 men, women and children murdered). But their worst form of terrorism is such as their pounding on the door in the darkness of night — the destruction of the small things that make each home sacred — "for a search". The arrest of an Irishman because he answers a question, in Irish, on his Irish soil. The visit to the cemetery where the television cameras above record all who come and go. The searches of shopping bags and bodies by foreigners. The list is long and painful.

In America, in the 200th year of our Constitution, it is unthinkable that in the City of Brotherly Love the people's trust would be betrayed. In the case of these soldiers appearing at the Spectrum, it seems that the management has been misled by a public relations force so pervasive that its purpose seems real and true. We would hope that the hurt and insult to Irish Americans is unintentional, and that a mistake was made, and that the Spectrum would correct it by cancelling this performance, as others have.

Lastly, as to your advice to Americans, in America, on how to properly and peacefully demonstrate, as is our right, a right I might add we Americans fought for and many died for, fighting the kind of oppression perpetrated by these performing British soldiers, we will be eternally grateful to you. In the true American spirit, I suggest you share your great patriotic wisdom, on peace, with the internationally condemned army units appearing at the Spectrum.

We respectfully request you reconsider your decision and cancel this performance. While awaiting your quick reply, we will be organizing a peaceful protest demonstration.

ALBANY BISHOP IMPLORES MEESE

The Honorable Edwin Meese III
The Attorney General
Department of Justice
Washington, D.C. 20530

Dear Mr. Attorney General:

I wish to add my voice to that of an increasing number of individuals and groups who are appalled at the continuing imprisonment of Joseph Doherty, who is now in the fifth year of confinement, without being sentenced, in the Manhattan Metropolitan Correctional Center. He has been imprisoned without bail since June 18, 1983. In spite of the consistent decisions in his favor by the judicial courts, he is still a prisoner in what appears to be a frightening travesty of justice.

I urge you, in the name of the justice and freedom that are hallmarks of our American Constitution and system of government and in the name of the moral law which we both affirm, to exercise your authority to release Joseph Doherty from this unconscionable violation of human rights and to comply with the court order to deport him to the Republic of Ireland. Again and again the United States through its leadership over several years has forcefully supported the human rights of persons of various countries. To maintain such a violation of human rights in the situation of Joseph Doherty jeopardizes the credibility of our nation in the eyes of other nations.

It is for these reasons that I vigorously urge you to release Joseph Doherty from his fifth year of imprisonment and to comply with the court order to deport him to the Republic of Ireland. I do so in unity with the many voices to which I referred initially and with such groups as the New York State Assembly and the city councils of Philadelphia, New York, and Yonkers whose resolutions have brought the same urgent request to you as the one I have expressed.

Howard J. Hubbard
Bishop of Albany

BISHOP ADMONISHES MEESE

Dear Editor:
In a letter addressed to Attorney General Edwin Meese concerning the denial of justice to Irish political prisoner Joseph Doherty, Bishop John McGann of the Diocese of Rockville Centre stated that "the Roman Catholic Church, along with other religious communities, holds that all persons have intrinsic dignity and therefore must be treated justly. It is the duty of the Church to be an advocate for persons or groups who are victims of injustice."

This letter came in response to a request from the American Irish Congress that Bishop McGann speak out in defense of the justice granted by federal judges but continually denied to Joseph Doherty by the Attorney General.

"Reflection on the decisions of the courts on the one hand, and the harsh treatment of Mr. Doherty on the other, leads me to conclude that Mr. Doherty has been a victim of serious injustice," continued Bishop McGann.

The Diocese of Rockville Centre now joins the Archdiocese of New York, the New York State Assembly, the New York City Council, the Town of Hempstead, and many federal officials in urging that the Attorney General conform to the laws of the United States by following the federal court rulings and the Immigration administrators relative to Joseph Doherty.

Excerpt from Report of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, 1987

IRELAND

The AFL-CIO notes with pleasure that the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution coincides with the 50th anniversary of the Republic of Ireland's Constitution. We take this opportunity to express the longstanding friendship between the American and Irish peoples.

We also reaffirm our solidarity with the Irish Congress of Trade Unions, one of the few all-Ireland institutions that provides an organizational framework for the people of Northern Ireland to work together with their fellow workers in the Republic of Ireland in the pursuit of social justice and human rights for all.

Although violence and sectarianism continue to plague Northern Ireland as the second anniversary of the Anglo-Irish accord on Northern Ireland approaches, we note with satisfaction that the voices of obstructionism, violence, and stalemate have grown more faint. We note, too, the modest success of the International Fund, to which the United States has contributed millions of dollars to aid in the rehabilitation of housing, the creation of jobs, and the provision of education on both sides of the border that divides Ireland.

We note with sorrow and deep regret that the killing continues in Northern Ireland, claiming more than 70 lives in political violence in 1987 alone. We note with undiminished concern the drastic state of unemployment in Northern Ireland, which stands at disastrous levels and is concentrated disproportionately in the minority Catholic community. Discrimination is still rampant in employment and contributes to the climate of violence and resentment. Such bias must be vociferously condemned and eradicated. Further, British and Irish governmental policies must be developed to increase employment opportunities for all, both in the Republic and in Northern Ireland.

In June 1987, discussions were held with leaders of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions (ICTU) who explained the evolution of ICTU policy on employment equality and their new and stronger policy document, subsequently adopted at Cork, Ireland, in July. In these consultations, ICTU leaders, whose federation embraces workers of all creeds, North and South, explained the complexity of making progress against discrimination in conditions of severe unemployment and sectarian violence in the six counties. The ICTU policy statement is a forthright call for an end to any form of discrimination in employment. Fashioned by the Northern Ireland Committee and the ICTU, it calls for legislative changes in the Fair Employment Act and an enlarged and improved affirmative action program.

The AFL-CIO renews its call to U.S. employers operating in Northern Ireland to adopt and abide by clear principles for fair employment practices, as are elaborated in the MacBride Principles. We view these principles as a means through which positive employment practices and the elimination of job discrimination can be realized.

Only on the basis of social justice, equality, and respect for the rights of all will the interests of all Irish workers be served and peace brought to all of Ireland.

Irish Governments to ensure the elimination of that discrimination in all its forms. Some steps have been taken along the road but there is much further to travel. We regard the removal of discrimination in employment as both a moral and political imperative in Northern Ireland.

Public confidence in the administration of justice and good relations between the security forces and the community are other distinguishing marks of a normal society. When emergency measures are deemed necessary in order to protect the public from violence, it is essential that the public be assured that the actions of the security forces are evenhanded and that the proceedings of the courts are impartial. In a divided society like Northern Ireland, where a very large minority of the population has felt alienated from the institutions of government, and especially from the forces of law and order and the system of justice, the importance of such public confidence is acute. In Northern Ireland, therefore, it is necessary to consider what changes are required to remedy the damage done to public confidence in the past and to assure it now and for the future. That is why in the Anglo-Irish Agreement of 15 November 1985, and in the Communiqué which accompanied it, the British and Irish Governments agreed to seek measures which would give substantial expression to the aim of public confidence in the administration of justice and committed themselves explicitly to early progress in this area.

It is easy to be misled into thinking that the conflict in Northern Ireland centres upon irreconcilable religious or historical differences. In fact the challenge which lies at the heart of the problem is a similar challenge to many of those posed by other areas of conflict in the world which are raised regularly in this body. The need for peoples and nations freely to work out their own future, the accommodation of historic differences within such nations peacefully and by agreement and related human rights questions are basic to many of the tensions and much of the instability throughout the globe — and no less so in Northern Ireland.

The role of the Irish Government under the Agreement offers support to nationalists in Northern Ireland in ending that sense of exclusion under which they have lived and in finding solutions to the problems which beset both communities. We also believe the Irish Government's role reflects the recognition by the two Governments, and by the overwhelming majority of the populations of Britain and Ireland, that the nationalist and unionist communities share a common future on the island of Ireland which must rest upon principles of inclusion and accommodation of both traditions.

In saying this, my Government recognises that the Anglo-Irish

The following resolution was adopted by the North American Feis Commission during its annual convention in Cleveland, Ohio, October 17, 1987.

Whereas: Almost two years have elapsed since the signing of the much publicized Anglo-Irish Agreement — better known to the oppressed people in Northern Ireland as the Anglo-Irish Abandonment;

Whereas: The most minimal attempts to redress the causes of Ireland's longest war by the Irish authorities have been rebuffed by an unyielding British Government;

Whereas: There has been no reform of the non-jury one-judge Diplock Courts; the RUC; the strip searching of women political prisoners; the equal employment opportunities for nationalists and the general apartheid society of British occupied Ireland;

Whereas: The campaign to oppose

Agreement has not gained full acceptance in Northern Ireland. We recognise the rights and the sense of identity of unionists. There must, however, be a realistic acceptance that the Agreement is there as part of the political landscape in Northern Ireland. Only in such a climate of realism can meaningful debate take place about future political developments.

In successive years we have called for an end to the campaigns of violence in Northern Ireland. The last year, unfortunately, has seen a continuation of that futile violence which has brought such misery and suffering to the people of the area. The perpetrators of this violence are a tiny minority of the population of Northern Ireland, who do not act on behalf of anybody but themselves. Indeed, their unremitting campaigns of violence and assassination can only add to the mistrust and mutual fear between Irish people of different traditions. Such actions do not bring closer but postpone the day when unity based on reconciliation can take place in Ireland leading to that coming together, under agreed structures, of all the people of diverse traditions in our island.

The Irish Government will continue to work the mechanisms of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. We will remain open to contact with all those in Northern Ireland willing to pursue peaceful, constructive approaches to the problems of the area. We will seek to make progress on the practical level of economic fairness, evenhanded treatment by the security forces and confidence in the administration of justice, all of which deeply affect the ordinary citizen in his or her everyday life. We realise that progress at the overall political level is indispensable to a durable settlement by agreement of the problems of our country as a whole. Thank you, Mr. President.

North American Feis Commission Human Rights Denial In Ireland Addressed By October Convention

the MacBride Principles in the United States by the British and their Uncle Hume surrogates from occupied Ireland has reached frenzied proportions across North America;

Whereas: Joseph P. Doherty in a shameful miscarriage of justice still remains in a United States jail now in his fifth year;

Therefore Be It Resolved: That the North American Feis Commission assembled at their Annual Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, on this 17th day of October, 1987 call upon the Irish Government and all alleged non-unionist parties in Ireland, North and South, to demand that the British Government conform to civilized rule of law in Irish occupied territory;

Be It Resolved: That this reform should include the dissolution of the Diplock Courts; the replacement of the RUC; the publication of the Stalker Report regarding the shoot-to-kill policy, and the inhumane treatment of political prisoners especially the degrading strip searching of women in Mahaberry Jail;

Be It Resolved: That the Irish Government rescind the Anglo-Irish Extradition Treaty forthwith and never, never consider under any circumstances the deliverance of any Irish political offender to that most notorious system of jurisprudence that has been found guilty repeatedly of the torture and the inhumane and degrading treatment of Irish political prisoners;

Be It Resolved: That the Irish Government service notice on the Thatcher Government that the Anglo-Irish Agreement is nothing but a cruel hoax that serves to cement Partition, that abandons the poor, the oppressed and the unemployed, and that the three year review as per agreement shall require major revisions leading to British withdrawal and a United Ireland;

Be It Resolved: That the British and their surrogates from Northeast Ireland cease and desist from their callous campaign in the United States and Canada in opposition to the MacBride Principles;

Be It Resolved: That the United States Attorney General, Edwin Meese, III observe and respect the many decisions of the courts in the United States and the decision of the United States Department of Immigration and Naturalization by allowing Joseph P. Doherty to go to Ireland rather than to the vindictive hands of a British Premier;

Be It Further Resolved: That the freedom of speech so cherished by all Americans be extended to Irish Americans by the United States State Department by allowing visas to Irish Republicans who wish to tell about the true cause of violence in North Ireland — facts which are denied by the Anglo-American media;

Be It Finally Resolved: That copies of the Resolution be sent to the Secretary of State, George Schultz, to Attorney General, Edwin Meese III, to the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to the Canadian Foreign Minister, to An Taoiseach, Charles J. Haughey, to Foreign Minister, Brian Lenihan and to selected Irish and Irish American newspapers.

For 1988 Elections

Bishops Issue Political Responsibility Statement

Reprinted from the "Long Island Catholic."

WASHINGTON (NC) — Declaring that U.S. political choices "are laden with moral content," the U.S. bishops' Administrative Board has issued a "consistent ethic of life" guide to some of the key policy issues it wants Catholics to consider in deciding how to vote in the 1988 general elections.

The board urged voters to examine candidates on a wide range of issues, from abortion to civil rights, from arms control to the U.S. role in foreign conflicts, from health and housing to farm policy, from capital punishment to responsible use of mass media.

The 23-page statement repudiated "the formation of a religious voting bloc" and said the bishops had no intention "to instruct persons on how

Peter King Talks Turkey At Rally

The following is a summary of the remarks made by Peter T. King at a recent Irish Solidarity Day Rally:

The United States cannot be an effective voice for human rights if the American government denies human rights here in our own country.

President Reagan cannot condemn Soviet repression of Russian dissidents as long as Joe Doherty is illegally detained in an American prison.

President Reagan cannot say that we are a nation of laws when his own Attorney General, Edwin Meese, continues to hold Joe Doherty in prison in defiance of court decision after court decision.

President Reagan cannot say he supports freedom fighters as long as he imprisons Joe Doherty — whose only crime was to fight for the freedom of his country against British tyranny.

The tragedy of Joe Doherty is not some story that our parents or grandparents would tell us about, which occurred in days long gone. Nor is it a tragedy that is occurring thousands of miles away over which we have no control.

Joe Doherty is a real person, with real feelings and hopes and dreams and he has a family which suffers each day that he is held illegally in jail.

Joe Doherty is being held here in an American jail by an American President and an American Attorney General and it is our duty as Americans to speak out on his behalf and do all in our power to insure that his rights are protected and that he not be extradited to the barbarous jails of Northern Ireland where he would be tortured and abused.

It is not enough for us to condemn Britain for what it has done in the past and for the injustices it continues to inflict upon the people of Northern Ireland. As Americans, we also have the moral obligation and duty to condemn our own government for carrying out British policy against Joe Doherty in violation of America's constitutional principles. As long as Joe Doherty is imprisoned in America, there is blood on our hands.

they should vote" on particular candidates.

The bishops' public policy role, it said, is to advocate peace and justice and the common good, to promote human rights and denounce their violation, and to "call attention to the moral and religious dimension of secular issues."

MORAL QUESTIONS

Religious questions and themes have been given "increasing visibility" in U.S. political life in the 1980s, the statement said. It said that in the view of the bishops, a primary reason for that "is the centrality of moral questions for a broad range of public policy choices which we face as a nation."

Prepared in September and released Oct. 14, the statement was titled "Political Responsibility: Choices for the Future." Its author, the Administrative Board of the U.S. Catholic Conference, is a group of about 40 bishops that meets twice a year. It is the USCC's highest decision- and policy-making body short of the full assembly of the nation's bishops.

(Bishop McGann is a member of the board by reason of his office as treasurer of the USCC, and Bishop Daly serves as a regional representative.)

The board has been issuing political responsibility statements every four years since 1976. In this year's statement it said the bishops' "efforts in this area are sometimes misunderstood."

"A proper understanding of the role of the Church will not confuse its mission with that of government, but rather see its ministry as advocating the critical values of human rights and social justice."

CONSISTENT ETHIC

For the first time, the statement explicitly referred to "a consistent ethic of life" as "the moral framework from which we address all issues in the political arena."

The phrase "consistent ethic of life" was made popular by Cardinal Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago in efforts to explain the underlying reason why abortion, capital punishment, hunger, poverty, unemployment and the nuclear arms race all share a place on the moral agenda of the Catholic Church.

On many of the policy issues it addressed this year, the board simply reaffirmed or slightly restated the positions it had spelled out in its political responsibility statement before the 1984 elections.

This year it added immigration policy to the list of concerns, with issues surrounding implementation of the 1986 immigration reform law giving new urgency to that area. It dropped energy, an issue that was prominent among public policy concerns in 1984 but has received less attention since then.

KEY ISSUES

Listing, in alphabetical order, key "issues which we believe are important in the national debate during 1988," the board said:

— On abortion, "the right to life is the most basic human right, and it demands the protection of law." The statement urged a constitutional amendment to restore "the right to life for the unborn child" and rejected any public funding of abortion.

— Capital punishment brings with it "erosion of respect for life in our society," is discriminatory in its application, and its use should be rejected, the statement said.

— On civil rights, it said, continuing discrimination because of sex, race, ethnic background or age "constitutes a grave injustice and affront to human dignity. It must be aggressively resisted."

American Heroes Honored

MOBILE, ALABAMA: An American hero, Commodore John Barry, the Father of the American Navy, was honored on Saturday, September 12, by the local division of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. Also remembered at this time by the organization was the poet priest, Father Abram Ryan, for which the Mobile division is named.

The event began at 10 a.m. with the placing of a wreath at the Statue of Father Ryan in Ryan Park, the park bearing his name. The group proceeded with a motorcade to the wharf at the foot of Government Street, where another wreath was tossed into Mobile River in honor of Commodore John Barry. At 6:00 p.m. a banquet was held at Korbet's Restaurant, preceded by a happy hour.

John P. "Jay" Connick, president of the division, accepted a proclamation naming September 12

John Barry Day from Richard Smith, representing Arthur Outlaw, mayor of the city of Mobile. Guest speaker for this occasion was Prier J. "Jay" Higginbotham, director of the Mobile Municipal Archives, world traveler, author of thirteen books, and recipient of five literary awards.

A check was presented to the Catholic Maritime Club in honor of John Barry. Bernard O'Leary was master of ceremony.

— On the economy, it said, principles spelled out in the bishops' 1986 national pastoral, Economic Justice for All, should "guide" U.S. economic life. Creation of jobs with adequate pay remains "the most urgent priority" of domestic economic policy, and the minimum wage should be raised, it said. Poverty ty in the United States "is a social and moral scandal," and dealing with it "is not a luxury . . . It is a moral imperative." Concern for the poor must be a guiding principle in foreign economic policy, it said.

EDUCATION

— On education, funding should be aimed at adequate opportunities for all with special targeting to improve education for the poor and with "equitable tax support" for private as well as public schools so that parents can freely choose their children's schools, the statement said.

— Family life ought to be supported. (Continued on Page Twenty-Three)

Senator D'Amato Backs Immigration Reform

U.S. Senator Alfonse M. D'Amato (R-NY) today called for enactment of legislation that would increase the number of immigrants from Ireland that will be allowed into the United States.

D'Amato is cosponsoring S. 1611, legislation proposed by Senator Edward Kennedy, that would make it easier for those without family members living in the United States to immigrate to this country.

Under current law, 216,000 of the 270,000 visas issued each year must go to people with immediate family members living in the United States as citizens or permanent residents. This requirement has effectively kept Irish immigrants with no immediate family in the U.S. from immigrating here.

"As one whose grandparents came through the Great Hall of Ellis Island in 1905 and 1912, I often wonder what would have happened to them if the present law had been in effect at that time. With no relatives here, they would not have qualified to enter the United States," D'Amato said.

"While family reunification is an important goal, the current system works against those who have no relatives here or come from a nation like Ireland whose great days of immigration are long in the past," the Senator said.

The State Department and the Immigration and Naturalization Service report that the current system adversely affects people seeking to come to America from Ireland and 35 other countries.

"The current system is unfair. By closing the doors of citizenship to people from so many nations, we are depriving ourselves of their great talents, skills, and energy," the Senator said.

D'Amato is cosponsoring S.1611, legislation proposed by Senator Edward Kennedy to create an additional 50,000 visas that would be assigned on a new basis that would give credit for education, skills, and citizenship in countries adversely affected by the present system.

New Job Bias Law Recommended

By HOWELL RAINES

Special to The New York Times

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Nov. 16 — While violence and political conflict seem to run in cycles here, job discrimination has remained a constant and intractable reality.

A new Government study affirmed that unemployment is 2.5 times as high among Roman Catholic men as among men who belong to the Protestant majority. The study documented that there had been little improvement in the employment imbalances under the Fair Employment Act of 1976.

It also showed existing anti-discrimination laws to be a failure and called for new laws to reduce the employment imbalance to 1.5 to 1 within five years.

To Inez McCormack, the candor of the report came as a relief. She says it marks the end of a period when she was "either being regarded as a loony or sectarian for asserting that there was a problem."

As a Protestant campaigning for fair treatment for Catholics, Mrs. McCormack is one of the rare crusaders operating across the sectarian divide here. Mrs. McCormack, whose husband is Catholic, warned that employment reform should not be viewed as a remedy to violence by nationalist paramilitary groups like the Irish Republican Army.

But, she said, progress on jobs could be part of a reconciliation process between Catholics and the Government.

Mrs. McCormack said that the report by the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights, which was set up by Parliament, vindicated the campaign of "continual international pressure" on the Thatcher Government to deal with economic discrimination in its Irish province.

The 43-year-old union official is one of four original signers of the MacBride Principles, a nine-point program for abolition of discrimination against Catholics in Northern Ireland. The principles are named for another sponsor, Sean MacBride of Dublin, a former Irish Foreign Minister and Nobel Peace Prize winner.

To the dismay of the Thatcher Government, the principles since 1986 have prompted five American States and four cities, including New York State and New York City, to adopt legislation intended to pressure Britain, through 24 American-owned companies in Northern Ireland, to adopt fair employment practices.

The gist of the new report is that the British Government must put teeth in its employment laws in Northern Ireland. The report recommends making employers subject to equal-opportunity requirements and employee-grievance procedures.

The Thatcher administration has said it will introduce its employment legislation for Northern Ireland in 1988. Unless the "external pressure" continues until then, Mrs. McCormack said, "the pot will go off the boil."

John Barry Commemoration

Commodore John Barry, the Father of the American Navy, was commemorated on September 13, 1987, in Philadelphia, PA. The day began with a consecrated mass in Old St. Mary's Church, where Barry worshipped. Bishop Lounmuller pontificated. National, state, city as well as military dignitaries followed the officers of the Commodore John Barry Society in the procession, led by the Philadelphia Emerald Pipe Band. After them, came the Commodore Barry Society of Brooklyn, N.Y., led by the Clann Eirann Pipe Band of Brooklyn. Close to 500 people filled the church to overflowing.

Following mass a special service was held in Old St. Mary's graveyard. Wreaths were placed on the graves of Barry and Thomas Fitzsimons, Irish-born signers of the Constitution. A short address by Chairman Montgomery and remarks from Mary Nolan of Brooklyn was given in regular "Irish weather."

The dignitaries and the many Irish Societies were then led in parade by the Philadelphia Emerald Pipe Band to the statue of Commodore Barry at Independence Hall. There, a very large crowd for such a bad day, heard Admiral Albert E. Reider, the new commander of the 4th Naval District, give a stirring account of Barry's career.

Mrs. Ann McGirr sang the Irish and American national anthems. Mayor W. Wilson Goode read a proclamation naming September 13, Commodore Barry Day in Philadelphia. A proclamation by

Gov. Robert Casey was read declaring September 13 as Commodore Barry Day in Pennsylvania. A bugler played taps as Admiral Reider placed a wreath at Barry's statue.

A cocktail reception and dinner followed with 450 in attendance. The Commodore John Barry award was presented to Captain William A. Kerr, Jr., Commander of the Philadelphia Naval Yard. The Captain's address showed his vast knowledge of Barry.

Many dignitaries including Congressman Robert Borski and Martin Rouine, Deputy Consul General of Ireland, were present throughout the day.

Hibernians Mourn Death Of Prof. Robert Meyer

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Dr. Robert T. Meyer, Holder of Chair in Celtic Studies at the Catholic University of America, here, died on October 3, 1987 in Swansea, Wales, apparently of encephalitis. He was 76 years old. Dr. Meyer had been touring Wales following a conference at Oxford University on the early Christian Church era when he was stricken. Dr. Meyer was a philologist, professor of Celtic and an international scholar. He had translated early Christian writings, including St. Athanasius' "The Life of St. Anthony," and Palladius' "Lansiac History," and "Life of St. John Chrysostom." He had lectured at Oxford and Harvard Universities. He was the fourth holder of the Chair in Celtic Studies since it was established at Catholic University by the Ancient Order of Hibernians in 1896, having been preceded by Rev. Richard Henebry, the first holder, Joseph Dunn and Rev. James A. Geary.

A resident of Washington and Harper's Ferry, W. Va., Dr. Meyer was born in Cleveland and graduated from John Carroll University in Ohio, where he also earned a master's degree in classical languages and philology. He earned a doctorate at the University of Michigan in classics and Indo-European linguistics. Before joining the faculty at Catholic University in 1947, he taught at St. Louis University for a year.

A Memorial Mass for Dr. Meyer, who was a Deacon in the Archdiocese of Washington, was celebrated by his Excellency, Archbishop James A. Hickey, Washington Archdiocese, in The National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception on October 13, 1987. Archbishop Hickey was attended by many clergy and religious. The homily was given by Rev. Francis T. Gignac, S.J., chairman, Biblical Studies at Catholic University, who said, in part:

"For Robert Meyer, the texts he studies, the ancient languages he mastered, the critical tools he acquired, all became instruments to enable him to draw out of the written word the living reality behind it. So, too, his worldwide scholarly contacts, his regular participation in international conferences, his prolific correspondence with colleagues."

Representing Catholic University at the Mass were Dr. John K.C. Oh, academic Vice President; Ellen Ginsberg, chair, Department of Modern Languages and Literatures; Dr. George E. Gingras, associate professor of French and former chairman of the Department of Modern Languages; Dr. Robert Mahony, director, Center for Irish Studies; Dr. Joseph M. Sendry, chairman, Department of English and Dr. Charles R. Dechert, professor of Politics.

Ancient Order of Hibernian members in attendance at the Mass included James Herlihy, a member of the AOH National Board, representing AOH National President

Nicholas Murphy; Kathryn A. Back, LAOH, president, District of Columbia Board, who represented LAOH National President Sheila M. Clifford; James J. O'Connor, president emeritus, Emerald Isle Division; Matthew J. Hannon, president, District of Columbia Board; Charles B. Vaughan, former president, District of Columbia Board; John W. Ruddy, Charles F. Gallagher and Frank A. Ryan.

Survivors include his wife, Dorothy Emma Deek Meyer of Washington and Harper's Ferry; two daughters, Carolyn Meyer Johnson of Washington, and Virginia M. Abbott of Berkeley, CA; two sons, Frederick J. Meyer of McLean, VA, and Dr. Andrew P. Meyer of Shepherdstown, WV, and three grandchildren.

Buffalo Saint?

BUFFALO, N.Y.: The Vatican has given permission for the Diocese of Buffalo to begin the process toward canonization of Father Nelson H. Baker, a Buffalo priest who devoted his life to troubled youths. Bishop Edward Head of Buffalo said that, in requesting Vatican permission to start investigating the cause for sainthood, he stressed the relevance of Father Baker's life and ministry.

Monsignor Nelson Henry Baker, familiarly known as "Father Baker," was born on February 16, 1841 in Buffalo, New York, USA. His father was Lutheran, his mother Catholic. After his early education in public schools, he went into business. In 1868, he resumed his education at Canisius College, Buffalo, as one of its first students. He entered Our Lady of Angels Seminary at Niagara University, New York, in 1870, and was ordained a diocesan priest on March 19, 1876.

For five years he served as Assistant Pastor at Lackawanna, then as curate in Corning, New York (then part of the Buffalo Diocese). In 1882, he was recalled to Lackawanna as Superintendent of the Institution destined to become Our Lady of Victory Homes of Charity, with an orphanage, industrial school, home for infants, facilities for unwed mothers, and maternity hospital.

Father Baker was named Vicar General of the Buffalo Diocese in 1902, a Domestic Prelate in 1905, and later raised to the rank of Prothonotary Apostolic. He promoted devotion to the Eucharist and Our Lady of Victory. He built the Basilica of Our Lady of Victory, which was consecrated in 1926. Father Baker administered the Basilica Parish with the adjacent Homes of Charity, for the rehabilitation of countless underprivileged men, women and children, until late in life. Father Baker died on July 29, 1936 in Lackawanna, New York.

In the Summer of 1987, the Congregation for the Causes of the Saints approved the initiation of Father Baker's cause and confirmed the title "Servant of God — Nelson Baker."

Dear Column Readers:

I regret to inform you that Robert T. Meyer, Professor Emeritus of Celtic Studies at CUA, has recently passed away. Both CUA and The Ancient Order of Hibernians will miss his companionship and academic expertise. As a former student of Dr. Meyer's I am proud to be able to take over the duties of this column, which he helped to found.

Currently I am a doctoral candidate in Comparative Literature at CUA. One of my areas of concentration is Irish Studies, especially language and literature. Part of my program involved an internship with Bord na Gaeilge, the Irish state agency for planning official policy on Irish and culture.

While I was in Dublin last spring, I was also a Visiting Scholar at the Celtic School of the Dublin Institute for Advanced Studies. Part of my language training had me living with Irish-speaking families on Nweenish Island, Co. Galway, and in the Blackrock area of Dublin.

Q. Could you please tell me something on the origin and meaning of my family name, Gavin? Mr. Thomas D. Gavin, Dracut, MA

A. The modern names Gavin and Gavan are related and derive from the Irish names, O Gaibhin and O Gabhain, respectively. The O, which like Mac and Mag, means son of, fell into disuse in the early 17th century. In the early 15th century the name appeared in south-west Cork and spread into other Munster counties. In 1528 Gavin of Ballynerine, Co. Limerick, rebelled against the oncoming Tudor Plantations, which were well under way in 1534 in Ulster. Still, it was common for Irish nobles to flex their muscles against any established authority. The Irish loved freedom. There were several O Gavins in Co. Westmeath in the 15th century and these probably formed a minor clan. These might have migrated from Connacht where the name has been popular since the 15th century. The Gavins have had a long occupation in Co. Mayo where the name is most popular now. There has always been a steady movement of people between Cos. Galway, Mayo, and Roscommon depending upon the viability of farming and fishing. Since the Great Hunger many from this area, in particular, have emigrated to the United States.

Q. Could you please tell me the origin of Neary, my family's name? Mr. Joseph E. Neary, Kalspell, MT

A. In Irish the name is O Naradhgaigh which means skillful. The O, like Mac and Mag means son of. But the O is rarely used in modern English variants of the name. More common, now, are Neary, Nary and Nary. Currently, the name is popular in the northern counties of Connacht, Co. Louth, and Co. Dublin (where almost all Irish names are found). Another Irish form of the name, O Narailge, was used by a Father Nicholas who lived in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. And Edmond O Nary, of Clongreagh, Co. Roscommon, is called an important man in the 16th century "Composition Book of Connacht." Also during the 16th century are many occurrences of the name in monastic writings from Cos. Roscommon and Leitrim, and there are a few from Cos. Meath and Kildare. One of the more distinguished O Narys was Reverend Cornelius Nary (1658-1738). He was born in Co. Kildare, but held high positions in the Church in Germany, and was the Head of Irish College in Paris. In 1703, he declined the position of Bishop of Kildare and instead became a prominent parish priest of St. Michael's Dublin. Much of the information on early Irish names is Church related because most of the records are Church documents written by and usually about Church officials.

Q. Could you please tell me how Clew Bay, Co. Mayo, got its name? Ms. Julia Maxey, Washington, DC

A. Clew Bay got its name partly by accident, partly by mapmakers' mistakes, and partly by some Tower of London record official's error. The bay is dotted with hundreds of small isles and ancient maps actually showed the bay filled with small dots representing these isles. In 1426 a mapmaker decided against using dots; instead he printed the Roman numeral CCLXX in the bay because he must have counted 360 dots on his original map. When later 15th century mapmakers were drawing new maps, they didn't understand the significance of the CC-CLX and dropped the initial two C's. A 16th century mapmaker didn't realize the CLX was a numeral. He thought that CLX was an abbreviation for an Irish word. Because Irish doesn't have the letter X, and since he tried to reconstruct as closely as possible what he thought could have been the Irish word, he printed CLEME on his map. The 17th century British government commissioned its Tower officials to draw an authoritative and accurate map of Ireland printed with English words. The officials didn't know what CLEME meant, but knew the ME produced a W sound; so they printed the "English" words Clew Bay.

NOTA BENE: If you want an immediate answer, please send a stamped, self-addressed envelope and a check made out in the amount of ten dollars ($10.00) to Mr. William T. Malone. Mr. Malone is doctoral candidate in Irish Studies at Catholic University and has been a visiting scholar at the Dublin Institute for Advanced Studies.

Hibernian Sports

Mike Heslin

BINGHAMTON, NY

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans!

Mea Culpa. My apologies to Nick Murphy, national president, for missing his dinner; also to Sheila Clifford, national ladies president, for missing her dinner. Yours truly spent 25 days of the month of October in the hospital. It started out being gall bladder surgery, which seems to be routine these days. Then complications set in. YR thought somebody had planted 9 yards of concrete on his chest. This is a classic symptom of angina, which is a heart problem. EKG's and other tests done by YR's cardiologist eliminated heart problems, thank God.

The chest pain turned out to be a collapsed lung. Why, turned out to be a "Who Dun It?" YR found himself face to face, actually abdomen to machine, with the latest in medical technology, cat scans, echo grams, etc. The surgeons discovered that YR had two abscesses on his liver. They tried antibiotics but YR's system did not respond. The two abscesses were too advanced. So, it was decided to do more surgery to remove them. It was that or death. To make a long story short, YR's now like a road map with all these red scars crossing it.

Seriously, YR would like to thank the surgeon who saved his life, Dr. Dominick Artuso, his brothers and sisters who supported him, and his wife during this ordeal, his kids, two of whom are away in college, for calling and coming; his son Gary Owen, for coming down on the weekends to cheer up a very sick father, the members of his division, who visited him during this time and the other members who took time to send cards and letters, just to say they were thinking of him. Also Tom Carroll, a local talk show personality who visited and called to check on a sick friend. May God reward you for your kindness and compassion.

Baseball: Being in the hospital during the league play-offs and World Series gave YR a different perspective. It was like watching the games in isolation. Outside of two nurses, there was no one with whom to discuss the games. YR's roommate was a born-again Christian who preferred the PTL Club. YR's had no bets or pools to worry about. There was nothing but the games. YR must admit Minnesota was not his choice in the play-offs or the Series. Sentimentally, he liked the St. Louis Cardinals for the simple reason that the first Series he can recall listening to on the radio was between the St. Louis Cardinals and the St. Louis Browns.

Speaking of the Cardinals, Ozzie Smith evokes memories of past great eras in St. Louis when the Gas House Gang played. YR was impressed by the Minnesota fans. Why can't fans elsewhere behave instead of acting like animals? Which brings up the Minnesota relief pitcher whose name begins with "B"; YR found him to be much like his roommate, uncouth! Anyway, congrats to the Minnesota Twins for winning the Series and to their Mgr. Tom Kelly, for being the youngest to do so.

Football: The strike has come and gone! Many fans claim it's hard to sympathize with a guy making $60,000/week who is walking a picket line. The main issue was free agency. YR thinks you will be seeing and hearing more on this as the season winds down. YR would not be surprised to see some player reps and other outspoken advocates during the strike, playing elsewhere if at all.

The replacement games? They were football! In the broadest stretch of the imagination, yes they were! The next time, YR suggests that the owners put the cheerleaders out there. At least, it would be different and interesting to watch and the owners could still call it professional football.

College Football: Notre Dame is off to a good start. Coach Lou Holtz is really getting 100% out of these kids! Yes, even though some people say these guys are adult, let's face it: they are somebody's sons, possibly yours. Tim Brown is in contention for the Heisman Trophy. Also, ND is being looked over for a possible bowl bid.

Syracuse is also off to a good start and also a bowl bid. At the game with Pitt, there were no less than 11 bowl reps. watching the game. Interesting? Boston College is hanging in there this year. Holy Cross has a candidate for the Heisman Trophy.

All this brings to mind a discussion YR had with some local sports fans. On the collegiate football scoreboard, there have been some lopsided scores with the winning team scoring 50, 60 or even 70 points. When YR was in HS and college, there was something called good sportsmanship. No coach would embarrass another coach or team by running up the score! They would empty their benches and give some playing time to the kids who were loyal and faithful, who came to practice, who scrimmaged, but were not good enough to start. These kids would get their reward in games against weak opponents. The sportswriters of that day found nothing wrong with this. These sportswriters wrote about sportsmanship and fair play. Today, sportsmanship seems to be out of vogue, as is loyalty to one's company. Today's Yuppie sportswriters feel, if you play a weak opponent and don't run up the score, the coach and the team is suspect and a wimp. These sportswriters won't give them a high rating! YR thinks this stinks! Then again, this past Election Day, he also found out the term "Irish Catholic Democrat" is a myth in some counties in NY. So much for YR's old fashion ideas!

Hockey: The NHL suspended a Philadelphia Flyer for 15 games for a deliberate cross check on a N.Y. Ranger's neck. If this same action took place on the street, he could be arrested for assault with a weapon and assault with intent to kill, not to mention lesser charges. If the hockey played in the Olympics and the Canadian Cup can be without mayhem, why does the NHL condone it? If that's the type of fan the NHL wishes to attract, YR isn't among them. YR loves hard-hitting, clean-passing hockey where brains and finesse are more important than brawn and brawls!

A Christmas Wish: May you find the Peace and Happiness of Christ this Holy and Holiday Season. Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. Send your cards and letters to P.O. Box 156 ESS, Binghamton, N.Y. 13902.

Bishops' Statement

ted and defended by public policy and it should be a key point of reference for evaluating "all programs, policies and services," it said.

— On food and agriculture, it said, foreign and domestic policies should aim at securing the basic "right to eat." Policies should promote "small and moderate-sized family farms" and help preserve natural resources. "We support legislation to protect the rights of farm workers," it added.

— "Health care is a basic human right," it said, and a "national health insurance program" would be the best way to assure adequate access to health care for all.

— Housing is also "a basic human right," and more of the nation's resources should be devoted to adequate housing for all.

— On human rights around the world, U.S. policy should "strengthen and expand international mechanisms" to protect rights, and "greater weight" should be given to rights concerns in the conduct of U.S. foreign policy.

— On immigration and refugee policy, priorities include resolving the fate of resident illegal aliens who do not qualify for amnesty under the 1986 immigration law, improving working and living conditions of migrant workers, dealing with refugees in "a spirit of generosity," and establishing a "safe-haven policy" for "people who are in temporary need of special consideration."

— On the mass media, the statement said that after an era of massive deregulation, new legislation is needed to "restore the public accountability of broadcasters, cable operators and others who use the public resource of the airwaves." The bishops want electronic distribution of indecent or pornographic materials limited to the extent legally possible, and they oppose contraceptive advertisements or public service announcements as an infringement of "the right of parents to teach their children about responsible sexuality."

— On regional conflicts in Central America, the Middle East and southern Africa, the board repeated moral concerns spelled out in previous political responsibility statements.

On Central America, the board called for a negotiated political settlement, ruling out outside military intervention or assistance and calling for resolution of human rights and economic problems as a basic need for peace in the region.

On the Middle East, it reiterated the bishops' concern for protection of human and religious rights and the need to develop a "long-term resolution" to the deep conflicts dividing the region.

The apartheid racial policies of South Africa have "long been of grave moral concern to the world," the board said. It urged a combination of government policy, corporate activity and private initiatives to turn South Africa away from apartheid.

The "Digest" sadly notes the omission of Ireland, and her problems, a land that gave so many of its sons and daughters to the Church.

THE CHRISTMAS WREATH

Did you know that the Christmas wreath is of Irish origin? In ancient Celtic times, garlands of holly and ivy were woven around doors and windows to ward off the killing cold of winter. The Celts believed that these leaves had such magic because they remained green while all else died. That belief carried into Christian times as a tradition, purely for decorative purposes.

In the penal times, when the Catholic religion was forbidden, a midnight Mass would be celebrated at Christmas by an outlawed clergyman in the home of a parishioner brave enough to host the celebration. The location of the priest and the home were kept secret until Mass time and then the faithful were signalled by the appearance of a lighted candle in the window of the designated home.

Once the signal was given, candles would appear in every window in the parish to confuse any who might attempt to interfere with the Mass. The candle eventually became part of the tradition and so it is that today's Christmas Wreath owes its origin to the Irish Christmas candle placed in a window encircled with holly and ivy to send out the message, "The Lord is in this house tonight."

Ladies Maryland State News

The 1987 Baltimore Irish Festival held on September 12 and 13 was a grand affair. Lauretta Letke and Marguerite Roberts, LAOH co-chairpersons, deserve a standing ovation for the "Gardens of Ireland" theme.

Approaching the Hibernian area, one almost became breathless over the colorful beauty of the potted and hanging plants, door and wall hangings, wooden duck planters, silk flower arrangements, ceramic leprechauns and helium balloons.

The weekend "Home" of the busy-fair painters was a white wooden gazebo. A second white wrought iron gazebo, decorated with hanging greenery, lights and colorful plants and furnished with old fashioned ice cream parlor tables and chairs, was so inviting that the Irish Ambassador to the U.S. and his wife relaxed there while enjoying their lunch.

Many compliments were received from visitors, as well as other vendors on the attractiveness of the exhibit presented by the Ladies Ancient Order of Hibernians.

A beautifully framed original color print by famed Irish artist, Edmund Sullivan, will go to some lucky person in a fund raiser by the Maryland State Board. Contact person is Eileen McGinn (301-435-4282), who will be more than happy to accommodate you.

The Maryland Education Assistance Fund Committee is accepting applications for the 1988-1989 school year. The minimum award will be $250.

Division 18 played host to the Westchester County Annual weekend at East Durham, and a large contingent attended the Testimonial Dinner Dance honoring National President Nick Murphy at the Quality Inn in Nyack. This Mount Kisco division also honored two outstanding members, Rose McKenna and Jim O'Keefe at a dinner dance in October.

LADIES Massachusetts News

Springfield Division Eight held a delicious Pot Luck Supper prior to their October meeting. Hibernians have a reputation for being great cooks and this affair was no exception.

Following the business meeting a very successful Auction was conducted under the chairmanship of Cathy Joyal, assisted by Sr. Patricia James, S.S.J., and Sr. Imelda Maria, S.S.J. Many beautiful articles were sold in a live auction. A variety of items were on display for write-in bids and a table of gifts for a silent auction. This all contributed to an interesting and profitable evening.

Massachusetts has suggested that because there are various Divisions across the state bearing the same number, the division be identified also by location in all letters or communications from all levels of the order.

LADIES Ohio News

The Buckeye State is enlarging and enjoying its new statewide newsletter, to which all divisions are sending news of their happenings. Outstanding was the traveling by air of State President Marie Cooke, Hamilton County, National Historian Kathy Linton, Summit County, and Margaret Judge, Summit County, to attend the national board meeting in September. In October Kathy and Colleen O'Connor flew to the Testimonial Dinner for LAOH President Sheila Clifford in Waterbury, Connecticut.

Past State President Dorothy Purdy, Summit County, has taken on the task of putting together an all Ohio LAOH photo album for the national convention next July; she urges all to send photos taken at the state convention and other division activities for inclusion.

A new State Membership Chair is going into action. She is Mary Kay Mulavey, Jefferson County. New members are coming in across the state and this continues to be a priority consideration of Ohio Hibernians.

Connecticut LAOH News

The Waterbury Ladies, Division 66, held their election for 1988. Mrs. Jacquelyn Reilly was elected president; Mrs. Helen Shields, vice president; Mrs. Linda Downey, recording secretary; Mrs. Rosemary McGrath, financial secretary; Mrs. Pat McGrath, treasurer; Mrs. Linda Gallivan, historian; Mrs. Helen Carroll, missions; Mrs. Helen Kiely, mistress; and Colleen Lister, sentinel. Immediately following the election, the members participated in a Living Rosary.

Plans were completed for the Annual Christmas Banquet. Gifts will be collected for infants and children at Waterbury and St. Mary's Hospitals.

STATE NEWS: Florida

On Saturday, October 1987, the AOH Florida State Board of Officers held its fall meeting at the Ramada Inn, Palm Bay.

State President John Boyle presided and was assisted by State Vice President John Cullinan, State Secretary Robert Schneider and State Chaplain Rev. Fr. Gerald Grace. The topics discussed among the thirty state officers and state committee chairmen present, were membership, state by-laws, national constitution, procedure in forming new divisions, the MacBride Principles issue and the extradition situation.

At the conclusion of each discussion, State President Boyle appointed a committee chairman to represent the State of Florida AOH in resolving the foregoing topics. Father Grace gave the members a very interesting and informative current insight talk on the MacBride Principles and the extradition situation.

State Editor Nick Schneider made an appeal to all division presidents to send him information, with pictures, regarding the activities and accomplishments of their respective divisions, for appearance in this column. Any division president who did not get the word can write to Nick Schneider, 240 Eyre Ave., Merritt Is., FL 32953.

Near the conclusion of the meeting, President Boyle, in accordance with the AOH National Constitution, discussed "Associate Membership." It was agreed that all the divisions in Florida will entertain having associate members.

On Saturday evening, an Irish Night was held in the Parish Hall of St. Joseph's Church in Palm Bay. Approximately 200 attended. The featured entertainment was a group from the Gaelic School of Irish Step Dancing, under the direction of Kathleen Randeau. Kathleen was born in Dublin and migrated to Hartford, CT, and subsequently to Florida. In Florida she has schools in Palm Bay, Ft. Pierce, Orlando, Ft. Lauderdale and Palm Beach. The ages of the dancers are from kindergarten to upper adult.

On Sunday approximately sixty people attended an extraordinary brunch at the Ramada Inn.

The Florida State Board of officers will meet again, sometime in February, 1988, probably in Clearwater.

On October 21 Brevard County Division 1 President Jack Fagan called a special meeting of his officers. The issue was the formation of a Division 3 in the County and the invited guest was Jim McNamara. Jim resides in the nearby area of the cities of Rockledge and Cocoa. At the present time Jim has the names of men eligible for the AOH, but not enough to form a division. Consequently, Division 1 is going to work with Jim in achieving this goal.

If there are any AOH members who know persons residing in the Rockledge, Cocoa, Port St. John and Titusville areas, who qualify for membership in the order, they can contact Jim McNamara at 636-3308.

One of our goals here in Florida is to bring a bit of the "Auld Sod" to the state. We can do this only through membership and helping one another.

STATE NEWS: Texas Deep In the Heart of Texas

The Texas Hibernians gathered in San Antonio for their 5th Bi-Annual State Convention. The Convention held on Saturday, September 12, 1987, was coincident with the Holy Father's visit on Sunday. The Convention was opened with a Texas-size welcome by Mayor Henry B. Cisneros of San Antonio.

The keynote speaker was National President Nick Murphy, who emphasized the need for Hibernians to come to the aid of the estimated 200,000 illegal Irish immigrants in the United States. He also called on the Texas Hibernians to launch a campaign to have the "MacBride Principles" legislated into law in Texas. The new State President, Pat Patton, has appointed Past President Jim Brown and Kevin O'Connell to the Political Education Committee, which will coordinate the campaign.

The new state officers were all elected by acclamation. They are, State President Patrick Patton; Vice President Michael O'Grady; Secretary Larry Hogan; and Treasurer James Heaney. The Humble Texas Division won the election for the 1989 convention site.

Two significant resolutions were addressed — a resolution to allow women as members was defeated and a resolution to endorse Past President Bill Hines as a candidate for national director was passed by unanimous vote.

The Texas Lady Hibernians elected Joanne Bluntzes for state president, Mary Kelly as vice president, Louise McCown as secretary, and Billie DeSheller as treasurer. The new state by-laws were adopted. The keynote speaker was Sheila Clifford, National President of Ladies AOH, who stressed the need for more new members and divisions.

William J. Burke

NEW YORK, NY: William J. Burke, Senior Vice President of the Bank of Ireland, has been selected as Grand Marshal for the largest parade in the world on the greatest day for the Irish, St. Patrick's Day, March 17, 1988. Burke will lead 100,000 strong up Fifth Avenue, as did his predecessors, for the 227th march in honor of St. Patrick, Ireland's patron saint. The great day starts with the traditional Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral at 9:00 A.M., and the parade begins to roll at 11:30 A.M.

The coveted honor was bestowed on Bill by the majority of delegates to the election of the Grand Marshal over his competitor, Doherty Hayden Cudahy. Grand Marshal Burke will be escorted by twelve elected Aides, ten from the County Board jurisdictions of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, one from the United Irish Counties Association, and one from the Grand Council of Emerald Societies of New York.

Bill Burke, who resides in Yonkers, New York, is a native of Tubbercurry, County Sligo. His wife, Kathleen Beglan, is from County Longford. They are proud parents of four children, Bill, Jr., a student at Iona College; Elizabeth and Michele, both attending Fordham University, and Robert, a junior high student in New Rochelle.

Grand Marshal Burke is currently President of the Co. Sligo Association, and has received many honors for his lifetime commitment and outstanding achievements on behalf of the Irish American community. Organizations which have recognized Sons of St. Patrick; 150th AOH Celebration, Chief Brabon of the AOH Great Irish Fair, and the Irish American Unity Conference.

Burke is a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians Division One of Yonkers, and has served as a delegate to six National and New York AOH conventions.

The twelve Aides elected to serve the Grand Marshal are: Fr. Kevin O'Brien (Manhattan); Mary O'Donoghue (Bronx); Mary Francis O'Leary (Brooklyn); Timothy O'Sullivan (Queens); Thomas J. McSorley (Staten Island); Kitty Bagnell Geissler (Westchester); Bernadette Hartnett (Rockland); Patrick Quinn (Orange); Hugh J. Forde (Nassau); John Flaherty (Suffolk); Kathleen Mulvey (United Irish Counties); and Pete Casella (Emerald Societies).

Irish-American Presidential Forum '88 Set for March 16 on Fordham Campus

Terming it "the natural time to focus on Irish issues," Assemblyman John C. Dearie (D-Bronx), joined by other Irish-American leaders, has set Wednesday, March 16 for the first "Irish-American Presidential Forum '88," where candidates will be given a singular opportunity to outline their positions on the six point Irish-American Political Agenda at Fordham University in the Bronx.

"The eyes and ears of 43 million Irish-Americans should be turned to the Forum that day," Dearie said, "so that candidates' positions can be heard, understood and spread to an ethnic group whose issues have too long been ignored in past presidential campaigns."

He said every major Irish-American organization in the United States will be represented at the Forum, culminating five years of effort by Irish-American groups to define an agenda and hear directly each candidate's views on these key Irish issues.

Letters were recently sent to all major candidates in both parties inviting them to participate in the Forum. In the letters, Dearie outlined the six points that make up the Irish-American Political Agenda, which are:

- The appointment of a Special U.S. Envoy to Northern Ireland
- Legislation embracing the MacBride Principles of Fair Employment

—U.S. immigration policies for the Irish

- U.S. visa policies for the Irish
- The U.S.-U.K. Extradition Treaty

—U.S. aid to Ireland.

Dearie stressed to the candidates the importance the Forum could have to their campaigns.

"Over the next two months," he wrote, "every Irish organization, through newsletters and national media, will highlight the importance of the Forum and convey candidate positions on each of the six agenda items."

Dearis said an added incentive for the candidates to attend the Forum was the opportunity the next day to march in New York City's St. Patrick's Day Parade. He also pointed out that key presidential primaries in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania — states with large Irish-American populations — will be held shortly after the Forum.

"The candidates cannot afford to overlook the impact nor the importance the Forum holds for them and the Irish-American community as well," Dearnle said. He told the candidates that Irish-Americans had succeeded in recent years in obtaining highly visible and tangible political accomplishments, most notably the imposition of the MacBride Principles in a number of states.

"In three short years we have mobilized a national effort urging states to adopt MacBride Principles, which restrict states from investing money in U.S. companies doing business in Northern Ireland which discriminate against minority Catholic employees," Dearie said. He noted already, New York, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey and Massachusetts have adopted the Principles and that other states were considering similar legislation.

National Irish-American organizations sponsoring the Forum include: The Ancient Order of Hibernians, Irish-American Unity Conference, Grand Council of Emerald Societies, United Irish Counties, American-Irish Congress, Irish-American Labor Coalition, Irish Northern Aid, Irish National Caucus, Gaelic Leagues, Westchester Irish Committee, American-Irish Political Education Committee, Irish-Immigration Reform Movement and other affiliate groups.

Dearie said seating at the Forum will be limited to 700 and that tickets would be distributed through participating groups.

New Office in Washington To Champion Irish Issues

The National Board of the Ancient Order of Hibernians — the oldest and largest Irish Catholic lay organization in America — announces the opening of an office in Washington, D.C., effective December 1, 1987. The office will have regular business hours, a 24-hour phone service and will be initially staffed by trained volunteers operating under the auspices of Mr. Joseph A. Roche, National Chairman, Political Education Committee.

This is a first step in a three-year plan to return the voice of Irish Americans to Washington and to restore to the national political agenda issues of concern to them. We will be joined by other Irish American organizations and work in conjunction with them to give full expression to our ideas regarding the conflict in Ireland, Irish immigration, State Department denial of visas to elected Irish officials, as well as greater economic and cultural

Birmingham Six Observer Appointed

National AOH President Nick Murphy announced that Mr. Robert Roche of the firm of Roche, Corrigan, McCoy and Bush in Albany will, acting as an observer, monitor the "Birmingham Six" decision due later this month.

Mr. Murphy stated, "The legal and human rights experience of Mr. Roche will be invaluable in determining whether justice will be done to the six Irishmen arrested and imprisoned for 13 years for the Birmingham pub bombings."

Murphy stated further that "This decision will have far reaching implications for Irish-Americans' understanding of English tyranny and prejudice, and for their demands of Congress in the coming year." The AOH will be joined in the effort by the Irish-American Unity Conference and the Irish-American Labor Coalition.

Murphy concluded, "Americans know well the tragedy of Enniskillen but we also wish them to know the tragedy of the Birmingham Six and the reasons for militancy."

Mr. Roche is a former county attorney in Albany, a member of AOH Division 5 in Albany. He is married to the former Susan Henry and the father of five children.

President Murphy Issues Urgent Action Directive

AOH National President Nick Murphy began the new year by sending an "urgent action message" to all Division Presidents on the subject of Immigration legislation. His appeal follows:

There are an estimated 150,000 Irish citizens in the U.S. today with illegal status.

The passage of strict immigration laws in 1986 has created grave problems for the Irish illegals, and for the young Irish people desiring to emigrate and find a new life in America.

The state of the economy in Ireland and the demographic anomaly (more than 50 percent under age 25) present a bleak future for many of the energetic young Irish.

In keeping with our tradition the National Board of the AOH has adopted a prominent, responsible position of advocacy for the cause of these unfortunate Irish citizens. We have pursued an active program of direct legislative liaison with members of Congress in cooperation with several other Irish-American organizations.

The Immigration bills currently in the House of Representatives and the Senate are undergoing revision

President's Message

By Nicholas Murphy, National President

The 27th day of November 1987, was another dark day in the history of divided Ireland. On that day An Taoiseach, Charles J. Haughey, in Leinster House, moved for adoption of an extradition treaty with the so-called "United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland" (the "UK").

The real issue regarding this extradition treaty concerns not fine points of law, but the welfare of those people whom the Dublin government insists are Irish citizens. Those most immediately affected are generally the population of those six of the divided Irish Province of Ulster's nine counties known as "Northern Ireland," all of whom have the right to apply for Irish passports issued in Dublin. In particular, this decision affects those Irish citizens who stand or who have stood before the bar of British "justice."

Someone has a faulty memory. This writer recalls the noble nationalistic pronouncements of Charlie Haughey, Brian Lenihan and Fianna Fail while in opposition. Personal assurances were received from Charlie Haughey, himself, that extradition was not on.

ENNISKILLEN
Then there was the tragedy at Enniskillen. The explosion and subsequent deaths at Enniskillen, though on a smaller scale, reminded one of the bombings in Dublin some years ago, bombings which were used so conveniently by the government of the day to justify changing the rules of evidence and introduce repressive reforms into the Irish legal system. The hand of the British SAS "Dirty Tricks Squad" was seen behind the Dublin bombings; the same was initially suspected at Enniskillen. Then came the admission that an IRA unit was responsible for an action that cannot be justified under any code of armed conflict!

The issue at Enniskillen is not extradition. That is, not until the Leinster House politicians get their hands on it. The hallmark of government in Dublin during the present troubles (i.e., since 1969) seems to be government by the last crisis. Thus, once the West-British crowd took up the cry for national self-chastisement over the Enniskillen bombing, it became a matter of mass hysteria swelling the ranks and thence being led to curry approval in London (where else?) by giving "extradition" to the Brits.

The theory is, of course, that when the six-counties becomes too hot for an IRA man, he scarpers off to sanctuary in the twenty-six. While that may have obtained in a very few cases of very well-known Republicans (e.g., Joe Cahill, Daithi O'Connell, etc.) as a general rule it is not a valid analysis in that the ongoing resistance to English rule in northeast Ireland is self-sustaining. That is to say that the IRA-guerrilla is a "fish that swims in a friendly sea" in the North.

THE GENTLEMAN DOTH PROTEST TOO MUCH

In any case, Charlie Haughey's speech moving extradition mentioned Enniskillen again, and again, and again, ad nauseum, as if some great national catharsis were required to remove what, in the emotion of the moment, was somehow perceived as a collective national guilt. The gentleman doth protest too much. (Quite how a government which has already outlawed the IRA, suspended the civil liberties of Republicans under the Offences Against the State Act and Section 31 of the Broadcast Act, and set up special political courts to try Republicans, could possibly be responsible for the IRA's actions, much less for its tragic mistakes, is something that must require the perspective of a seat in Leinster House.)

Charlie Haughey's speech was even more remarkable for what it did not say — since the subject was extradition, specifically the extradition of Irish citizens to the tender mercies of the English judicial system and the English penal system.

ENGLISH INJUSTICE
Before the Enniskillen tragedy all parties had agreed that there must be some reform of the Diplock Court system in "Northern Ireland" before extradition could be considered. Did the bombing at Enniskillen remove the stink from a system of judicial injustice wherein non-jury courts sentence imagined political offenders

A Pocket Full of Miracles

BY HARRY MCGUIRK

God is good and miracles do happen!

It was 5 a.m. the other morning. I had an urgent message for Father McVerry, S.J. He is the priest who looks after the homeless children of Ireland. My message to him was "short and sweet." The Irish Government through the Minister for Youth and Sports, Mr. Fahey, who was here in the U.S. visiting, had issued a statement in response to a question by Ancient Order of Hibernian leaders. Jack Irwin, past president of New York State Hibernians, called me with the glad tidings and suggested that I should have the honor of informing Father McVerry that his mission would be getting recognition from the Irish Government, and that he would get an annual grant to help him with his work. There was a long pause on the phone after I told him this and then he said, "That's a miracle. God bless the Irish Americans."

It was a little more than a year ago that I first met Father Peter and his underprivileged children. With economic disaster facing the country, cutbacks had taken away his funding and he was left helpless. Disastrous consequences would result. The unfortunate children in his care would have to go back out on the streets. He was heartbroken.

Ireland over the years had built up an image of being a land of full and plenty and in the minds of the Irish Americans a concept of Disney World seems to prevail. How could anyone explain that there are homeless children in Ireland living out rough? Many of these children appeal to Fr. McVerry for help. To them he is the Good Shepherd. "How many are out there?" I asked him. His reply was, "No one knows for sure, maybe a few hundred. Later official reports commissioned by the government and leaked to the press claimed there were 800 living rough in Dublin alone. Looking at Father McVerry I thought, what an impossible situation. What Irish American would believe that such a disaster could overtake children in Ireland. The only hope that I could offer was to have Father McVerry come to the states and meet the Irish leadership in New York to explain this unusual situation.

In the old days there were places like Artane, a vocational training school where delinquent boys could learn a skill. Such schools were under the direction of the Irish Christian Brothers and were tough, no-nonsense schools. Corporal punishment was acceptable in those days. But the Christian Brothers did a good job. Religious vocations being what they are today in Ireland make places like Artane extinct.

With the help of Pat Hanrahan, one of the top people in Aer Lingus, Father McVerry was able to come to America twice. With many efforts by many good people such as Jack Irwin, past president of the New York State Hibernians, up to date we have forwarded $22,000 to Father McVerry's mission with more money pledged.

We have just returned from Ireland where we spent Christmas with Father McVerry and the children. "It's been a miracle, Harry," Father told me over a cup of tea. Some of the children have grown big and tall now and as they reach working age he worries a great deal about them. They've had little or no schooling. Many have lived in a bygone for years. They have no skills with which to earn a living.

Within the Irish community in the United States top professional people are abundant. Would they lend their expertise by way of advice to Father McVerry? They must remember that these children have no background. Job opportunities are not readily available to them. But as an act of compassion to unfortunate Irish children, using Father McVerry's mission as a pilot scheme, perhaps a solution could be forthcoming.

We've told you about two miracles concerning these children. Do we dare hope for a third?

"And all of the children of this nation shall be cherished equally," said Padraig Pearse in 1916.

If you wish to contact Fr. McVerry, write to Harry McGuirk, Box 222, Rockaway Park, N.Y. 11694. McGuirk is New York State AOH Deputy Chairman for the Homeless Children of Ireland.

150 Students To Experience The 'Irish Way'

ST. PAUL, MN — A summer in Ireland will be the "prize" for the 150 American high school students from all over the U.S. who take part in the Irish American Cultural Institute's 13th annual IRISH WAY Program, which is now open for applications.

The IRISH WAY, which runs from July 4 through Aug. 11, provides American teenagers with a comprehensive introduction to Ireland. They study Irish history and literature in a relaxed atmosphere, travel around the country, and are "adopted" by an Irish family during the program's "home stay." They are also exposed to traditional Irish arts and sports and participate in a wide variety of social, recreational and cultural activities.

Each student sees a play at one of Dublin's top theatres, for example, attends a match of Ireland's fast-paced national sport of hurling, and dances at ceilidh (traditional Irish dances). Students can also play in friendly sports matches against Irish teenagers and put on their own amateur talent shows and skits.

The program's home base in the Republic of Ireland is a secondary school or Gormanston, 25 miles north of Dublin and very near the Irish Sea. The school's beautiful 51-acre estate includes modern recreational facilities, extensive gardens, an ancient yew walk, and a castle and is located in one of Ireland's most historic areas. By sharing Gormanston with teenagers from various European countries, IRISH WAY participants also have the opportunity to learn about more than one culture during the program.

Many of the students applying for the IRISH WAY already know its value because their brothers and/or sisters are some of the program's more than 1,300 alumni. There are 160 families with at least two IRISH WAY graduates, more than 40 families with three or more, and two families that have sent five members on the program.

The Irish American Cultural Institute, which administers the program, is a non-profit, non-political, non-religious organization with members in all 50 states and 26 countries. It also sponsors the Trees

The column, entitled "In History's Pages," will be written by veteran Irish American journalist, John J. Concannon.

Publisher Grimes noted: "Over the years, John Concannon has often written for the Echo, always in an informative and lively style. We are happy to have him writing for us on a regularly-scheduled basis, and writing on a theme that is dear to all of us — the history of the Irish in America, their struggles and strivings, their activities and accomplishments, their joyful and sorrowful experiences."

Echo Editor-in-Chief John Thornton added: "Johnny Concannon has the experience, the knowledge, the contacts and the materials to handle the ambitious task he is undertaking — "to promote and 'popularize' interest in, and the study of, Irish American history." I particularly like his plans to involve, to draw Irish Echo readers into this endeavor, to get them thinking about and reading about the fascinating and colorful history of the Irish in America."

The Kearns were married January 23, 1954 in St. Anne's Church in Houston and they are the parents of six children: Mary, John, Maureen, Michael, Terrance and Kenneth.

Both Dr. Kearns and Jeannie are descended from Irish immigrants and have been active in the Irish community in Houston since 1960. A member of the AOH, Dr. Kearns for years sponsored an Irish program for the patients and staff of St. Joseph's Hospital. He also started a St. Patrick's Day CIO basketball tournament which ran for many years in Houston.

Michael Davitt is parade chairman for the third straight year, while Jim Anderson also is in his third year as chairman of the parade commission.

The parade is the 29th in the series started in 1960 by KPRC Radio personalities Tim Nolan and Bob Byron. After its first few years, the organization of the parade was taken over by the AOH. Ireland is famous for its crystal. Every piece is the product of rare craftsmanship and strict adherence to quality.

The same is true for Budweiser.

We brew our beer with the finest hops, rice, and barley malt. Then we age it with Beechwood, to aid the natural carbonation. The result is a clean, crisp taste that has been distinctively Budweiser's for over one hundred years.

STATE NEWS: Florida

Recently, all Florida Hibernians were saddened by the sudden death of our beloved state treasurer, Bill Hurley of Brevard County Division 2, in Palm Bay. Bill was a dedicated hard worker for his division. He was elected State Treasurer only a few months prior to his untimely death. One of his most recent services to the AOH was on the delegate accreditation committee for the State convention. As recently as August of 1987, he concluded a research of the national constitution and state by-laws regarding records and disbursements, and was preparing to confer with division presidents, treasurers and financial secretaries regarding his findings. There is no doubt that Bill will be missed by the state and his division. Our prayers and sympathy go to his wife Joan and family. An appropriate eulogy for Bill would be: "He will be remembered not only for his dedication to the AOH but for his dedication, devotion and service to his family, to his church and to his heritage." To quote an old Irish saying, "If Bill is not in Heaven, then there is no one up there."

State President Jack Boyle encourages all divisions to begin a youth movement, as he indicates that the future of the order is dependent upon our young members. Brevard County Division 1 wasted no time in complying with President Boyle's edict by recently recruiting five new young men, all under the age of 32. As of this writing, these five young men have already lined up three more youngsters for membership in the order. Division 1 reports their new board of officers:

president, Art Lynch; vice president, Bob Schneider, who is also Brevard County AOH president and AOH state secretary; financial secretary, Frank Harrington; recording secretary, Ernie Kees and treasurer, Tom Schneider. Tom is one of the five new young members, who wasted no time in becoming active in the order.

Brevard County Division 2 in Palm Bay is one of the most active and growing divisions in the state of Florida. The current state officers who are members of this division are President Jack Boyle; Vice President John Cullinan, (also known as Arthur Godfrey) and Director Bill Ryan. Any Hibernian reading this column who knows of a qualified individual living in the Palm Bay and Melbourne areas, can obtain information about membership by calling Bill Ryan at 264-8940.

The new Board of Officers for Brevard County Division 2 are: President Bob Carroll; Vice President Tom Donnelly; Treasurer Jim O'Connor; Financial Secretary Harris McGovern and Recording Secretary Art Billingham. The Division 2 Christmas Party for adults and children was held on 6 December 1987 at the K of C Hall in Palm Bay. The Division reports that plans are already under way for the 1988 St. Patrick's Day party on March 5. Co-chairing the event is

Tom Donnelly and Mary Herbert, LAOH state president. A move is under way to form a new division in the Sarasota area. Hoping to hear from you regarding prospective members is James T. Fleming, 2667 Ringling Blvd. Sarasota, FL 34237.

On Saturday 7, November 1987, State President Jack Boyle and State Secretary Bob Schneider journeyed across the state to Bradenton to assist National Director Tom Gilligan and Past Florida State President Ed Kalbfleisch in activating Division 1 of Manatee County. The ceremony was held in the Parish Hall of Sacred Heart R.C. Church in Bradenton. National Director Gilligan presided and after a few introductory remarks, introduced State President Jack Boyle who gave an overview of the aims of Hibernianism in Florida.

Brother Gilligan also expounded on AOH goals on the national level. A regular meeting was waived and a special meeting was held to install the new division's Board of Officers. Past State President Kalbfleisch presided and the following officers were sworn in by State President Jack Boyle: President Paul Finnerty; Vice President Thomas Egan; Recording Secretary Robert Bambrick; Financial Secretary Leo Higgins; Treasurer Shawn Carney and Marshal/Sentinel Donald Donahue. The division is eager to meet prospective new members. Just contact Paul Finnerty, 7116 18th Ave. West, Bradenton, FL 33529 for information regarding membership.

Congratulations to the following new Florida AOH division presidents: Art Lynch, Division 1, Brevard County; Bob Carroll, Division 2, Brevard County; Martin McAndrews, Division 1, Broward County; Thomas Condon, Division 1, New Port Richey; Bob McNulty, Division 1, Clearwater, and Paul Finnerty, Division 1, Bradenton.

All division and county presidents and committee chairmen are urged to send a report of your activities and functions, along with pictures, to the Florida State Editor, Nick Schneider, 240 Eyre Ave., Merritt Island, FL 32953, for appearance in this column. There has been an expression for many years that Florida is "The land of the newlyweds and the nearly dead." Well, through leadership, membership, activities and mutual helpfulness, we can show the rest of the country that the Florida Hibernians are doing their share to dispel the latter part of that expression!

AOH Immigration Reform Holds First Area Meeting

A meeting of the AOH Immigration Reform was held on November 1, 1987 in the Washington D.C. area to discuss Ireland's unemployment situation, the number of 'illegal' Irish in the U.S., and a bill to change the U.S. immigration laws. The meeting was organized by the Michael Dowd Div., No. 6 and the Ladies Div., No. 9, and was open to the public. An audience of slightly over one hundred people attended from Washington, D.C., and its Maryland and Virginia suburbs.

Ed O'Brien (AOH) spoke on the unemployment situation in Ireland.

Wayne Cimons, legislative director for Congressman DioGuardi, followed with a description of HR1683, a bill introduced by the Congressman to increase the number of visas for the Irish and other countries adversely affected by immigration law changes. Finally, an "Information Sheet", containing a background statement, names of Congressmen, Senators, and their mailing addresses, sample letters and letter-writing hints, was provided to each person. For additional information: (301) 963-6820.

STATE NEWS: Ohio

MARTINS FERRY, OHIO — The Commodore Jack Barry Division of Belmont County moved into 1988 with some of the finest programs since the unit's formation 11 years ago. Guiding them will be the newly elected officers: President James P. Hughes (third term), Vice President John (Jack) Brennan; Treasurer Paul Loftus; Recording Secretary Robert Weigle; Financial Secretary Michael Muldowney; and Chair, Standing Committee, John Gallagher.

The membership drive brought two more area men into the division. Michael Ramsay, a radiologist at an area hospital, and Joseph Hughes, grandson of the division's president.

The division kicked off its programs by taking part in a Christmas parade in St. Clairsville, Belmont County, with President Hughes at the head of the delegation. The cars of Jim Brennan and Jack Brennan (no relationship) were decorated with balloons and signs and paper mache of green and white with AOH information, viewed by thousands.

President Hughes announced the division's annual St. Patrick's Day banquet will be held at St. John's Church in Bellaire on the first Saturday in March.

In a surprise action, the division presented Jim Brennan with a Certificate of Merit for his activities for the division during its 11 years in existence. Hughes, Muldowney and Loftus made the presentation on behalf of the division. Brennan is a charter member and held the president's office for four years.

The division was saddened by the untimely death of Brother Edward Bannon of Wheeling, WV.

Notre Dame President to Keynote Nat'l Convention

CLEVELAND, OHIO: The Cleveland Convention Committee co-chairs, Pat Murphy and Eileen Reynolds-Wallenhorst, are very pleased to announce that Reverend Edward A. Malloy, C.S.C., the President of the University of Notre Dame, will be the keynote speaker at the AOH/AOH National Convention Banquet on Thursday, July 28.

A native of Washington, D.C., Father Malloy was born May 3, 1941. He obtained undergraduate and master's degrees in English from Notre Dame in 1963 and 1967, respectively. While studying for the priesthood at Moreau Seminary, he obtained a master's degree in theology in 1969 and was ordained in Sacred Heart Church on campus in 1970. In the same year, he received a Smith Fellowship for theological studies at Vanderbilt University. While obtaining a doctoral degree in Christian ethics, which he received in 1975, Father Malloy taught at Aquinas Junior College in Nashville before returning to Notre Dame to join the faculty of the Department of Theology.

Father Malloy is author of two books and numerous articles and reviews in a wide variety of theological and secular journals. His areas of specialization include: questions of ethical methodology, particularly in an ecumenical context; matters of social justice, specifically violence and its control; the quality and distribution of health care; substance abuse; economic ethics, and sexual morality.

National Law Enforcement Memorial Honor - Service - Sacrifice

Under the terms of legislation authored by Congressman Mario Biaggi and Senator Claiborne Pell in 1984, authority was given for the building of a National Law Enforcement Heroes Memorial in Washington, D.C. It will be to honor those thousands of law enforcement personnel who have been killed in the line of duty. Financing for the Memorial is entirely private. The fund raising efforts are obviously underway, but in order to be a success, we must reach out to all communities if the fund is to accomplish groundbreaking by October 19, 1989.

The past and present contributions to law enforcement by Irish Americans is an established fact. So, too, are the sacrifices that have been made by Irish Americans as law enforcement officers. Their valor should be memorialized and it is to them that this memorial would be dedicated.

The establishment of a National Law Enforcement Memorial, honoring all federal, state and local law enforcement officers who die in the line of duty, was authorized by Congress in October 1984. Memorial development efforts are now underway. Last year, there were 169 line of duty police deaths in our country. There were more than 1,500 law enforcement officers who died in the line of duty.

Appropriately, design ideas for the Memorial are now being sought from within the law enforcement community. At this time, however, it appears likely that the Memorial will include the names of law enforcement officers who die in the line of duty, along with a special symbolic element aimed at recognizing police deaths as they occur. The Memorial's significance will be enhanced by the fact that it will be financed totally through private contributions from the American people. Since the Fund is a nonprofit, tax-exempt 501(c)(3) organization, donations are tax deductible to the full extent permitted by law. There is a funding target of $5 million to complete the Memorial. Congress has stipulated that all funds must be raised by October 1989, before groundbreaking can begin.

Congress has directed that groundbreaking for the Memorial must begin by October 19, 1989.

Fund Officials: Hon. Claiborne Pell, Honorary Chairman; Craig W. Floyd, Executive Director; Suzanne Sawyer, Secretary; Jan Craig Scruggs, Project Director; George W. IMMIGRATION The New York Window

From our window high over the streets where our fathers walked a beat and directed traffic, or shouldered the heavy hod for the bricklayers working above, where we ran and scrambled and pummelled in our energetic childhood enthusiasm, where the earth turned and hauled the gray, cold skies over the docks each day, we scan the scene of Erin's greenhorns breaking into the New World — from our window.

It's the never ending script of Irish life from the playwright of sadness and despair, a tragic drama of Irish America.

The Irish Arrival is bounced on the legal-illegal trampoline while the INS ponders the Regulations

A hundred and fifty years of searching for the good life — the golden nugget of greenhorn hope in this land of opportunity. The door never fully opened.

The view from the top reveals shop signs in Oriental script, Bodegas and Barrios, ear rings, long ear locks, gold chains, strange tongues, exotic music, food smells of distant lands.

An open city — now defaulted, handed over without a fight to generations strange.

Who owns it now?

We had our chance to build the Dublin City Annex.

They fly in from Shannon wearing Reeboks and designer jeans, with Samsonites packed and heavy, and fancy wristwatches, digital and waterproof to 100 feet, speaking Dublinese and Kerry talk.

The Customs gate is at JFK, International Arrivals; they meet mostly strangers now, friend of a friend, perhaps a cousin in the crowd for some.

A room, a job, a green card, Guinness black draft on tap the dream for now — mostly the job. They never saw a hod, never carried a brick.

Ellis Island is rubble, peeled paint, toilets wrecked in broken white pieces; musty, ancient, used up — soon, an historic site.

Awe-struck, frightened immigrants with scapulas and shawls and half empty cardboard suitcases, carrying a Priest's farewell blessing — all a dim memory of an age long gone.

We had our chance to build the Dublin City Annex.

A strange land — New York. Applications with Spanish words.

Any Irish need apply?

Any jigs or reels, or button accordians?

The Dublin City Annex and the sweet colleens are in the playwright's script.

Three acts in a theatre abroad. Not in the Big Apple — at least not for now.

From our window high over the streets, we look down. It's not the same today. The trolley cars are gone; the motorman's brogue-ish wit silent for years. No pushcarts, icemen, growlers, penny candy, organ grinder monkeys, or knickered kids with kazooks.

The traffic attendants are bundled warm, waving brown colored arms. The cop in blue rides in style, warm and dry, ballpoint in hand writing the NYPD script. Hard-hats munch salami heroes with peppers and mayo. "Hey man", in the dark doorways. Crack for the little pipes. Anything you want for the ready green. Nuns in street clothes, long haired altar-boys, Toyota hacks — Checker cabs are history, Shoulder borne radios pounding out in scam time, yuppies, hard rock, and graffiti; Johns and Dons, pimps and wimps, hookers in Skinny skirts, butt high.

The whole town needs the Ex-Lax cure.

We had our chance to build the Dublin City Annex.

based upon uncorroborated, perjured evidence or upon confessions obtained through torture?

Also forgotten were the Birmingham Six (which case was under appellate review at the time), the Stalker Report, the Guilford Four, and several other cases of innocent Irish people serving long sentences in English prisons. The real crime of these Irish prisoners was being available "Paddys" when the blood-hunt of English "justice" demanded Irish victims in order to be satisfied.

Fine Gael proposees and Fianna Fail disposees! Was it for this that Frank Aiken and Eamon deValera entered Leinster House?

LEGAL BASIS

Inherent in extradition treaties should be a presumption of judicial fairness. Neither "Northern Ireland" nor England meet the criteria. Would West Germany sign such an extradition treaty with East Germany? Of course not! Does this mean that West Germany encourages terrorism? We already know the answer to that one. No, the system of "justice" (or what passes for "justice") in East Germany simply does not measure up to Western standards.

That's just the point: However it may or may not provide justice for the English, English "justice" does not come up to Western standards where the Irish are concerned.

To make matters worse, Charlie Haughey insisted that all extradition requests be subject to approval of the Attorney General, instead of judicial review as in the United States. (Ask Joe Doherty if he wants Ed Meese to decide the question of his extradition to the UK.) Trying to build a safeguard into the process which delivers one up to a Diplock Court is a cruel hoax which ignores the fact that the Diplock Court system is a political agent of the London government trying to put on a judicial form to disguise what is really only internment under a different species.

BLACKMAIL

The unanswered, nagging question is: What blackmail did Maggie Thatcher employ to get Charlie Haughey to do such a flip-flop on a major policy question? It is doubtful that she threatened "immediate and terrible war;" Lloyd George had already used that one. Whatever it was, one thing is for certain; it demonstrated that, however astute a politician Charlie Haughey may be, he lacks the wiles of an Eamon deValera, who would never have allowed himself to be cornered so.

Thrown away was a chance to demand reform of some of the more odious "legal" practices in "Northern Ireland." Thrown away was the opportunity to insist upon justice for the Birmingham Six, the Guilford Four, etc. For a brief moment in history, Charlie Haughey had the power to improve the lot of his own people now suffering under a judicial form to disguise what is really only internment under a different species. Let history judge Charlie Haughey, lest we, too, fall victim to (Continued on Page Twenty-Seven)

● National Officers' Action Reports ●

The National Organizer's Corner

ALBANY, NY — A National Teleconference of the Western District was held recently among members of the AOH National Board, Director of the district, AOH deputy national organizers and state presidents or their representatives.

The conference started with a brief report by National Organizer Mike Hession, who outlined the progress of the order during the past 12 months. Hession stated that 2,982 members were initiated into the order and that 2,844 members were terminated, showing a net gain for the year 1987 of only 64 members.

It was pointed out that maintaining our present members is vital to the survival of the organization. A letter from the national organizer will be mailed to all division presidents in the beginning of 1988 outlining certain procedures for the collection of membership dues and suggestions will be offered to help the division financial secretary collect the dues which are so important for the successful operation of the division.

A new recruitment drive is in progress for the first three months of 1988 and every division is asked to co-operate and make a special effort to increase the membership; also to make a renewed effort to reinstate members who have been dropped during the past few years. This new drive is co-sponsored by the national board of the Ladies AOH and a joint advertising program is being planned during the St. Patrick's Day celebration. We are asking state boards and county boards who receive money from initiation fees to use that money as directed by the national constitution, for the promotion of membership. This would be a good time to tie in with the national board to have maximum effect.

The conference was a lively exchange of ideas, complaints and constructive criticism. I will list them as best I can but not necessarily in order of importance.

Membership applications were discussed, some feeling that certain questions asked were too personal. New proposals will be submitted for consideration by the national board.

The question of the major degrees was discussed and several suggestions were submitted. The only opportunity for people in the western states to take their degrees is at a national convention. The idea of a degree team making a circuit of the western states at special times for the exemplification of the major degrees was discussed at length. This is not a new idea but it will be taken up again at the national board level and a solution will be sought.

Bill Harrington, Montana state president, talked about being isolated with no personal contact with the main body of the AOH. He said that they survive by initiating programs of their own. The only time they hear from the national board is during fund raising campaigns. He suggested that advanced notice be given to division presidents of upcoming fund raisers so the fund raising project may be discussed at division meetings prior to the actual drive.

A lively discussion on the MacBride Principles legislation in California took place with no particular progress reported but work will continue with some new legislators coming on board in the new year. National Director Jack Hassett will keep the board apprised of any progress.

Peter Moughan of Albuquerque, New Mexico, stated that New Mexico has some legislators who are willing to introduce MacBride legislation in the new year and Joe Roche's help would be sought. Tim Moynahan of Phoenix, Arizona, said Arizona is also ready to put MacBride legislation before the state legislators. He also noted that the problems with the governor at the present time might slow the process but that work was continuing, and progress is being made.

Immigration legislation and the problem of undocumented Irish aliens was discussed, with California being the only state in the west with a serious problem. The other states are also having immigration problems but in these states the Irish are a real minority. We were reminded that even these small states have two senators and it might be easier to get their support than it would be in the more populous states. The west is all for immigration reform.

It is a common belief in the western states that the east coast Hibernians get preferential treatment. We promised to help and open up better communication between east and west.

The issue of greeting cards was raised and several remarks were made. Some of the members did not know the national anti-defamation chairman. He is John T. McInerney, 10001 Creekwood Circle, Plymouth, Michigan 48170; telephone No. 1-313-322-0276, business and 1-313-455-9348, home. It might be more effective if all complaints concerning greeting cards be co-ordinated through the anti-defamation chairman so that a national protest may be submitted to the offending company.

Tourist travel to Ireland was discussed. It was pointed out that when it comes to tourism, the American people know little or nothing about Ireland. The country is never mentioned on the same scale as London, Athens, Rome, Singapore, etc. When Ireland is mentioned, coverage usually reflects the war and terrorist activities. To some people, trouble in Belfast means trouble all over Ireland. As one brother put it, a lot of Americans think Belfast is in County Cork. He feels something must be done to promote tourism in Ireland, and that Hibernians could help in this endeavor.

Another suggestion put forward was that a national directory of AOH divisions be published so that Hibernians travelling would know which cities have active divisions and where the traveler might visit the club rooms or particular meeting place.

A regional workshop conference was discussed to take place somewhere west of the Mississippi in which all the western states would participate. This is an idea worth considering; financing would be the

Statistical Survey Throws Light On Membership Levels

TROY, NEW YORK—A team of undergraduate marketing research students at Siena College, Loudonville, New York recently tackled the problem of declining membership in New York's District 1, AOH. The College regularly takes on projects with in the community for research activity for each year's senior and junior marketing/management majors. The service is free to the client, except for incidental expenses such as mailing, telephone calls, etc. New York State AOH President Ed Carley initiated the study to try to elicit root causes for the decline in membership in New York's District 1, mainly the Capital District with points North and South. Siena's location in the Capital District made the survey a little easier than calling great distances.

A telephone survey was administered to males 18 years and older who belonged to a fraternal organization and males 18 years and older who never belonged to a fraternal organization. The telephone survey was designed in two parts: the first consisting of questions for non-members of a fraternal organization. They were asked if circumstances were such, what would initially attract them to join a fraternal organization. They were also asked if they recognized or heard of the Ancient Order of Hibernians and if they did, through what media.

The second section was for members of fraternal organizations. They also were asked if they had heard of the Hibernians and through what media and to reply to a demographic section in the survey. They were asked how they had heard of the Hibernians and if any requirements existed in order to become a member. They were asked what benefits they received from their organization and how long they have been a member.

A telephone survey was chosen because of the size of the Capital District and because they were limited to males 18 years of age, and older.

The Capital District phone book was broken down into four sections (e-f, g-m, n-t, u-z) and phone numbers were randomly selected until 25 surveys were completed by each person. Two hundred seventy-two calls were made in order to complete the projected goal of 100 surveys. The survey was then tabulated and coded for the application of the statistical computer program. (SPSS, VAX VMS operating system, DEC).

The results from the statistical computer program showed that people who were surveyed that belonged to an organization heard of their group through family, friends or in some cases, other group members. The overall percentage of people who recognized the Ancient problem.

I am wide open for suggestions; let's hear from you. It was suggested that a regional telephone conference be scheduled about every 3 months or so. The feeling was that a lot was accomplished and a lot of information shared. After the usual greeting for Christmas and the New Year the meeting was adjourned.

A special thanks to Jack Hassett for co-ordinating the conference. God Bless.

Report from NATIONAL ADVERTISING DIRECTOR

SPRING HILL, FLA: As the old cliché goes, it pays to check your mail and read the letters and other data contained in those epistles. For example, via Uncle Sam a letter came with some interesting information from the Irish Export Board. It is obvious even to the uninitiated, that to get advertising clients you must have, among other things, targets: that is, a list of names to write your requests to. Without such information, all the support measures any newspaper and/or magazine can give to an advertising director is literally useless.

And that is why such organizations as the Irish Export Board are a vital necessity to any advertising director. Its communication listed a host of American firms which have been and are handling Irish products. Foods, clothing, beverages, and bottled water are some of the items on the Board's list.

James Mongey, director-North America for the Board, makes a most notable comment in his letter:

"Many Irish-American organizations have mentioned to us their wish to support, whenever they can, the creation of employment in Ireland. 'I believe that using Irish products, where at all possible, is a very practical way of doing this.' No truer words could be spoken as one way to help our families and friends in Ireland.

And this is one important measure by which members of the AOH can achieve a brighter economic picture in Ireland: BUY IRISH. Don't take any substitutes and insist with your stores, that they include Irish products in their inventory.

For example, some of the Irish products that you should check on for purchase include Howard's Brown Bread Mix; Cakes: Molly O'Rourke's Irish whiskey fruit cake; Bottled water: Ballygowan, Glenpatrick and Tipperary Irish Spring Waters. The list goes on and on.

Some of the firms handling the Irish products include Anheuser-Busch; Emerald Isle Imports in Northvale, NJ; Century Importers in Baltimore, MD; and Guinness-Harp Corp. in Stamford, Conn.

So, don't forget: when you go shopping not only think Irish, buy Irish.

And just as important: you can become that critical cog in your newspaper's advertising department — when buying Irish from an Irish importer, get that firm to advertise in your newspaper.

Talk it up with your local store, with the company that has you on the payroll, and there has to be many State Boards and Divisions that are planning various projects.

Advertise in your newspaper, not our competitor's. By advertising in the National Hibernian Digest, you help the financial picture of your organization.

The new address of your Advertising Director: 3114 Lynx Lane, Timber Pines, Spring Hill, Florida 34606.

Order of Hibernians was low and those who did recognize the organization, did so through family and friends.

One suggestion that emerged from the data was promoting membership from within. Since the majority of respondents heard of the Ancient Order of Hibernians through family and friends, new members will come from existing members.

In order to retain current members, the study revealed that social activities were key factors when deciding what organization to join.

Finally, one reason that the group had for the decline of membership was the idea that the third and fourth generations of families no longer possess the strong ethnic ties which lead people to join an ethnic organization. This type of information since it is a social issue was very hard to research, but found to be something to think about.

As mentioned before this statistically based marketing survey designed specifically for the New York State Board AOH cost very little and provided confidential results. These attempts at analyzing membership growth/decline rates are essential if we are to provide for the future. Similar studies should be conducted throughout the entire Hibernian population and the results shared. I am indebted to the research team at Siena for their fine effort during the project and for their moderator and instructor Bernie Felfstein, as well as District 1, Glens Falls President Bill McCarthy for his idea to search for a marketing consultant.

Editor's Note: Fr. Maurice Burke, founder of the Irish-American Defense Fund, has written sixteen educational articles on Northern Ireland, including the two below and will have them available in booklet form in the near future. The Misuse of Law

By FR. MAURICE BURKE

International law makes allowances for states in emergency situations and allows them to suspend basic democratic rights. The emergencies envisaged, however, must be temporary ones and the degree of abrogation of rights must be commensurate with the situation which makes the abrogation necessary. The emergency situation in north Ireland does not fall within these guidelines. There emergency legislation has been on the statute books since the foundation of the state.

Special Powers Act

The Special Powers act was passed in 1922 and renewed annually until 1928 when it was renewed for five years. At the end of the five year period, in 1933, it was made permanent. It empowered the police to search, arrest and imprison without warrant or trial and gave the Minister of Home Affairs the power to intern any citizen indefinitely without the right to appeal or the right to know why he was being detained. Indeed the Home Affairs Minister, under the Act, was empowered to make regulations "for making further provision for the preservation and the maintenance of order." It was this latter power that South Africa's Minister of Justice, JB Vorster, said he would exchange for all the repressive legislation at his disposal.

Internment Without Trial

Internment without trial was used in the 1920s and again from 1966-1968. There were three new features associated with the use of internment which began August 9, 1971. (1) London gave formal approval for its use. (2) It was accompanied by the torture of internees. (3) It was carried out by British troops. When the High Court, 2/23/72, ruled that the Special Powers Act did not permit the government in the north to use troops to implement its provisions, the Westminster Government passed the Northern Ireland Act 1972. This, the Home Secretary said, would declare the "the law as far as the armed forces are concerned is and always has been what it has hitherto been believed to be."

Torture

The Compton Report found that internees had been ill-treated and the Parker Inquiry conceded that the techniques of sensory deprivation used "would constitute criminal assault and might also give rise to civil proceedings under English law." These two inquiries were carefully controlled British ones. The European Commission on Human Rights described the techniques used as torture. The European Court, despite a British plea of guilty to the charge of torture, reduced the charge to guilty of inhuman or degrading treatment, a violation of Article 3 of the European Human Rights Convention.

Diplock Commission

The law, Brigadier Frank Kitson had suggested, could be used as a propaganda cover for the disposal of unwanted members of the public. A step towards implementing this suggestion was the setting up of a Commission "on legal procedures to deal with terrorist activities." The first meeting was held October 20, 1972 with Lord Diplock as chairman. Diplock was the only member of the commission to visit Ireland — two trips each lasting two days — where he met with members of the security forces.

"Only three written representations were received by the Commission and the bulk of their evidence came from people with responsibility for the administration of justice in Northern Ireland . . . and from representatives of the Civil and Armed Services." (Richard Harvey, Diplock and the Assault On Civil Liberties). The Diplock Report was published 12/20/72, and its recommendations were being considered by the Westminster parliament by April 1973. The Bill was passed and, on July 26, received the Royal Assent. The Emergency Provisions (Northern Ireland) Act 1973 came into force two weeks later on August 8. Diplock Courts that day became part of the justice system of north-east Ireland.

Diplock Courts

In the Diplock Courts specially selected judges, sitting without juries and operating under special rules of evidence, were empowered to convict solely on the basis of confessions made by defendants while in police custody. British apologists claim that "because of the risks of jurors being intimidated and the consequent danger of perverse verdicts, trial by jury was not practicable." Harvey in Diplock and the Assault On Civil Liberties considers this and begins by quoting Diplock himself:

"It is fair to say that we have not had our attention drawn to complaints of convictions that were plainly perverse and complaints of acquittals which were plainly perverse are rare." Asked by Ian Paisley, "Has there been definite evidence of juries having brought in perverse verdicts on the facts given to them in the Courts?" Secretary of State Whitelaw replied: "Some of the verdicts have been rather hard to understand. I do not think I can go further than that." Attorney General

The Fair Employment Agency

By FR. MAURICE BURKE

When Stormont, the parliament of north-east Ireland, was suspended in March 1972, a William Van Straubensee was made Minister of State at the Northern Ireland Office. A committee under his chairmanship published, in June 1973, the Report and Recommendations of the Working Party on Discrimination in the Private Sector of Employment. While the terms of reference limited the committee to the private sector, the suggestion was made that the government should consider applying the recommendations to the public sector as well. This suggestion was acted on when the Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act became law in 1976 and the Fair Employment Agency — FEA — established that year, covered both sectors. Its purpose was to "promote equality of opportunity between persons of different religious beliefs and the elimination of discrimination on the ground of religious belief or political opinion."

Reviewing the work of the new agency in Fortnight, October '82, Andrew Pollak commented: "In the six years of its existence the FEA has yet to publish one investigation into inequality of job opportunity between Protestants and Catholics in any private firm or public body, and has not once used its considerable legal powers to compel an employer to promote job equality in his work-force." The Fair Employment Agency, in fact, was simply a cosmetic exercise and contained within itself the seeds of failure.

Committed To Failure

The chairman of the FEA 12-strong board was Robert George Cooper. He had been the General Secretary of the Alliance party and later became its deputy leader. The Alliance Party was and is pro-Union and is the party of second choice for many Unionists. Any doubts about how Cooper would function as chairman of the FEA were dispelled when he had Glenn Barr co-opted to the Agency.

Barr was associated with the Ulster Defense Association, a Loyalist para-military organization which accepted responsibility for many assassinations. He was chairman of the committee co-ordinating the Ulster Workers' Council strike which brought down the power-sharing executive in May 1974. In November 1974 he led a UDA delegation to Libya to discuss, among other things, the possibility of financial aid for an independent Ulster. He remained a member of the board until August 1981.

The remaining members of the FEA board consisted of the Chairman of the Equal Opportunities Commission and nine members nominated by the Irish Congress of Trade Unions, the Confederation of British Industry and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. The Confederation of British Industry was an employers' group. Its three nominees, with those appointed by the Secretary of State, gave those opposed to reform, control of the FEA. Only the three nominees of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions would appear to have been active in promoting reform.

Staff and Methodology

Peter Sefton, an English Catholic, was the FEAs Co-ordinating Director with a Peter O'Keefe as his deputy. The staff at their disposal was too small, however, and, as an investigation into the working of the FEA showed, the Agency was badly under-financed.

Another factor militating against reform was that the Agency was set up to combat sectarian motivation rather than discrimination. Motivation is very difficult to prove and any efforts of the FEA to do so were hampered by the fact that there was no full-time legal adviser on the staff. Rights, the newspaper of the National Council for Civil Liberties, Vol. 5 #2, after commenting on the "sheer vagueness" of FEA's methodology, noted: "But references to 'motivation' occur again and again (in FEA reports) and in one case it is noted: 'In arriving at a finding it is not the job of the Agency to determine whether or not the Respondent had acted correctly, but only if they were motivated by political or religious considerations.'"

Obstacles to Progress

A feature common to all British inquiries vis-a-vis events in north Ireland is that they were conducted in private, thus violating Lord Salmon's guidelines for the conduct of inquiries. Reports made by the FEA were kept confidential and published only after copies were leaked to newspapers.

The work of the FEA was also obstructed by British politicians. When the FEA was about to initiate an enquiry into equality of opportunity in the civil service, Chairman Cooper was approached by Minister of State Hugh Rossi, who tried to persuade him to drop the planned inquiry. Rossi was a senior member of the Conservative Party. He was appointed to the Northern Ireland Office in 1979 and was given

Ad Hoc Congressional Committee On Irish Affairs Report

Candidates' Irish Position

Announcement was recently made that the leadership of the bi-partisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs has sent letters to all announced candidates for President seeking their position on several key issues related to Northern Ireland and Ireland. Rep. Mario Biaggi said that the questions were developed in consultation with all 118 Members of the Committee and with the special help of U.S. Rep. Hamilton Fish (R-NY), Sen. Dennis DeConcini (D-Arizona), Rep. Nick Mavroules (D-Mass), Rep. Joseph Kennedy (D-Mass), Rep. Benjamin Gilman (R-NY), Rep. Robert A. Boraski (D-Pa), Rep. William J. Coyne (D-Pa), Rep. Thomas Manton (D-NY) and Robert A. Roe (D-NJ).

The specific questions that will be posed to all Republican and Democratic candidates are:

1) Are you familiar with the MacBride Principles of Fair Employment and Non-Discrimination?

a) if legislation was passed by Congress to require that American companies doing business in Northern Ireland adopt these principles, would you sign such a measure into law?

2) If legislation amending the McCarran-Walter Act to eliminate visa denials to individuals solely because of political beliefs were passed by Congress, would you sign the measure into law?

3) Do you support the so-called Anglo-Irish Agreement of 1985? What do you believe is the most significant consequence of this agreement after two full years of being in effect?

4) After the Anglo-Irish Agreement was signed, Congress passed legislation authorizing first time United States economic assistance to Ireland and Northern Ireland. The bill called for a three year package totalling $120 million.

a) Do you support the providing of U.S. economic aid to Northern Ireland?

b) Are you familiar with the conditions associated with this legislation including those which pertain to annual certifications that

The announced Presidential candidates to whom this questionnaire was sent are: Bruce Babbitt, Michael Dukakis, Richard Gephardt, Albert Gore, Gary Hart, Jesse Jackson, Paul Simon, George Bush, Pierre DuPont, Robert Dole, Alexander Haig, Jack Kemp, and Marion Pat Robertson.

Biaggi indicated that he would release all responses as they are received.

U.S. Economic Aid

The House has approved legislation which would extend through September 30, 1989 United States economic aid to Ireland and Northern Ireland under the terms of the Anglo-Irish International Fund.

Biaggi said the House action came during its consideration of the Omnibus International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1987. The House vote would authorize $35 million for FY 1989 in United States contributions to the International Fund. Earlier legislation provided $35 million for the current fiscal year which began on October 1.

Arms Embargo

Rep. Biaggi has been assured by the Department of State that the 8 year old embargo on U.S. arms sales and shipments to the Royal Ulster Constabulary remains in effect.

Biaggi said that he received a report from Father Desmond Wilson of Northern Ireland which indicated that the allocation of funds from the International Fund "has not taken cognizance of enormous areas of socio-economic blight and unemployment." The Wilson report also contains criticisms of the International Fund allocation from the SDLP (Social Democrat and Labour Party) led by John Hume and Dr. Cahal Daly, a Catholic bishop in Northern Ireland.

Among the allegations made in the Wilson Report include the contention that aid had "benefitted" golf clubs in Northern Ireland as well as the "lucrative tourist trade which already is heavily subsidized by government funds."

Biaggi added, "It seems that at a time when unemployment throughout Northern Ireland is over 20 percent and runs as high as 60 percent in major Catholic cities, a priority in the distribution of this aid should be to stimulate new jobs. Such industries as tourism while earning large profits do not traditionally supply large numbers of jobs. Our aid should be used to promote positive new job opportunities while reducing discrimination. If the International Fund is not responsive to the terms of our legislation, we need to review our future commitment of aid through the International Fund."

Britain Plays Into Terrorist Hands

The Daily News - January 30, 1988

This week has seen two events that painfully damage Anglo-Irish relations and the aspirations of the Catholic minority in Northern Ireland. Both played into the hands of Irish Republican Army terrorism.

Those unwelcome events did as much to damage British interests as Irish ones. There is a deep and important kinship between the United States and both Britain and Ireland. So both events and their consequences should be of grave concern to Americans, public and private.

In Parliament on Monday, Attorney General Sir Patrick Mayhew conceded that a government investigation of an alleged "shoot-to-kill" policy in 1982 by the Royal Ulster Constabulary produced evidence of attempts to "pervert the course of justice." But, he insisted, there will be no prosecutions because of "national security" reasons.

That decision and the arguments behind it were never discussed with the government of Ireland, despite the Anglo-Irish commitment to cooperate fully on justice and security through the mechanisms of the Anglo-Irish Accord.

The decision not to prosecute should be appalling to everyone committed to due process. serious anti-Catholic reputation of the relatively few Catholics in its and Wolff where the management, strongly praised the New York City Bar Association for its recent study of the legal justice system in Northern Ireland.

Biaggi, in a statement inserted into the Congressional Record, said the 120-page report serves to confirm many of the worst concerns that critics of the justice system have had for years. "Central to their study and the criticisms in it are the Diplock Courts which continue to operate in the North of Ireland. The study specifically urged that the British government curtail the use of trials without juries in cases involving terrorism charges."

Biaggi also indicated that he has written to the State Department to learn their formal views about the Bar Association study. "In my mind it has great relevance on two policy fronts. The first relates to the recently ratified Extradition Treaty between the U.S. and the United Kingdom. It is obvious from this study that the concerns about the justice system in the north of Ireland are valid and the absence of any reforms should lead to a reconsideration of the treaty. Similarly, it would seem that before we permit an extension of economic assistance to Northern Ireland, that there must be some meaningful reforms in the justice system along the lines of the City Bar Association's recommendations."

Biaggi expressed strong support for several of the recommendations contained in the Bar Association study including the introduction of three-judge panels for cases where trials without jury cannot be avoided and the elimination of existing evidence standards. He indicated he would review the entire report of the Bar Association and plans to convene a meeting of the Ad Hoc Committee early in the year to get a more detailed report by those who wrote the report.

Immediately, the investigative report should be made public. If there is persuasive argument against prosecution — at least six men were killed in the incidents involved — it must be publicly debated in Britain and Ireland.

The second event was the failure of an appeal on 1975 convictions of the so-called "Birmingham Six" in connection with two pub bombings that killed 21 in 1974. The three-judge court rejected an impressive body of new evidence, both technical and personal. There is widespread belief in Ireland that some or all the six Irishmen had been railroaded by police on the crest of a wave of outrage.

Already, those defendants have spent more than 13 years in prison. The Thatcher government would well serve the interests of peace in Northern Ireland by granting all six amnesty, avoiding the possibility of further conflict and a long, final appeal in the House of Lords.

The two shocks cast dark shadows over British-Irish relations and thus on Margaret Thatcher's government, which had begun to establish a courageous, impressively sensible record on Ireland. The two governments' representatives will meet early next week under the umbrella of the three-year-old accord. It is vital to the future of Ireland, north and south, and of Britain as well that the fragile bonds of trust be strengthened, not further torn.

Pro Life Report "Euthanasia Is Here"

SUFFOLK COUNTY, NY — We are living at another critical moment in history. The value of our elderly and weaker brothers and sisters lives is being called into question. This is not a new moment. Sixty-eight years ago Dr. Karl Binding, a law professor, and Dr. Alfred Hoche, a medical doctor, published a book, The Destruction of Life Devoid of Value, in Leipzig, Germany. Interestingly, the ideas that they wrote about sound so familiar to the euthanasia campaign that is gaining momentum in our country. In 1920 Dr. Binding wrote, "Is there any human life that has to such a degree lost its legal rights, that its continuation is of no value to itself or to society?"

Both Drs. Binding and Hoche were not men of faith and they thought that the ethic which put value on the sacredness of human life (Book of Genesis: man is made in God's image and likeness) was outmoded. Speaking of the mentally deficient or "incurable idiots" as he called them, Dr. Binding wrote, "Again I see no reason, neither from a legal, social, moral, nor religious point of view to forbid euthanasia of these people." For the elderly, when a Board (consisting of a doctor, a psychiatrist, and a lawyer) would determine that it was the person's time to die, Dr. Binding admitted that the Board could make an error but he cavalierly and dangerously stated, "... mankind loses many of its members because of erroneous actions; one more or less does not really matter that much."

With ideas like Drs. Binding and Hoche being banded about by the "intellectual elite" in Germany prior to Hitler's assuming power, one could question if the ground work had not already been laid for the destructive euthanasia campaign that was to send thirteen million Jews, Christians, mentally ill and retarded to their deaths.

Today, as we look around the western world, we see frightening facts that show an erosion of the respect for human life. In Holland a doctor's giving an elderly person deadly medication (known as assisted suicide or active euthanasia) has gained widespread support. In fact one-third of all the elderly Dutch are dying by prescribed lethal medication. In Holland there are very powerful euthanasia societies supporting this "way out" for the elderly.

Right here at home there are ominous signs of the continuous erosion of the respect for human life. In his 1985 address to the National Right to Life Convention in Washington, D.C., Dr. C. Everett Koop, the U.S. Surgeon General, pointed out two social forces which are working to bring about wide-scale euthanasia in this country: . . .

1, the decline of medical ethics; and 2, the rush for health cost containment.

Though the beneficiaries are police officials, the sense of professionalism within the RUC has been sorely damaged. The British government's failure to pursue the matter exhaustively in advance with the Dublin govern- ment was arrogant and stupid.

The Hippocratic Oath whereby a medical doctor used to commit himself "to keep the sick from harm" is largely being ignored by the medical profession. The fact that the elderly are living longer and need more medical care and the expensive cost of such care is opening the door for euthanasia. Many of us have heard Colorado Governor Richard Lamm's statement that the elderly "have a duty to die." Governor Lamm's advice, which most of us find reprehensible, is taken seriously by the social planners who see that there were forty million Americans over age sixty-five in 1985 and that there will be an estimated one hundred million-plus Americans in this category in 2000.

As men and women of faith, as Christians, we know that there must be a solution to these cost and management problems other than by creating an ethic and an environment which allows putting the elderly to death. No longer can we stand idly by as the social engineers and "death peddlers" push inhumane and deadly solutions to human problems. In 1949 Dr. Leo Alexander wrote an article, "Medical Science Under the Dictatorship" which was published in the New England Journal of Medicine. In his article he warns us about not giving in to the ideas of the euthanasiaists. He said: "It is the first seemingly innocent step away from principle that frequently decides a career of crime." His point is that euthanasia under Hitler might not have come about if the medical doctors and people had resisted it right from the beginning.

Dr. Alexander's warning can also be applied to today.

Can massive euthanasia of the elderly and weak happen today? The answer is definitely, yes, unless we resist it. The ideas of "death with dignity"; "don't let the person suffer"; "that person is too much of a burden" are present with us. In 1986 the pro-euthanasia Concern for the Dying — An Educational Council — has a total yearly budget in New York State of $3,465,692 to help spread its ideas of passive euthanasia or letting the terminally ill die. The Hemlock Society, which supports legalizing suicide or active euthanasia, has stepped up its campaign to pass bills in state legislatures to make legal the giving of a deadly medication by physicians to people. In California the Hemlock Society is supporting a bill known as the Humane and Dignified Death Act which would allow physicians to give patients lethal medication.

What can you or I do about all of this? Think, read, act, and write letters to legislators and newspapers opposing active euthanasia and assisting the suicide of the elderly. Definitely, pray, that all human life is shown the love and respect which God would give it. Charles Welch N.Y. State Pro-life Chairman, AOH

Discrimination in N. Ireland Targeted

The following is from the Congressional Record:

Report Issued on Religious Discrimination in Northern Ireland
HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR. of New York
In the House of Representatives
Monday, December 21, 1987

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, as the prime sponsor of H.R. 722, the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Practices Act, I would like to inform my colleagues of a recent report released by the British Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights. This Commission was established by Parliament for the purpose of advising the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on the adequacy and effectiveness of the law in preventing discrimination on the ground of religious belief or political affiliation, and providing redress for those who have been discriminated against.

I recently met with the Honorable Kevin McNamara, Member of Parliament, the Labor Party spokesman on Northern Ireland in Parliament. He expressed his strong support for the Commission's report, entitled "Religious and Political Discrimination and Equality of Opportunity in Northern Ireland," and urged the support of the Congress. In many ways, this report goes further than the MacBride Principles. It calls for all companies in Northern Ireland, not just United States entities, to adhere to fair employment guidelines. We now await the official response by the British Government, to be issued in the form of a government white paper.

This should not suggest that the MacBride campaign is over. Efforts to promote the MacBride Principles in the United States, specifically H.R. 722, have assured that the issue of religious discrimination is addressed by the British Parliament. Support should be given in tandem to my bill and the Commission's recommendations to Parliament, if the employment practices in this region are to be corrected.

A summary of the Commission's recommendations can be obtained from the Ad Hoc Committee on Irish Affairs, Room 2428, Rayburn House Office Building.

Irish National Caucus — A Tribute to Sean MacBride

WASHINGTON, D.C. January 15, 1987 — "Sean MacBride was the last of the great fenians . . . and eternity is not long enough, nor heaven good enough to adequately reward him," said Fr. Sean McManus, National Director, and Rita Mullan, Executive Director of the Irish National Caucus.

"He was one of the greatest Irishmen of this century. He had enormous dedication to his country, to international human rights and to world peace. He was a man of profound wisdom and compassion."

"The most fitting tribute the Irish National Caucus can pay to him is to ensure that the MacBride Principles — which the Caucus named after him — will continue to be a powerful force for justice and peace in Ireland."

"May this noble son of Ireland rest in God's eternal peace and may his name live forever in the memory of those who love justice and peace the world over."

Gaelic With A Twist

By JANE BUXTON

AOH Division 10 President Joseph Kidney announced that several Division members listened to Oliver Kearney of Northern Ireland speak on the MacBride Principles. The Hibernians heard the speaker at a meeting in Manchester, New Hampshire.

According to Kidney, Kearney lost his job because of his commitment to the MacBride Principles. He is married and the father of five.

Kearney has spoken in favor of the MacBride Principles several times throughout the United States.

He is a "man of non-violence who believes that fair employment practices and the MacBride Principles in particular, would reduce violence."

The Principles call for fairness in employment to obtain government contracts.

Attending the meeting with the Lynn members were Nicholas Murphy, national president of the AOH; William Sullivan, Division 8, Lawrence, and Massachusetts state president; and John Connolly, Division 14, Watertown, and both past state president and past national president. Kidney said four states in the United States have formally accepted the MacBride Principles. Kearney is trying to get acceptance in New Hampshire and the remainder of the 50 states.

Following the Manchester meeting, President Murphy attended a Division 10 meeting held in Lynn, visited the Division Irish Cultural Center and answered questions from the membership. Murphy was impressed with the Division weekly meetings and the Cultural Center.

He noted Division 10 is the only Hibernian organization in the country to meet every week.

Past Division President Joseph Kearney said Murphy was the first national president to attend a Division 10 meeting. He noted this is a singular honor for the Kidney administration. Murphy was accompanied on his Irish Cultural Center visit by chairman Paul Harrington, Joseph Kidney, Joseph Kearney, and James Gately.

President Kidney mentioned that several highlights have pleased him this year in his first term of office.

Kidney said the surprise party for Joseph Kearney, the Hibernian participation at both the ethnic celebrations and the manufacturing outlets in downtown Lynn, the double-speaking, engagements of Senator Francis Doris and Congressman Nicholas Mavroules at the Communion Breakfast, and the visit of national president Nicholas Murphy to a Division meeting are among them.

Kidney also announced that six new Irish-Americans recently joined Division 10. They include John Travers, Daniel G. Beath, Brendan Wilkenon, Joseph J. Zukas, Mark A. King, and Patrick J. Lydon.

Kidney and his wife, Maureen, recently attended the National President's Dinner in New York City.

FREEDOM FOR ALL IRELAND

Message from Freedom For All Ireland Committee Chairman

Many thanks to Michael O'Rourke for successfully chairing a fund raising Dinner-Dance last fall and also to the members of our Division #3, Nassau County, who helped tremendously. We sent out over 12,000 letters in connection with the affair, and the proceeds realized have been sent to the Green Cross and An Cumann Cabrac for distribution to the families of the prisoners.

Thanks to everyone who helped in this endeavor.

I am trying to obtain an up-to-date list of the prisoners together with their addresses where mail could be sent to them. I have also been trying to obtain a list of their birthdays as I feel it would be a kind gesture if we could send them birthday cards, in addition to the greetings we send at Christmas. I believe this would be a great morale booster for them.

I again request that each Division

President appoint a member from their Division to be the Chairman of the Freedom for All Ireland Committee and send me his name and address, including the zip code. This would greatly help me since I would be able to communicate with him directly.

In closing, thanks to all Divisions that donated towards our Annual Christmas Relief Fund and to those who sent their personal contributions. I know I also speak for the prisoners' families in Northern Ireland when I say that your cooperation and generosity, as always is heartwarming. If you did not receive a thank you note from me for your contribution, it is only because your address was not included with the donation; so please accept my thank you now.

Say YES to MacBride

Oliver Kearney, Secretary of The Fair Employment Trust (Northern Ireland), a voluntary agency, was guest speaker at a Legislative Luncheon sponsored by the AOH Division No. 4, Ramsey Co. and the Irish American Unity Conference, Minnesota, on Oct. 8th, 1987 at the St. Paul Athletic Club. Minnesota Legislators and staff members were guests of Hibernians and Unity members.

Oliver Kearney's tour was organized and sponsored by the American Irish PEC as has his previous tour during which he testified before various state legislative hearings on "Northern Ireland Investment Bills" promoting the adoption of MacBride Principles.

A personnel manager and management consultant of 20 years' standing, and a Fellow of the UK Institute of Personnel Management (only 16 people in No. Ireland hold this degree and Kearney is the only Catholic), Kearney was employed as general secretary of the Licensed Vintners' Federation, non-governmental agency representing pub owners. He was fired from this position on the insistence of the British Government when he returned to No. Ireland after testifying before the Michigan and California Legislatures on employment and employment guidelines for US firms doing business in N. Ireland. He was in this country on his vacation time.

On the other side of the coin, the British Government has sponsored and paid for several personages, like Tom King, the Northern Ireland Secretary, to appear at State Legislative hearings testifying against the adoption of the MacBride Principles. This is known as "Free Speechless."

The Northern Ireland Investment Bill, introduced in the Minnesota Legislature February 4, 1987 by Senator Jerome Hughes and Rep. Richard O'Connor, is numbered SF 723 and HF 453. It calls for an annual review by the State Board governing investments of State Pension Funds in American corporations that do business in N. Ireland to determine whether each corporation listed has taken affirmative action to eliminate religious or ethnic discrimination according to the guidelines set by the MacBride Principles. The Bill does not call for divestment, but would call for reconsideration of reinvesting if discriminatory practices exist. Best of all, it would not cost the taxpayers any money. And it would be applying American ideals in the investment of our funds.

Here is a positive way each of you can help Ireland! You can be an active participant! In many ways.

1. Contact your State Senator and State Representative (we have lists with address and phone number — call or write for the list) preferably with a personal meeting. If that is not possible, telephone or write. Send us copies of your letters and responses.

2. Join the task force committee to promote this bill. Call the Hibernian Office — and we will call on you for your assistance.

3. Plan to attend the legislative hearings when held. This is most important, that we fill the hearing room and the rotunda with supporters — let the Minnesota Legislature know we are concerned about uncivilized conditions in Ireland.

Enacting the Northern Ireland In-

MacBride Principles Needed in N. Ireland

(This letter appeared in the Journal of Commerce, London, England.)

Your London correspondent Edwin Unsworth could hardly have fit more misinformation into his article: "MacBride Principles Strike Out," (JofC, Dec. 1). I cannot resist pointing out that with five U.S. states having already enacted laws based on the MacBride Principles and 11 more pending, he seems to confuse strikeout and home runs.

First, no serious observer, not even the British government, denies that massive employment discrimination exists in Northern Ireland. It is precisely the international focus on the unjust patterns of employment in the six counties that has forced the British government to make noises about reforms. So far, there has been little more than talk.

Determined action is not yet in sight. The MacBride Principles campaign will no doubt continue until tough anti-discrimination laws are well on the way to ending job discrimination.

No matter what its detractors say, as a leader of the campaign I can state that it is not aimed at disinvestment; hence it is not like the campaign concerning South Africa. It is aimed solely at pressuring U.S. firms — in which American citizens, including many union members, have their pensions invested — to behave according to the same standards of non-discrimination to which we would hold them in the United States.

Some Irish trade union leaders oppose the MacBride Principles. The Irish Congress of Trade Unions as a whole, however, in its most recent policy statement adopted in July 1987, called for strong affirmative action for Catholic (nationalist) workers in the North. For understandable reasons of maintaining internal unity, ICTU makes no explicit reference to the MacBride Principles.

As Americans, it is our job to ensure that U.S. economic institutions abide by our values, including reasonable, moderate, established standards of non-discriminatory employment practices. This is not "interference." These are our companies, owned by our pension funds. It is our business.

The MacBride Principles call for reasonable, good faith efforts to protect all workers from intimidation and physical abuse at the workplace or when traveling to and from work. Surely this modest demand can be met by a government and by employers serious about solving the problem. To profess its "impossibility" gives many people reason to believe the British government isn't serious about dismantling sectarian privilege or ending repression.

After decades of involvement in the search for peace with justice in Ireland, let me conclude by noting that there is a more basic problem than anti-Catholic job bias in Northern Ireland. The most fundamental problem is the partition of Ireland itself. On every continent in the last three decades the colonial powers had to depart.

Sooner or later, Britain must decolonize; a British government must heed the sentiment of its own Opportunities Pursued! ... Or Ignored?

If we never realized it before, our recent experiences with the British marching bands should have convinced us. WE CAN FIGHT THE BRITISH! While there is no denying that in certain areas things might have gone better, and actual numbers at demonstrations could have been larger, yet there were some solid achievements. Press conferences and news articles related to protests of local bookings provided opportunities to educate the public.

In many instances, the demonstrations themselves created "media events" that caused the average viewer to ask why this would be happening — which is exactly what we wanted.

Obvious success has also been achieved through passage of the MacBride Principles. In various states and municipalities, we have been able to use our leverage to frame MacBride legislation and gather political support for its passage. This process has forced us to bring coherence to our case against British misrule in Northern Ireland. The British have been unable to stop us in many areas, and it is definitely not from lack of trying. As a result, we have been able to establish a number of political alliances, AND THOSE WHO HAVE REFUSED TO BE OUR ALLIES SHOULD KNOW BETTER THAN TO LOOK TO US FOR VOTES IN NOVEMBER.

Clearly, there is too much remaining to be done by far too few. But our unlikely network of housewives, retirees, college kids, and working people has repeatedly indicated that it will not silently accept the status quo in the North of Ireland.

1988 presents us with a set of unique opportunities. IMAGINE, if you will, passage of the MacBride Principles at the FEDERAL level. Aside from the economic impact of such a victory, consider the implications, the statement our nation would be making to the world — to the embarrassment of Mrs. Thatcher. IMAGINE, also, the possibilities presented by the Presidential Campaign. Our purpose should be to guarantee that Irish-American priorities become part of the national platforms of the Democratic and Republican parties.

But these dreams will never be realized if we continue to view them as lofty and unattainable. State Boards should be pushing the introduction or passage of MacBride if this has not been done already. All State Boards should begin dialogues and petition drives to promote the adoption of platform policies responsive to our objectives.

Brothers, it's time for all of us to roll up our sleeves.

Hero Priest of Fighting 69th

By HARRY MCGUIRK

Driving in the Times Square area recently where New York City's hustle and bustle reaches an incredible peak, our eyes caught a glimpse of a tiny square which may well be described as an Irish island. It is called Duffy Square.

The tall, bronze statue set on a monument of granite with a cross is a constant reminder of one human being's example of all the better goals in life to be achieved. Love and compassion for his fellow citizens through his love of God and his adopted country were exemplified by the lifestyle of Father Duffy.

The statue is a likeness of one of America's greatest heroes, Fr. Francis Patrick Duffy. He was a hero of a past generation but his legend lives on. His likeness in bronze stands as tall and as proud as the day it was erected on an island of tranquility in the world's most famous place — Times Square.

Seemingly oblivious to the bedlam and chaos which surrounds it every native New Yorker and every visitor to the city should take some time to visit Duffy Square and pay their respects to what is now a great part of American History — the Irish Fighting Sixty-Ninth Regiment and its World War One chaplain, Fr. Duffy.

Father Duffy was born in Canada and educated by the Sisters of St. Joseph. He qualified to hold a teacher's certificate after just one year in high school. The Josephite nuns were so excited that they sent word to the Bishop of Toronto who offered young Duffy a college scholarship to St. Michael's in Toronto.

The story goes that Duffy was at first reluctant to accept the offer because he realized that most of the students were seminarians and he did not want to become a priest. He had decided that he wanted to become a teacher. After much soul searching, he decided to study for the priesthood.

The Duffy's were a poor family. The parents eked out a living. His younger brother had a job and tried to support both of the parents and Father Duffy, who was training in a Troy, New York seminary.

Then, the younger brother, Charlie, decided he too, wanted to Rawlinson could only provide cursory details of one specific case of an intimidated juror and alleged a number (unspecified) of others."

Powers of Detention

In the new legislation the army was empowered to detain suspects for up to four hours. The police, however, could detain them under the 1973 Act for up to 72 hours. This was extended to 7 days under the Prevention of Terrorism Act. Mere suspicion was sufficient reason for police or army to use their powers of detention. A judicial decision confirmed later that any suspicion, however unreasonable, was legal grounds for arrest.

License to Ill-treat

The new emergency legislation also made it easier for the "security" forces to get the confessions necessary for the Diplock Courts to function as intended. The wording of the section dealing with admissibility of confessions gave, in effect, a license to interrogators to ill-treat detainees provided the ill-treatment did not amount to a formal violation of Article 3 of the European Human Rights Convention. Even when they exceeded the limits imposed on them the burden of proving they had done so rested on the accused.

Normalisation

A decision was made in 1974 to deny the political dimensions of the problem of north Ireland by portraying it as a problem of law and order. This led to the introduction of "criminalization" and "Ulsterization", policies which could be covered by the one term "Normalisation." The criminalization policy was announced by the declaration that anyone convicted of "scheduled", i.e. political, offenses after March 1976 would not be given special status but would be treated as a criminal. They would have to wear prison clothes and accept prison work assignments. The RUC were assigned a larger role in day to day security operations — they became more visible and the army was kept as much as possible in the background. Internment was phased out and the Diplock Courts were called upon to convict those who under the old system would have been interned. Their ability to do so depended on the ability of the RUC to obtain the necessary confessions.

Diplock Confessions

Most detainees signed confessions after being physically abused. Some were held over electric fires. Cigarettes were pushed up nostrils and applied to wrists, between fingers, to arms, backs and the genital area. Matches and candles have also been used as were electric cattle prods and medical nerve stimulators. Hand squeezing of testicles was a frequent practice as was punching in the stomach — sometimes accompanied by simultaneous chopping blows to the ribs from behind. Some interrogators went in for kicking bouts, concentrating on the inside of legs and thighs while the victim was held on the ground with legs stretched apart. Others played Russian roulette, taking turns to pull the trigger near the victim's ear. Prisoners were urinated on and females were strip searched by males and threatened with rape. Details of the brutal methods used by the RUC to get detainees to sign confessions may be found in pamphlets published by Mrs. Denis Faul and Raymond Murray.

A Committee representing the Police surgeons in 1977, expressed their concern at the condition of prisoners who had passed through Castlereagh Interrogation Center. In 1977 also a committee representing most of the attorneys handling Diplock Court cases wrote expressing their concern to the Secretary of State and complained that "ill-treatment of suspects by police officers, with the object of obtaining confessions, is now common practice." Amnesty International in 1978 called for a public inquiry into the interrogation methods used by the RUC. The Bennett Report in 1979 went outside its terms of reference to report: "Our own examination of medical evidence reveals cases in which injuries, whatever their precise cause, were not self-inflicted and were sustained in police custody."

Superglue Show Trials

The Superglue Show Trials began in 1981 and were an effort to offset the bad publicity generated by convictions which were obtained by confessions signed under duress. In the Show trials men and women have been convicted solely on the testimony of alleged accomplices who have agreed to testify when offered money or other inducements. Guilty verdicts have been returned even when the alleged accomplices were shown by defense counsel to have lied.

"The figures tend to show two main things. First, that the supergrass system fell into two distinct phases. In the first . . . 88 percent of the accused were convicted, 61 percent of these convictions resting on uncorroborated accomplice evidence. In the second, the period of decline, seven trials took place but in only two . . . were convictions secured purely on the supergrass's testimony. In the other cases the defendants were either convicted on confessions or acquitted. The appeal verdicts form a part of the second phase and confirm the view that the Northern judiciary did a U-turn from its initially highly uncritical attitude towards supergrass evidence. . . . The second conclusion indicated by the figures is that the supergrass system has amounted to a means of obtaining confessions plus quasi-internment." (Fortnight, March 1987)

Internment by Remand

Individuals charged with offenses outlined in emergency legislation in north Ireland are also subjected to what has become known as "Internment by Remand." In the rest of the United Kingdom the prosecution must convince the court that a defendant should be remanded in custody. In north Ireland the individual charged must prove that he or she will comply with conditions the court may set. Independent research also shows that in the north judges hearing bail applications put more weight on RUC objections to bail than on the actual evidence against the accused.

"Whole mornings are set aside for Diplock remands. Despite public concern at treatment in detention, defendants are not allowed to raise issues over their treatment. Sixty or more defendants may go through 'on the nod' in a morning and little complaint is made of the length of time they spend on remand before trial. The complaint of 'internment by remand' seems justified in many cases." (Harvey) Some of these defendants were held in custody for up to three years on remand. This would be the equivalent of a six year sentence.

Shoot To Kill

The Cobden Trust study, Ten Years On In Northern Ireland, reported the existence of what became known as a Shoot To Kill policy. "During 1978 the Army appear to have developed a policy of laying ambushes for suspected terrorists with a view to shooting dead those who did not immediately give themselves up." The Irish Press 12/14/82 called attention to the fact that the RUC also had a Shoot To Kill policy. This policy was the subject of an inquiry by a team of international lawyers and their findings were published in 1985:

"The number of civilians shot dead by security forces in Northern Ireland is unacceptable. At least 155 of the 269 or more persons killed by the security forces since 1969 were civilians with no known connection to paramilitary organizations or activities. The failure of the British Government to curb these killings supports the view that a certain level of death, violence and public repression is officially regarded as acceptable, on condition that it is primarily confined to one section of the community in Northern Ireland."

The International Lawyers also heard evidence on the use of Plastic Bullets. These had caused 17 deaths between 1969 and 1985 and many others had been maimed by them even though they were primarily intended for riot control. The lawyers included in their report a 1983 United Nations submission made by the International League for Human Rights on the use of plastic bullets:

"All 11 people killed have been Catholics. Inquests held in 1982 and 1983 have found that six of them were not involved in any disturbance which was going on at the time. The adjourned inquest into the death of Mrs. Nora McCabe, the mother of two children, is almost certain to come to a similar finding. Thirty-year-old Mrs. Nora McCabe was shot by the Royal Ulster Constabulary from just six feet away."

House Searches

The judgement that the British Government is willing to support public resentment provided it is "primarily confined to one section of the community" is borne out by statistics on house searches. Numerically 76 percent of the households in north-east Ireland were subjected to a search by security personnel in the period 1971-1978. These searches, the British claimed, were carried out to find arms and explosives. That they were embarked on to gather information about the residents of Catholic areas was proved by facts published by the Central Citizens Defense Committee in The Black Paper.

A total of 74,566 homes were searched in 1973, the year The Black Paper was published. At the time of publication 3,300 homes had been searched, 3,000 in Catholic, 300 in Protestant areas. While 30,000 rounds of ammunition, 10,000 lbs of explosives and 375 firearms were found in the Catholic homes, 50,000 rounds, 15,000 lbs of explosives and 325 firearms were confiscated from Protestant homes. "The searches of Protestant homes over all this period have consistently been 10 times more productive than those in Catholic houses, but the pattern of searches has not changed."

... ..

"The powers of arrest and interrogation," Patrick Hillyard commented in an article entitled Law and Order, are being primarily used by the police to collect information on individuals and communities rather than to charge and prosecute. Policing in Northern Ireland has therefore moved from a retroactive form, where those suspected of illegal activities are arrested and processed through the courts on evidence obtained after the event, to a pre-emptive form, where large sections of those communities which are perceived as being a distinct threat to the existing status quo are regularly and systematically monitored and surveilled."

become a priest. This made the economic life of the parents a little tougher. Personal sacrifices had to be made but there was great rejoicing within the family.

The church decided to ordain Fr. Francis Patrick Duffy and he was sent on to Catholic University in Washington, D.C. At the request of the townspeople at Cobourg, Canada, permission was granted for Fr. Duffy's ordination to take place in his native parish.

Times got so tough for Fr. Duffy's parents in Canada that Archbishop Corrigan of New York stepped in and got Fr. Duffy a position with a church in Haverstraw, N.Y., which paid a small salary. He sent every penny home.

At age 41, Fr. Duffy was assigned to the Bronx to start a new parish. The year was 1912 and thousands of Irish were pouring into America. Many of them were settling in the area of Washington Avenue and 184 Street. Fr. Duffy rented a vacant grocery store and with some help from his friends, turned it into a chapel. So many people attended Mass there that the street and road outside was crowded every Sunday. Within two years, he was able to buy the whole block and built the Church of Our Savior and a school. He innovated many new services for his parishioners such as a community center.

On the hot summer days during this period, he loved to come to Rockaway Beach with his parishioners, swimming and picnicking all day. He was very popular in the Rockaways.

With the onset of World War One, New York's Cardinal Farley finally caved in to Fr. Duffy's pleadings and recommended him to be chaplain of the New York National Guard unit — The Sixty-Ninth Regiment. There were but a few non-Irish names in the regiment and Father Duffy said of them: "Well God bless them. They are Irish, they are Irish by adoption, Irish by association or Irish by conviction."

When the Sixty-Ninth Regiment landed in France in 1917, they moved up to the frontlines and war was hell. Fierce battles raged night and day. Fr. Duffy was right with his men sharing the horror and the glory. He was a tower of strength as he administered to the wounded and the dying.

The 166th Infantry of the Rainbow Division, the New York Sixty-Ninth paid their dues to their beloved land America in their quest for democracy and the freedom of small nations.

May the Star Spangled Banner and the Shamrock Green be forever entwined in patriotic heroism! Perhaps Fr. Duffy's spirit moves ahead of his beloved regiment on every St. Patrick's Day as the Fighting Sixty-Ninth proudly salutes the Irish nation as the Irish people return their salute on Fifth Avenue every 17th of March.

It's time that we Irish organized an annual ceremony to commemorate Fr. Francis Duffy and his regiment.

National Committee For Catholic Action

As we leave 1987 behind us may I wish you and your family a very blessed new year.

I believe that there is no better way to start a new year than by participation in a religious celebration. That should be a communion mass and breakfast or an evening mass, whichever would be suitable for your members and their families. The most important thing now is to plan for a mass in your division or at least in your county, where all can join together in prayer. I request every president, especially county presidents and Catholic Action chairmen to plan now so that 1988 will be a year in which all Catholics come closer to God and their religion.

I am sure many of you read in the papers during Christmas the opposition from non-Catholic organizations, local communities and some politicians to the display of the Christmas manger in various locations.

Our religious beliefs and what the Catholic church stands for are constantly the subject of dispute. Therefore, we must come together to reinforce our beliefs, share our ideals, and help to make the Catholic church grow stronger.

The Family Rosary

A Message From
Rev. Patrick Peyton, C.S.C.

Intense prayer for help to our Blessed Mother gives me the courage to write this very important letter. I do not come to you as a total stranger. The work God has given me the privilege to direct these past forty-five years is summarized in this well-known sentence — The Family That Prays Together Stays Together.

My greatest joy and blessing is the response of people everywhere to this message. Let me quote from a recent letter: "Our family rosary gives us the confidence to go on offering up our sufferings when the cross gets heavy and trying..."

Family Rosary from the very beginning owes its growth and worldwide apostolate to ordinary men and women who give, like the widow in the gospel, of their want. To these dear friends I write a few times a year reporting the progress of our work and asking their prayers and financial help. This is why I come to you now to invite you to join these dear friends of Our Lady. Your support will help me continue to bring the Family Rosary message to more and more troubled families.

It is our Blessed Mother who will thank you in her own way. For my part, I pledge a daily remembrance of you and your intentions in my Mass and prayers. May God and Mary love you and grant you many blessings during this glorious Marian Year.

There are books and audio cassettes that might be of interest to readers. Two books are A Man of Faith by Father Peyton, $8.98 or 10 for $65.00; Family Rosary Prayer Book by Father Peyton at $4.95 or 10 for $35.00.

Audio cassettes include: The Seven Last Words, $6.95; The Life of Christ, $5.95; Pray the Rosary At Home With Father Peyton, $5.95; The Joyful Hour, $5.95; and The Triumphant Hour, $5.95.

St. Patrick's Battalion Subject of Manuscript

If any of your members or friends have any unpublished information about the St. Patrick's Battalion that fought in the U.S.-Mexican War (1846-48), or about John Riley (or Reilly) of County Galway, the principal organizer of that unit, or other relevant data, I would be extremely pleased to hear of it.

For more than fifteen years I have been researching and writing a book about the St. Patrick's Battalion. The book is nearly finished, but any additional information or suggestions would be helpful and deeply appreciated.

Would you please post this letter and/or include a note about the matter in any newsletter you send out to members. Thanks.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians is the oldest Irish ethnic organization in America. Officially formed in New York in 1836, it was born in anger centuries earlier in Ireland, after successive invasions by those who would master the Irish and alter their Gaelic life style. Inflexible opponents like the Vikings were fought until their power was broken; more malleable opponents like the Normans were absorbed until they were as Irish as the Irish themselves. Through it all, the Irish maintained their language, traditions, and religion, but in the 1500's came their greatest challenge.

The Protestant Reformation that swept Europe in the 16th century was marked by Royal intrigues over control of the Church's wealth and conflicts over which religion could be practiced. Violence erupted in many countries. In England, the Reformation made inroads from the reign of Henry VIII to the reign of Elizabeth I, who finally established the Church of England as the State religion. At the time of this declaration Elizabeth considered Ireland part of her state, even though the Irish did not agree.

The Papacy launched a counter-reformation and Ireland became a battlefield between the two forces as the Irish who embraced the Church introduced by St. Patrick, became the target of a campaign to reduce Rome's power by converting the masses to Protestantism. Anglo Lords in Ireland provided a base from which assaults on Irish religion were launched, and in the conflict great tracts of land were confiscated and given to Crown supporters who professed the 'State' religion. They became the landlords who governed the future of the native population. The Irish fought the theft of their lands, and the persistence with which they clung to their religion drove the English to new extremes in repression. Penal laws disenfranchised Irish Catholics from the political, social, and economic life of their own country, and with their religion outlawed and their clergy on the run, they became an underground society practicing their religion in secret.

Not surprisingly, secret societies were formed to protect the values under attack. In various locales, groups with names like Whiteboys, Ribbonmen, and Defenders were identified with attacks on landlords, but each included in its avowed purpose the protection of the Roman Catholic Church and its clergy. As time and government prevailed, some societies were suppressed, but most immediately reorganized under a new name for the same purpose: defense of faith and fatherland. History provides us with the names of many of these organizations, and even limited details of some. We know, for example, that the motto of the Defenders in 1685 was Friendship, Unity and True Christian Charity, but the secret manner in and probably the workers themselves, are ready to welcome more liberal recruitment, this is militated against not only by the environment, but also because Harland and Wolff is in a contracting market situation. It is not sensible to get involved in something which will produce nothing worthwhile."

Local Councils

The FEA also investigated employment opportunities in Unionist dominated local government councils. The case of Timothy Duffy illustrates not only the blatant discrimination that exists but also the failure of the FEA and the courts to correct the injustice.

Duffy, a Catholic, applied to Craigavon Council for the job of Council Recreation Officer. Education: Belfast College of Technology, University of Loughborough, Ulster College North, Ireland Polytechnic. Examinations passed: National Examination Board in Supervisory Management, Diploma in Management Studies, 3rd, 2nd and 1st class certificates in Turf Culture and Sports Ground Management. Experience: Assistant recreation tourist officer. The other applicant for the job, William Norton, a Protestant, left school at 14 and had not passed any examinations. He got the job.

Duffy complained to the FEA and it found that he had been discriminated against. The Sunday Times reported, 5/8/81, that the finding "was eventually upheld in the court of appeal, but Duffy does not have the job he wanted and, so far, he has no compensation."

Staff Action

FEA staff members were angered by the failure of the FEA "to get to grips with discrimination in employment in Northern Ireland." Deputy Co-ordinating Director O'Keefe claimed that the success rate of individual complainants to the FEA could have been around 20% instead of the paltry 7% it was. He attacked also the Agency's delay in pressurizing the government into including an equality of employment clause in all contracts signed with Northern Irish firms. (This principle was eventually accepted in 1981.) The matter had been discussed, he said on 15 occasions between March 1977 and October 1979 and agreement to the FEA's 'original unconscionable and ineffective proposals' had in effect been rejected by the Department of Finance."

O'Keefe was forced to resign in 1981 after having been effectively deprived of any work to do for over a year. Other staff members who had complained about the failure of the FEA to "get to grips" with discrimination were subjected to intimidation and harassment.

Staff members themselves called for an inquiry into the workings of the Agency. This led to the McCrudden inquiry and his report was later leaked to the media.

McCrudden Report

McCrudden recommended more full-scale investigations of private companies and public bodies rather than the former excessive reliance on taking up the allegations of individuals. He urged the Agency to take affirmative action to open up employment opportunities for Catholics as had been recommended by the Straubenzee report. He stressed the need for a full time legal adviser, recommended an increase in staffing for the FEA and commented on the fact that it was under-financed.

McCrudden listed 22 recommendations for the restructuring of the FEA, and stated that Law enforcement and follow-up action based on the results of law enforcement should be the central function of the agency around which every other function should revolve.

Cooper informed the Irish Times that it was difficult to pressure firms into implementing the recommendations because of the economic situation! Fortnight reported that while the FEA chiefs broadly agreed with McCrudden's findings, and accepted his criticism about the Agency's lack of legal toughness, they pointed out—in 1982—"that it was always envisaged that the FEA would concentrate on its educational role for a period before moving on to legal measures to eradicate discrimination!"

FEA Finances

When the Fair Employment Bill was being steered through parliament in 1974, Government Ministers proposed that the new Agency would have an initial staffing level of 40, and an initial annual budget of 280,000 pounds. In the first ten years of its existence the Agency should have received 5,238,179.00 pounds—the proposed 1974 budget per annum upgraded by the annual inflation rate. The total expenditure for all of these years, however, amounted to only 1,799,918 pounds. This means that since 1976 the British Government has spent only approximately £1.50 per head of population in the fight against discrimination. "Public Funding for the Arts Council, the body responsible for promoting the arts in Northern Ireland, will provide a 1986/87 Budget of 3.3 million pounds; 0.3 million pounds is to be provided for eradicating Job Discrimination." (Source: Westminster's Apartheid Economy)

FEA Staffing

Dr. Rhodes Boyson, N. Ireland's Industry Minister, announced 7/1/86, that the FEA staffing level was to be increased by more than 30 percent to 21. This would bring the number of personnel employed to just over half of the 40 initially proposed when the Fair Employment Bill was being steered through Westminster in 1974.

The British Record

The British Government commenced ruling north Ireland directly from Westminster in 1972 with William Whitelaw as the first Secretary of State. The suspension of elected bodies with the advent of direct rule left administrative power in the hands of civil servants who had worked for the old Unionist establishment. The Whitelaw regime suppressed a 1973 report showing that Protestants held 95 percent of the top 477 civil service positions.

The same regime also suppressed a 1973 report issued by the Community Relations Commission, a body set up to fight discrimination. The report showed that between August 1969 and February 1973, 60,000 people had been driven from their homes. It was described as "the largest fixed population movement anywhere in western Europe since World War II" and the report charged that government bodies, especially the Housing Executive, were responsible. This exodus and resettlement facilitated military control by establishing "strategic districts" similar to the strategic hamlets set up in Malaysia and Vietnam.

After 10 years the British controlled Fair Employment Agency has failed to come to grips with the problem of discrimination in employment practices. "Cambridge economist Bob Rowthorn... demonstrates that Catholic male unemployment is 2 1/2 times greater than their Protestant equivalents in every District Council area of the province. "17 of the provinces 26 District Councils have refused to sign the FEA's innocuous Little Declaration of Principle and Intent affirming their willingness to practice Equality of Opportunity." (Westminster's Apartheid Economy)

Fair Employment Trust

The Fair Employment Trust was established in 1986 with the declared aim of promoting the MacBride Principles. The Chairman, Peter Shevlin, and Treasurer, Robert Mort, were threatened with dismissal from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive unless they ceased their "political activity".

Oliver Kearney, the Executive Secretary, was dismissed from his post as general secretary of the Licensed Vintners Association, 5/3/87, because of his testimony to the California State Assembly in support of a resolution to adopt the MacBride Principles. Bob Cooper, FEA Chairman, who went to California to lobby against the MacBride Principles, has been awarded the Cross of the British Empire!

Action for Community Employment

The European Common Market has provided grants to governments to fund projects designed to reduce the level of unemployment for "long term" unemployed. This ACE funding (Action for Community Employment) has been withdrawn by the British Government from many projects started in nationalist areas of Belfast. Britain is committed to pauperising nationalists!

COUNTY WICKLOW HERITAGE CENTRE

Dear Editor:

As part of its plans to set up a County Heritage Centre, the County Wicklow Heritage Society, has recently commenced work on a Genealogical Research Programme which includes the indexing of all parish records in County Wicklow, research on Griffiths Valuations, Tithe Records, Ships Passenger lists, indexing of cemetery headstones etc. The entire project, which includes the computerisation of records, will take at least eighteen months to complete and will eventually provide a professional service for those people wishing to trace their ancestry in County Wicklow.

At present some twenty young people are employed on the research project.

As soon as the research is completed the Society hopes to locate the Genealogical Research Facility in part of the old jail in Wicklow town. The jail, which is almost three hundred years old, has strong connections with County Wicklow's historical past, having been in constant use through the Penal Times, various rebellions, including the 1798 United Irishmen Rebellion, land wars, the war of independence, and the civil war of the 1920's. It was also used as a holding centre for prisoners awaiting deportation to Australia. The Public Record's Office and The State Paper's Office in Dublin have excellent records of former jail inmates.

The jail is in reasonably good structural condition but needs re-roofing and a great deal of internal restoration work. The County Wicklow Heritage Society would like to hear from individuals or groups with County Wicklow connections who might like to be associated with the restoration of the jail. The Society has just published an eight page booklet which sets out our plans and we will be only too happy to forward copies of the booklet to interested parties.

Anyone seeking additional information should write to:

BRIEF HISTORY OF WICKLOW JAIL

Following the Williamite Wars and the Flight of the Wild Geese in 1692, various laws were passed to keep the majority of the Irish people ignorant and illiterate. It was important that these Laws, known as Penal Laws, were seen to be enforced, particularly in the area of the Pale. Wicklow jail was constructed to house the offenders against these laws and was commenced in 1702.

Its first recorded prisoner was one, Fr. Eoin McVeigh, guilty of failing to leave the country prior to the appointed date and sentenced to transportation to the penal colonies of Australia. In the following decade the jail was used extensively as a holding centre for prisoners awaiting transportation to Australia. For over two centuries the jail was in constant use through penal times, rebellions, land wars and in the Civil War of the 1920s.

In 1837 the jail consisted of thirty six cells (30 male and 6 female), a debtors ward, infirmary, and treadmill. An extension, built in 1840 increased the capacity to seventy-seven cells, six day rooms, four exercise yards, a public kitchen, a chapel, a hospital of three wards, DUBLIN, IRELAND — Sean MacBride, an international jurist, crusader for human rights and the only person to win both the Nobel and Lenin peace prizes, died Friday, January 15, 1988 at age 83.

MacBride, who died of pneumonia at his home, was an Irish Republican Army guerrilla leader in his teens and went on to become a co-founder of the human rights group Amnesty International.

The nuclear disarmament advocate and one-time assistant secretary-general of the United Nations also was one of Ireland's most noted constitutional and criminal lawyers. He returned to his Dublin law practice in 1979 after a 20-year hiatus espousing worldwide issues.

"He was a statesman of international status," Irish Prime Minister Charles Haughey said.

In 1974, he shared the Nobel Prize with Eisaku Sato, former prime minister of Japan. MacBride was cited for his many years of human rights work with Amnesty International and the International Jurist Commission.

Three years later, the Soviet Union awarded him the Lenin International Prize for Peace for his work in Namibia, then called South West Africa. He was among only a handful of Westerners to be given the award from a Soviet government-approved committee. MacBride campaigned to make the cause of Namibian independence from South Africa an international issue, but failed to persuade Pretoria to yield control of the mineral-rich territory.

Amnesty International, which he co-founded in 1961, won the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize for its campaign on behalf of political prisoners around the world.

MacBride was the chief sponsor of a 1984 anti-discrimination code known as the MacBride Principles, aimed at forcing U.S. companies operating in Northern Ireland to ensure equal employment opportunities for Roman Catholics.

Born in Paris, where his parents were living in exile, MacBride grew up among European intellectuals and nationalists in Paris, London and Dublin.

His father, Maj. John MacBride, was executed by the British for leading the ill-fated 1916 Easter Rising in Dublin. His mother, Maud Gonne MacBride, rebel daughter of an English army colonel, was repeatedly jailed for her nationalist activities.

When civil war broke out between IRA factions over the 1921 peace treaty that divided Ireland, MacBride fought with the IRA's militant anti-partitionists, forerunners of the Provisional IRA. He was captured but escaped after a year to London, where he worked as a journalist under a false name. He later rejoined the IRA and was chief of staff in 1936-37.

MacBride left the movement when Eamonn DeValera, a 1916 hero, dropped the oath of allegiance to the British crown from the Irish Free State's 1937 constitution.

MacBride's court battles often defended IRA suspects or fought anti-terrorist legislation, but he strongly opposed the IRA's current campaign of violence.

His nationalism established his credentials in the Third World, whose future leaders he had met in the 1920's at anti-imperialist conferences. Among them were Ho Chi Minh and Pandit Nehru. MacBride became a foreign minister in his radical nationalist party's 1948-51 coalition government. The party, Clann na Poblachta, which he founded in 1946, collapsed in 1965.

Services are to be conducted by Ireland's Roman Catholic Cardinal Thomas O'Fiaich.

Patrick J. Marron

FLUSHING, NEW YORK: Patrick J. Marron, prominent Irish American businessman of Queens, died in his sleep at his home in Flushing on Monday morning, November 30, 1987. Marron, 77, had been actively engaged in the restaurant and bar business in Queens County for over 40 years.

Patrick Joseph Marron was born in Creevyoliver, Carrickmacross, County Monaghan, educated in the national primary school and in the Christian Brothers secondary school. He emigrated to the U.S. in 1930 and continued his education at the Franklin Institute in Newark, New Jersey.

This year, Pat Marron celebrated 50 years as a member of the Ancient Order of Hibernians. He served his home division, Number 9, and the Queens County Board in many offices including that of president. At his death, Marron was president of Division 9, AOH Flushing, and a director of the New York State AOH for District 5, taking in Queens, Brooklyn and Staten Island. Pat Marron was highly regarded as an AOH fund raiser and organizer, having reorganized Queens County Divisions 15 and 21, and played a major role in organizing Division 13 in Bayside. In 1974, the Queens County Hibernians honored Marron by electing him the Queens County Aide to the Grand Marshal of the 1974 St. Patrick's Day Parade, Paul O'Dwyer.

In 1935, Patrick Marron married the former Susan Mullins, a native of Kilsrush, County Clare. The Marrons, who live in Flushing, are parents of six boys and two girls, and have 15 grandchildren. One son, Father James P. Marron, is assistant pastor of Our Lady of Hope Church in Middle Village, Queens. Earlier this year, Father Marron celebrated his 25th anniversary as a priest. Son Thomas resides in Port Jefferson; Kevin in Boston; Patrick in Flushing; Emmett in Bayside; and Brendan in Long Beach, Nassau County. Daughter Maryalice Galvin lives in Middletown, New York; and daughter Patricia Archetti in Bayside, Queens.

Jeanne O'Callaghan

Philip A. Darmody

Jeanne O'Callaghan, 71, a lifelong resident of Jersey City, died December 17, 1987 in St. Francis Hospital, Jersey City.

Since 1949, she was legal secretary for her husband, Jeremiah O'Callaghan, a Jersey City attorney and former municipal court judge.

Prior to that, she was secretary to the Army dental officer, Camp Ellis, Ill, and was a stenographer with the Atomic Energy Commission and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

O'Callaghan was a 1938 graduate of Jersey City State College. She was a lifelong supporter of Irish freedom, and supported Irish Northern Aid, as did her husband, who is Past National President of the AOH.

WASHINGTON D.C. — Philip A. Darmody of Silver Spring, Maryland, a longtime member of the Emerald Isle Division, AOH here, died on October 25, 1987. Brother Phil and his late wife, Ruth, were great supporters of functions of the Emerald Isle Division. Phil will be greatly missed but remembered by all Hibernians in their thoughts and prayers.

which these societies operated left few records for modern analysts. As a result, a true history of their times will never be written.

Today's AOH with its motto Friendship, Unity, and Christian Charity is the most recent link in the evolution of these ancient societies. Organized in Ireland for the purpose of defending Gaelic values and protecting Church and clergy, it is the successor to the secret societies of old. Although the name AOH can only be traced back to 1841, the organization can claim continuity of membership and motto unbroken back to the Defenders of 1565. The extension of that organization to America came in much the same manner as its birth in Ireland.

The rise of the Native American or Know Nothing Party in 19th century America ushered in an era of unparalleled bigotry in this country. Reminiscent of the penal laws, legislation was sought against the immigrant population because, it was stated, they diluted American principles. The massive influx of Irish, fleeing conditions in their native land, focused Know Nothing bigotry on that unfortunate group, and on the Roman Catholic Church to which they swarmed. After several attacks on Irish and Church property, the Irish immigrant resorted to a familiar tactic. Those who had been members of the AOH in Ireland banded together in this new land, and in 1836 formed an American branch of their Order. True to their purpose, they stood guard to defend Church property and, though actual attacks were few and far between, the long, cold, and lonely nights of vigil were many. The early AOH in America remained a secret society and little is known of its activities except that they provided a monetary stipend to immigrants who arrived as members in good standing from the Irish Order, and they assisted Irish immigrants in obtaining jobs and social services. Quite naturally, the early AOH Divisions were nurseries for the preservation of Irish culture and traditions in America.

In time, the Know Nothing Party was recognized as detrimental to American interests, and it faded away. The AOH on the other hand grew stronger, following the Irish immigrants as they worked their way across the country. As the need for militant support of their Church dwindled, the AOH shifted its purpose to charitable activities in support of the Church's missions, community service, and the promotion and preservation of their Irish cultural heritage in America. Today they stand not only as the oldest Catholic Lay organization in America, but as the largest Irish ethnic society in the world with Divisions in 49 of the United States as well as in Canada. Their annual dances, concerts, and parades raise millions for charity while providing a showcase for the positive contributions the Irish have made in every walk of American life.

They never forget their roots either, and can always be found actively lobbying for, praying for, and working for the total independence of a united 32-county Ireland, as their constitution avows: "by all means constitutional and lawful".

Also worn in silver and gold on a pendant or charm.

Q. Does each Irish family have its own coat of arms? Ms. Sylvia Edwards, Frostburg, MD

A. No. Ireland was one of the first countries to adopt the widespread use of hereditary surnames. Legend has it that Brian Boru (d.1014) introduced this usage. Even if he did not, surnames began to be used in the 900s before the Anglo-Normans came. Often early appearances of O and Mac name forms do not refer to sept or clan names, but to men bearing the personal or baptismal names of their fathers or grandfathers. Prior to surname usage, sept or clan names were often used, but usually this became the surname of the leading family. Until the seventeenth century, members of the lower class, especially serfs, adopted their overlords' names, much like American slaves did. Nowadays many Irish will tell you that only those families which bowed before the English throne were granted arms. Although that wives' tale may be somewhat true, there could be a number of reasons for wanting arms. Do not many American men use Jr., the 3rd, or the 4th to show direct lines of descent? Grants of arms were made to individual members of a sept or clan for loyalty or other special services (e.g. financial endowments) to the throne. No one else with the same surname, even from the same clan, had the right to use awarded arms. Now there are a number of coats of arms on record which by custom are regarded as appertaining to everyone with the same surname. This is why all Dunns have the same arms even though not all Dunns are related. Somewhere down the line all Dunns would trace their origins to a common ancestor or overlord.

Q. Is there any difference between the O, Mc, and Mac in Irish names? Mr. Anthony Foster, Oxford, MS

A. Yes. Early Irishmen often used the baptismal or personal names of their fathers and grandfathers as surnames. The O means grandson of, while Mc and Mac mean son of. Mc and M' are shortened forms of Mac, pronunciation usually determines spelling. Irish and Scots use all three forms, but Irish-Americans tend to prefer Mc.

Q. Could you please provide me with information on the name Houlihan. Ms. Patricia Holohan.

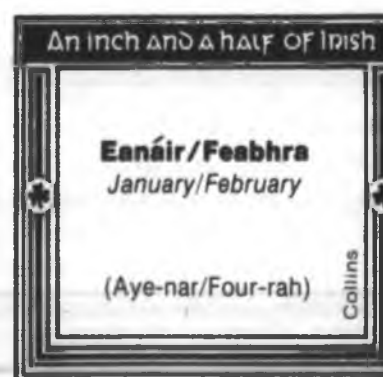

A. Among the many variants of this name are: Holahan, Holohan, Hoolaghan, Hoolahan, Holoughan, Hoolihan, Oulahan, Whoolahan. These and others derive from two O hUallachain septs. One originated in the north of Co. Offaly and the other in Co. Clare. Houlihan from Clare migrated to Munster and those from Kilkenny and south Leinster from Offaly, where the spelling Holohan is preferred.

Q. Just how Irish is the name Jackson? Mrs. Molly Jackson, Scranton, Pennsylvania

A. The surname is among the twenty-five most popularly used in Britain today. But the name came to Ireland in the early 17th century during the plantations of Ulster. Today over 50% of the Irish Jacksons live in the north, while Dublin and Cork house most of the remainder. The thing to keep in mind is that 400 years is a long time for any name to exist in any country. If you can trace your lineage to Ireland then call yourself an Irish-American; if you cannot, say the records were lost in a church fire, come and celebrate St. Paddy's along with the rest of us! Families in every colonized country have your problem. When do we stop being Irish-Canadians, Greek-Argentinians or Italian-Americans? It is simply a personal choice.

Q. Could you please tell me something about the name MacNally. Miss Catty McNally, Scranton, PA

A. The name in Irish is Mac an Fhailigh and literally means the son of someone who has wreaths. The Irish is pronounced like MacAnally, hence that common English variant. In Cos. Mayo and Roscommon, where the name is very prevalent, the Mac is often dropped leaving the anglicized Nally. These Connacht MacNallys may have originated from a Norman family. In a 1659 census the name was most popular in Cos. Armagh and Monaghan in the east of Ulster where the predominance remains. There the anglicized name was a synonym of the Irish name Mac Con Uladh, meaning son of the hound of Ulidia, the eastern section of Ulster. The connection appears unaccountable, but at sometime a Mac Can Uladh may have adopted a MacNally who gave his surname to his children who could have been known by either name. My maternal grandmother is a MacNally from Westport, Co. Mayo.

Hibernian Sports

Mike Heslin

BINGHAMTON, NY

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans!

Bowl Games: It was a very joyful New Year's Day in YR's abode. The teams which I had mentally picked to win did not. Penn State, Notre Dame and Syracuse. Penn State and ND suffered losses. Some sportscasters were calling the scores blowouts. Syracuse ended with a tie. So much for SU's perfect season. All in all, these games were not fun to watch if you were pulling for Penn State, Notre Dame or Syracuse. Yet the coaches of these teams handled their defeats much better than the coach of the Miami Hurricanes in winning. There were also one or two other coaches whose post-game remarks sounded more like sour grapes. Oh well, that's why they're coaches and YR is not.

Miami's coach thinks there should be a distinction between students and athletes who are attending college. His remarks give much credence to the term, "Dumb Jock." More on the athlete's education later.

Pro-Ball: The NFL is into its playoffs. Who would have thought (!) that teams such as Minnesota or Seattle or Houston or New Orleans would be there. The Wild Card games seemed to be anti-climatic to YR, for some reason. He just can't get excited over a team that has Bowick on it. This guy is still acting more like a spoiled kid than a mature individual earning mega-bucks for knocking people around legally. He is making more than YR will ever realize. He is also doing something that YR never could. Those are gifts. Yet, he complains about playing in "A Town like Seattle" (a paraphrasing of his quote) because it is too conservative for his tastes.

Perhaps he should have paid more attention to Geography in grammar school. Seattle is not a town. It is a city. It is quite a metropolitan one, at that. With remarks such as those, he will not endear himself to the poor Seahawk fan that shells out his hard-earned money for a season ticket.

Now New Orleans is a horse of a different color. After years of disparagement by their fans and being referred as "Aints", this year they put it all together. Their fans put the "S" back in their name. It was a nice gesture on the part of their owner, even though the Saints were eliminated in the Wild Card game, to come out and applaud the fans. This is the stuff of good PR, at the very least. It also shows that some owners are interested in the fans.

Who will win Super Bowl XXII? YR does not know but it will be interesting with all the hype that is generated around Super Bowl XXII in San Diego. The big question mark on the East Coast is what happened to the Jets and Giants? The Jets must come to grips with the reality that their defense is old. Gastineau and Klecko are not only showing their age but also injuries are slowing them down. Not that they are old chronologically but they are old with respect to the physical game they play as are many other Jets on the defensive unit. YR's suggestion is for the Jets to start rebuilding now. Joe Walton is a good coach. His staff is good. What they need is the talent to rebuild the Jets into the competitors they were. The Giants are an entirely different story. One sports pundit said that they spent more time with their ghost writers and literary agents than they did with their respective coaches, be it offense or defense. The Big Apple is an awful distraction for winners. The City loves winners and abhors losers. After the Super Bowl last year, the Giants were the toast of the town. This year they couldn't get invited to a Sean Penn movie without tipping the doorman and the usher. Basically, they are still a good team. YR would not dare to call them a super team because they are not. Forget about the cocktail circuit and pushing books. Get back to the thing that got them those book-writing contracts in the first place, football!

Roundball: The College basketball season has opened. Syracuse is going great guns in the Big East. Do they have the talent to carry them to the Final Four in March? Many people, including some sportswriters of note, think so. Time will tell. St. John's Redmen were upset on their home court this past week. This seemed to be the talk of the Metro sportscasters, by they print, radio or TV. The rest of the Big East will come alive as the season progresses.

North Carolina is moving along. They took UCLA's measure on national TV on Saturday, 01/02/88. Indiana under Bobby Knight is hanging in there in the top 10. Bobby Knight is very emotional. He may be a good coach but his temper is going to get him into trouble with the officials as it always does.

Speaking of basketball, Pistol Pete Maravich died this past week at the age of 40 years. This is much too young for anyone to die especially one who had been involved with basketball. The preliminary autopsy report is that he died from heart disease. Maravich was the greatest scorer in college basketball history.

Baseball: Jack Clark signed to play baseball with the New York Yankees. According to sources in St. Louis, Clark signed with the Yankees for less money than the Cardinals offered him. Management thanked Clark for all that he did for the Cardinals and wished him well in his new venture.

Speaking of the Yankees, there is much speculation about Billy Martin and Lou Pinella. How long Martin will manage this year or how long will he be allowed to manage before Steinbrenner becomes disenchanted with Billy? Will Pinella be allowed to be the GM without guidance from above? We are not talking divine intervention here.

Tennis, Anyone? There seems to be a ground swell against John McEnroe representing the U.S. on the court at the Olympics in 1988. These people do not deny that he can play tennis or that he won't go out for the Red, White and Blue. These people are afraid that John's mouth will not only detract from his tennis but also give Uncle Sam a black eye.

Ah yes, the Olympics! There is also talk on whether or not Korea is the place for the Olympics this year. There is still much political unrest in Korea. Their recent national elections did nothing to dispel or abate this unrest. Korea is taking aim at Japan in the electronics field and appears to be able to hold its own. This is part of the unrest. The workers in these electronic plants feel they should share in the profits by receiving better wages.

Education: As stated earlier in this article, education of athletes is something that has appeared in the dailies and the TV news since the bowl games. Pennsylvania PBS (Public Television) did a one-hour program on two coaches in the Keystone State that believe that athletes deserve to receive the education they were promised.

One coach was from a Catholic college; the other was from a state supported school. The coaches were Rolie Massamino from Villanova and Joe Paterno of Penn State. Rolie faced a problem last year when one of his former players admitted to doing cocaine while playing for Villanova. Massamino took the brunt of the criticism for this problem. He did not pass the buck, as many are prone to do in the face of adversity.

Both coaches have very good track records when it comes to educating athletes. Their former players, even those who have gone on to pro ball, in the interviews stated that these two men emphasized that the life of an athlete is short by any standard. In many professional sports, if a player is still playing in his 30's, he is considered an old man. YR says the average life span of a lineman in the NFL is less than 5 years. This stat is listed someplace. These players said that their coach, Paterno or Massamino, always told them that there is life after sports and they should be prepared to take their place in the real world.

Congratulations: To the Chicago Irish Community on their new facilities. They are now a few months old but YR did not have the opportunity to congratulate the fine people of the Windy City. YR has Finished: Keep those cards and letters coming in, ladies and gentlemen. Send them to P.O. Box 156 ESS, Binghamton, NY 13904. God Bless till we meet again the next time on the sidelines.

Ross, McGuinness, Fox and Schaff Are 'Shamrock' Winners

HICKSVILLE, NY — The eighty-member Shamrock Golf Club of Long Island, NY, reports a very successful 1987. The club membership, which includes many Hibernians, is gearing up for an early start in the Spring of 1988.

Last year's trophy winners were:

Seniors: Sean McGuinness (87); Memorial: Martin Ross (88); Presidents: Pat Fox (88); Club Championship, handicap: Roy Schaff (87); and Club Championship, scratch: Martin Ross.

The later prize is the club's premier trophy and always produces great competition, this year being no exception. Jack O'Sullivan, Syl Nugent, Pat Cowan and Martin Ross were the semi-finalists. Pat and Martin won their matches and played a 36 hole final at Middle Island. Martin Ross was the victor and new club champion.

Charity Football Match

DUTCHESS COUNTY, NY — A new AOH Division here in the county is joined by a local chapter of the Sons of Italy to raise funds for a charity project. A local concerned citizen, Mrs. Patrice, needed funds to expand her free donations of turkey dinners and toys to underprivileged children in the area. In a charity football match between the two groups Mike McGowan, second from left, was the captain and quarterback of the AOH team. The Moriarty brothers, Jim and Willy, are the first two from the right.

Although it is an ongoing concern, this is the special time of the year when extra emphasis is given to the legislative error on the subject of Abortion and Pro-life. Our Capitol has been besieged by human beings, pushing for the right-to-life of the unborn child. At the time of this writing, the results of the March for Life are not known. Untold numbers participated in this expression of concern on January 22nd.

We of Irish extraction are noted for our deep and abiding faith and we know the value of prayer. This is what is needed in these ever crucial days of legislative decisions. We must pray and pray now, that our elected officials may see the light before it is too late, and correct the grave error made fifteen years ago. To overlook the "little things" in life is to miss the biggest part of life itself.

Bring your feelings to the attention of your congressmen and senators and yes! even to our president, Mr. Reagan. Storm the mails now. It is not too late to act. From the womb to the tomb, every life is precious.

In this Marian Year, ask Our Blessed Lady to intercede. Recite daily the prayer of the late Bishop Fulton J. Sheen - "Life of the Unborn." Let every Irish heart respond and perhaps all our prayers will make the difference.

The close of the 1987/1988 National Irish Essay Contest is drawing near. National Historian Kathie Linton reminds all state historians to check with their respective county historians to emphasize the fact that they must submit their entries to the state chairman by February 15th. It is then the responsibility of the chairman of each state to have all the essays evaluated and choose two winning essays from each category. The two selections must reach the National Historian by March 15th. Kathie specifies that all rules must be followed or the essay will be disqualified. Winners names will be announced as soon as the results are available.

It is also important that every state historian forward an update of their state's history to Kathie Linton prior to our National Convention in Cleveland, Ohio, July 25-28, 1988. Some states have neglected to send any "history." If you are one of these, please complete your state history before convention. MARY RYAN, center, of Marlboro, MA, Division 21, receives the Hibernian of the Year Award from Mary Morey, left, president of the division; and Joan O'Brien, right, Middlesex County Board president.

Middlesex County: Mary Ryan, Division 21 of Marlboro was recipient of "Hibernian of the Year Award" for 1987, presented at the Annual County Board Dance held in Weston. Presenting the Award was State President Mary Dolan and Middlesex County President Joan O'Brien.

Mary has been active in Hibernianism for many years and was instrumental in reactivating the Marlboro Division of which she was the president for three years. She also was County Board president for two years, is currently treasurer of the State Board and serves her own division in the same capacity.

A dedicated Hibernian, Mary currently runs the Thrift Shop at her parish church, Immaculate Conception, in Marlboro and assumes the role of collecting, sorting, and distributing clothing for the Shop, as well as the Pine Street Inn, a shelter for the homeless in Boston.

The wife of Jack Ryan (a member of Division 16 AOH), the mother of seven children, and grandmother of four, Mary also works full time as nurse and office manager for a local medical center.

We should all be aware that there are 150,000 Irish citizens in the U.S. today with illegal status. In 1986 a strict immigration law was passed that has caused problems for the Irish illegals and for any of the young Irish people that want to emigrate to the United States. You ask, what can I do about it?

The Immigration Bills currently in the Senate and House of Representatives are undergoing revision. The committee hearings have begun on a Senator Ted Kennedy sponsored bill and it may go to the Senate floor in April or May 1988. Congressman Brian Donnelly of Massachusetts has sponsored a similar bill in the House of Representatives.

It is imperative that members of our organization contact their elected officials to support these revisions. If each person reading this column writes to their Senators and Congressmen and asks a friend to do the same, action will follow.

During the past month, all Division, County and State Presidents received information on the joint Membership Drive. At this time of the year each of us should be looking for ways to increase our membership and to increase attendance at our monthly meetings.

How Can We Increase Our Membership??? We should encourage people to join the Hibernians. When they ask "Why should I belong?"...counter with the question "Why shouldn't you belong to the oldest Catholic organization?"

Highlight the purpose of the organization as set forth in the Preamble to our National Constitution - to promote Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity; to foster the ideals and perpetuate the history and traditions of the Irish people and to promote Irish Culture. Highlight some of the activities - Columban Mission Fund (note that at the 1986 National Convention a check for $47,000 was presented to the Columban Fathers); Catholic Action activities; our Annual Irish Essay Contest; Trinity College Scholarship and the Notre Dame Hibernian Fund established to fund the study of American Catholicism, especially the Irish influence; and the many Hibernian scholarships at Notre Dame.

We have just received our new application forms and our new organizer folders. If you are about to organize a new Division, please request our new organizer kit from National Secretary Dolores Voelker.

Once that we have the members, what do we do to encourage them to attend monthly meetings? The President and Officers must try to remember that members will not sacrifice their time to attend a poorly conducted meeting or join an organization that doesn't offer a variety of activities.

The President should prepare an agenda and check that the other officers are prepared to give activity reports. The Ritual provides the Order of Business, but an agenda would keep the proper flow. The meeting should start promptly when a quorum is present. The president should conduct the meeting, not dominate it.

She will provide the atmosphere and framework in which the membership can choose its area of emphasis. Other officers should be prepared to give complete and informative reports. The membership and officers share the responsibility for the welfare of the organization. Members should assist the officers. At times, members do not agree with every decision, but they should support decisions made by the membership.

Goals should be set for 1988 and a guide formulated on how to achieve it. Let 1988 be the year that we, the Ladies, Ancient Order of Hibernians, double our membership. If each of us brings in one new member, the task will be accomplished.

Treasurer Sr. Esther Marie, SSJ; Historian Sr. Ellen O'Connor, SND; Missions, St. Helen Turcotte, SSJ; Catholic Action, Sr. Patricia James, SSJ; Mistress at Arms Cathy Joyal; and Sentinel Rita Lonergan.

A very successful Christmas Supper and Party was held under the leadership of Alice O'Shea. Approximately seventy members and friends attended.

Division 14 in Watertown is constantly increasing ranks by adding young new members. The 1987 season concluded with a delicious chicken dinner at the Annual Christmas Party. For '88 the calendar holds several fund raisers for division charities, including a pound party, white elephant sale and our annual game card.

At State Convention Anne Devaney was endorsed for National Board on which she has served in the past. Having been a Hibernian for almost thirty years, she has served on all levels and will serve the order with dignity and enthusiasm.

ALICE DORAN MURPHY holds the plaque naming her Irishman of the Year at a recent Communion Breakfast in Pottsville, PA. Awarded annually by JFK Division 2, AOH, she is the first woman to receive the award. With Alice are, left to right, Carl Bartholomew, AOH; Rose O'Haren, LAOH; and Leo Haley, AOH president, Pottsville.

Pennsylvania State Board officers traveled to Waterbury, CT for the weekend of October 31 to honor National President Shelia Clifford, where they fully enjoyed the Hibernian hospitality of New England.

Schuylkill County, Pottsville: Alice Dean Murphy was selected Irishman of the Year 1987. A member of LAOH Division 2 JFK, Alice is the first woman to be chosen for this award which is given yearly by AOH Division 2 JFK, to recognize a deserving individual in Schuylkill County. She is president of her division, a position she has held for twelve years. In addition to her efforts in behalf of the Order, she is recognized for her devotion to her church, her family and her business career. The thoroughly enjoyable event was chaired by Mary Purcell.

Allegheny County: The first division in Pennsylvania was organized in 1897 at Sacred Heart Parish in Pittsburgh. To celebrate their 90th Anniversary, a Communion Breakfast was held for members and guests on November 7 at Sacred Heart Church. Rev. Raymond Utz, pastor, was celebrant. Following the Mass a brunch and program was held in the Social Hall. Mary Margaret Maurath, county president, was toastmistress. The history of the division was given by Margaret Visokey, whose grandfather was one of the organizers of the division. Margaret Cooney, state president, was guest speaker.

The Allegheny County Board held their second quarterly meeting on December 6 with Division 11 as host. President Eileen Matini and her members served a delicious Christmas buffet. Although the Christmas spirit was in the air, a Reports Workshop was held.

Lehigh County: Bethlehem Division 1, Trinanog, is a new division organized on September 20, 1987. Best wishes go out for their success as they are welcomed to the LAOH family. Claire McNelis, state vice president, installed the Division. The officers are: President Ellen Trexler; Vice President Patti Edgar; Secretary Mary Regan; and Treasurer Joan Foley.

In addition to working for the LAOH, she was past president of

Tribute to A Grand Lady

To every Christian, the birth of Our Savior on Christmas Day is one of the most meaningful holidays in our lives. This year, with the strains of Joy To The World, O Holy Night and Adeste Fidelis, still ringing in our ears, we were faced with the stark reality that death is an uninvited guest to celebrations. One of New York State's most respected Hibernians, Margaret G. Moriarity, was called to her eternal reward on Christmas Day when she suffered a fatal heart attack.

Anyone who has been a long-time member of our Noble Order is thoroughly familiar with her many contributions to the LAOH and will certainly miss her. Marge joined the then Ladies' Auxiliary 9 in Flushing, N.Y. in 1949. From the beginning she was devoted to the aims, aspirations and ideals of Hibernianism. She gave of herself unstintingly to further our work and her ability was recognized when she became a member of the Queens County Board and its president from 1966-1968. She worked tirelessly at state and national conventions and often added sparkle to the sessions by the astuteness of her questions. She had the rare ability of being able to disagree with someone without being disagreeable. Her knowledge of the Constitution and By-Laws made her an authority in Hibernian circles and in Queens, her decisions were referred to as "the gospel according to Margaret."

Marge loved people and this affection was returned. She was a thoroughly nice person, with a delightful sense of humor and a heart of gold. Nothing was too much for her — if it meant chauffeuring a friend to a meeting or a convention, she did it willingly and never left the recipient feeling indebted to her.

In September 1987, at the request of the New York State Board, the National Board conferred Honorary Life Membership on her. Life Membership is bestowed in recognition of outstanding service to the LAOH over a long period of years. During the thirty-nine years she belonged, Marge was a devoted member. Had her health prevailed, she most certainly would have been a state officer and New York State President.

In addition to working for the LAOH, she was past president of

MARGARET G. MORIARITY

Ladies' Auxiliary, Knights of Columbus, Chapter 5753 in South Huntington and a valued member of the Parish Council at St. Elizabeth's in Melville.

Monsignor Arthur Kane celebrated the Mass of Christian Burial on Tuesday, December 29, 1987. Mr. Hugh O'Rourke and his fourteen year old son, Brian, members of the Kevin Barry, Division 3, East Northport Pipers, played "Amazing Grace" and other tunes at the Mass.

Division 9, LAOH, Flushing, N.Y., Marge's division, donated a beautiful vestment in her memory. Monsignor Kane wore the vestment when he said her mass. Her mortal remains were interred in St. Charles Cemetery.

To the Moriarity family — her lovely mother, her sister Mary, her brother Edward and her sister-in-law Rose and their children, Edward, Jr. and Ann Marie, we offer our sincerest condolences. They have the joy of knowing she was not only well respected but also well loved. Her presence will be missed. Margaret G. Moriarity was a unique, one-of-a-kind individual who can never be replaced. Her long suffering is over. Her life of Christian example will be rewarded by Our Father who called her to be with Him on the Feast that we celebrate as the beginning of Christianity.

Seven Days, Seven Men, Seven Hills

Northumberland Road.

Lieutenant Michael Malone and Volunteer Grace were waiting in No. 25 and as the troops came into range several volleys rang out and several British soldiers fell dead. The battle here went on for thirty minutes until Malone was killed in action while he allowed Grace to escape out a back window. The British lost over one hundred men at this point in the battle.

They regrouped and marched on and soon came under the fire of the remaining eleven Volunteers. Joe Clarke, who was in the parochial hall, told me that the British were so close that at one stage he stuck his revolver out the window to fire and hit a British soldier on the head with his gun. The British fell back and heavy mortars were fired at Clanwilliam House. The house was soon ablaze but the Volunteers kept their positions at the windows with Reynolds shouting: "They shall not pass! They shall not pass!"

A short while later Reynolds gave the order to evacuate, but he himself stayed on, muttering to himself: "They shall not pass." Four Volunteers escaped, Willie Ronan, Jimmy Doyle, James Walsh and Thomas Walsh. On their way out, they saw the dead bodies of their comrades, Richard Murphy and Patrick Doyle. George Reynolds died later that evening as the house was engulfed in flames.

Joe Clarke was arrested. He was placed against a door and a British soldier prepared to execute him. Luckily for Joe the bullet missed, going into the door just above his head. Joe lived on to the age of ninety-four and when he died he was the oldest revolutionary in the world; the greatest Fenian of all time in Ireland. It was indeed an honour to have been his friend and comrade in later life.

ST. THOMAS'S HILL

A few men were playing football near the Magazine Fort on St. Thomas's Hill in the Phoenix Park, when the ball went over the wire fence. "Would you mind getting us the ball?" said one man to the sentry. As the sentry turned, the men ran in and soon the fort was in the hands of the Volunteers. The plan was to take as much ammunition and guns as possible and blow up the powder store.

The job was soon done but instead of blowing up the fort they set it on fire. The haul was taken to the Four Courts, to Ned Daly and the First Battalion.

CONSTITUTION HILL

Ned Daly and his men had met in Blackhall Street. His task was to set up headquarters in Church Street with outposts in North King Street, the Mendicity Institution and Constitution Hill.

The First Battalion wrote a glorious chapter in the story of Easter Week. Sean Houston's post at the Mendicity Institution was only supposed to hold out for two hours, yet they held out for three days against terrible odds. All the outposts fought bravely, but special mention must be made of Reilly's Fort, the raid on Linenhall barracks and the men in the North Dublin Union.

When Pearse, Connolly, Plunkett, Clarke and MacDermott were burned out of the GPO, it was to Daly and the men of the First Battalion that they were making their way when they got caught in Moore Street.

When the butcher Maxwell came over as general in charge of all British troops, he gave the order for wholesale slaughter to be carried out in the North King Street area. The troops entered North King Street from the Bolton Street end and raided house after house, and, when they could not find any Volunteers, took out their spite on the local in-

REWARD

But what was the reaction of Maggie Thatcher when the West British sycophants grovelled over to Number 10 Downing Street with the extradition treaty on a silver platter? She was outraged that the Irish had dared to include even review of English extradition requests by the Dublin Attorney General! Some people are just never satisfied. (Even the Devil gave Daniel Webster the opportunity to plead his client's case in court.)

and a laundry.

Executions took place in the jail yard up to the end of the nineteenth century. Some of the 1798 rebels — United Irishmen — such as Billy Byrne (whose monument stands in the Market Square), were executed here. Another leader of the United Irishmen, James 'Napper' Tandy, was jailed here prior to deportation to France.

From 1918 to 1921, during the War of Independence, the jail became the headquarters of the Cheshire Regiment of the British Army and a prison for the latest revolutionaries, the Irish Republican Army, and Sinn Féin members. Between 1922 and 1924 the National Army of the Transition Government similarly occupied and used it.

One of the jail's most distinguished prisoners, Erskine Childers, author of "Riddle of the Sands" and father of the late President of Ireland, was arrested at the Annamoe home of R.C. Barton and held in Wicklow jail before being transferred to Dublin for trial. He was executed at Beggars Bush Barracks on November the 24th, 1922.

Its use as a jail ceased about 1924. In more recent years the jail has been used as a store by Wicklow County Council, the present owners.

nocent people. Daly and his men had withdrawn to the Four Courts, but under "Butcher" Maxwell's orders, the North King Street massacre took place.

Michael Noonan and George Ennis were murdered at No. 174; Thomas Hickey, his son Christopher, and Peter Connolly at No. 170; Michael Hughes and John Walsh at No. 172; Patrick Bealen and James Healy at No. 177; Peter Lawless, James MacCartney, James Finnegan and Patrick Hoey at No. 27; and John Beirnes murdered in nearby Coleraine Street. These names and their stories are forgotten by Ireland. We can well imagine their last moments.

J. J. Reynolds, a brother of George Reynolds of Clanwilliam House, wrote a small book entitled 'A Fragment of 1916 History.' In it he gives the story of how the Irish fought and how the British fought in Easter Week.

The British buried their victims in the cellars of the houses. Whenever I walk down North King Street I can feel the gloomy air around the places where the British did their dirty work in Dublin.

RICHMOND HILL

Across the road from Richmond Hill is the main entrance to the Old Richmond barracks. Today it is St. Michael's Estate and St. Michael's CBS school. In 1916 this was the scene of all the court-martials, the picking out of prisoners, the jumping off ground for the firing squad, the quicklime grave, and the concentration camps of England and Wales.

This is where I went to school as a child and I used to play in the yard where the prisoners walked. Once a month I was paraded in the big gym with the whole school and the names of the bold boys were read out from a black diary. My name was always in the top ten. We got our medicine in front of the whole school — six bliffs on each hand.

In the same big gym the Specials came from Dublin Castle with little black notebooks and in the names of the first fourteen were my two Pa, my three Cs and my two Macs; with Colbert, Heuston, Mallin, Willie Pearse, O'Hanrahan, Daly and MacBride; and Sir Roger hanged in England; Thomas Kent shot in Cork; Monaghan, Sheehan and Keating drowned at Ballykissane pier; and The O'Rahilly and Shortis shot dead in Moor Lane.

My first shout, on Redmond's Hill, is a shout of thanks to the men and women of 1916. Not forgetting the men and women of Wexford, Louth and Meath and the other men who came from other counties and overseas.

My second shout, on Cork Hill, is a special shout of thanks to Pearse and Connolly for leaving such a crystal clear message, a gospel of freedom, republicanism, socialism and separatism.

My third shout, on Misery Hill, is a shout of thanks to old Joe Clarke, a shout of thanks to Nurse O'Farrell and Julia Grennan, a shout of thanks to Helena Moloney and Dr. Kathleen Lynn, a shout of thanks to Brian O'Higgins, the Count Plunkett and a host of others in my mind and prayers for a heritage and tradition unparalleled anywhere else in the world.

Seven Days, Seven Men, Seven Hills

Easter Rising 1916

By EAMONN MAC THOMAS

I knew the story of the 1916 Easter week rising at a very early age. Long before I came to the use of reason at seven years of age I could name, off by heart, the seven men who signed the Proclamation.

My key to the memory of the names was two Ps, three Cs and two Macs — Pearse, Plunkett; Clarke, Connolly, Ceannt; MacDonagh and MacDermott. But I also had other daily reminders.

My favorite shop was Clarke's on Bulfinch Road. My aunt that lived on the Sugar Loaf Mountain was Jinny Connolly and Plunkett's of Island-bridge was the place where we got the free loaves of bread on our way to the Phoenix Park. Pierce Redmond's grocery shop on Emmet Road always reminded me of Padraig Pearse and Redmond's Hill. Ceannt's name was easy as I had to pass Ceannt's Fort on Mount Brown Hill on my way to school in Basin Lane convent.

The two Macs were the easiest to remember. In my childhood the word 'Mack' was a very common one; anyone whose name was not known was called 'Mack'. "Hey Mack, what time is it?"

My next memory test came in remembering other words and names connected with the Rising, or 'the Rebellion' as my mother called it. Grace Gifford, who married Joe Plunkett in Kilmainham jail a few hours before his execution by a British firing squad. The Countess, whose name we did not even try to pronounce — 'Market Vitz', or something like that. But we did not need the surname, the word 'Countess' held us in a magic spell.

John MacBride's name was easy to remember as it was on a sheet of music with a photograph of him and two green, white and orange flags at each side. Underneath were the words of the song, 'Wrap the green flag round me, boys.'

On one occasion I wrapped the bedsheet round me and looked at myself in the wardrobe mirror, trying to imagine how MacBride would look wrapped in a green flag. I remember that I was not impressed and thought that MacBride was a Roman, like the ones we used to see at the four-penny rush in the local flea-house that the owners called a picture palace.

My first tour of the 1916 Easter Week garrisons was in 1937 at the age of nine years. The twenty-first anniversary of the Rising was held in great style. Flags and bunting decorated the city, the buildings were all floodlit and Kilmainham jail was open to the public.

My ma and my aunts took me on a private tour. I kicked up like hell about the long walks and got a few clouts for running up and down the hillgraves in Arbour Hill. The place I liked best was Redmond's Hill. Maybe it was because Cobbolo's icecream shop was around the corner in Cuffe Street. Icecream in those days came out of a bucket and the big thick wafer was dripping with red raspberry juice that was only beautiful. I was nearly killed for letting the juice roll down on to my white Sunday shirt and was only saved by the College of Surgeons and the story of the Countess and Michael Mallin.

The ma brought us over to the green railings to show us the spot where Philip Clarke of the Citizen Army gave her his brand new bike to bring home to his wife in Cork Street. When my mother got back to the Green with a parcel for Philip from his wife, poor Philip was dead and Mallin and the Countess had taken over the College of Surgeons. The ma spent the rest of the week running messages for the men in Jacob's factory under MacDonagh and MacBride.

As the years rolled by, and I grew to manhood, I became the friend of many men and women who took part in the Easter week rising and the fight for Irish freedom. Around many firesides in Dublin I got their story — first hand from the men and women involved.

Their story began on Easter Sunday, April 23rd, 1916.

The Military Council met at Liberty Hall at 9 a.m. and issued fresh orders that the Rising would begin at twelve noon on Easter Monday. At twelve noon on Sunday the Proclamation was agreed on and it was printed in Liberty Hall. My friend Helena Maloney was one of the first people to read it to those gathered around.

News was already to hand about the scuttling of 'The Aud' arms-ship off Daunt's Rock, County Cork, by order of her captain, Karl Spinder; the arrest of Roger Casement at McKenna's Fort by the RIC; and MacNeill's countermand orders that the Volunteers were not to parade. Sunday, the first day, was one of messages, by bike, by tram, by train, by motor car and by foot.

On the second day, Easter Monday, April 24th, 1916, there was only partial mobilisation in Dublin because of MacNeill's countermand. Only for the message brigade no one would have turned up, but despite the small numbers it was decided to go ahead.

At eleven thirty in Liberty Hall, the Citizen Army bugler sounded the fall-in for the army of the Irish Republic. At twelve noon the main body marched out of Liberty Hall, headed by Commandant-General Pearse and Commandant-General Connolly, and occupied the General Post Office in Sackville Street. From the steps of the doorway, Pearse read the Proclamation of the Irish Republic to onlooking citizens:

"In the name of God and of the dead generations from which she receives her old tradition of nationhood..."

CORK HILL

A small party of Citizen Army men and women, led by Captain Sean Connolly — one of my mother's best friends — attacked Dublin Castle, firing the first shots of the Rising. They took over City Hall and the buildings opposite in Parliament Street. During the early part of the fighting Captain Sean Connolly was hit by a hail of machine gun bullets and died in the arms of Helen Maloney. Dr. Kathleen Lynn attended to the other wounded.

After fierce fighting, the attacking party withdrew. In the attack on Dublin Castle, Charles D'Arcy, aged fifteen years, Lieutenant Sean O'Reilly, George Geoghan and Louis Byrne also gave their lives for Ireland.

Only a handful of men and women, yet they did what Silken Thomas failed to do with his army of six hundred men. They could well have taken the Castle, that Easter Monday morning, as it was only guarded by ten men, but the plan was merely to keep it at bay and that they did with courage and bravery which won the admiration, not only of the republican forces, but also of the Castle masters as well.

The next time you pass down Cork Hill, look at the Upper Castle Gate and remember with pride the names and deeds of the gallant men and women who fought there in 1916.

MOUNT BROWN HILL

The Fourth Battalion, under the command of Eamonn Ceannt and Cathal Brugha, met at Emerald Square, Cork Street. Only one-third of the unit turned up due to MacNeill's countermand. The first party of twelve cyclists followed by thirty men on foot went along the banks of the Grand Canal and entered the South Dublin Union grounds by the Rialto gates at the top of Watery Lane.

Brugha left with the second party and made his way, via James Street, to the main entrance of the Union. Con Colbert followed with another party to take over Watkins' brewery in Ardee Street and put an outpost in Marrowbone Lane distillery. Another outpost was put in Roe's distillery at the top of Mount Brown Hill.

The men were well dug in and the first attack came from the large British garrison who were stationed in Richmond barracks. The British took over the Guinness brewery in James Street as headquarters and sent about one thousand soldiers to surround and attack the Union. After the week's battle several British soldiers lay dead and Cathal Brugha had twenty-five bullet wounds. Nurse Keogh was killed on the steps of one of the buildings as she was going to assist a wounded British Tommy.

When the surrender came Ceannt did not want to join in. Only after long talks with MacDonagh and MacBride did he agree to march out under the white flag. Brugha was taken to the Castle hospital and was sent home to die; but Cathal Brugha did not die in Easter Week nor in the weeks or years that immediately followed. He was cut down by Free State guns in 1922, the words 'no surrender' on his lips.

Sir Francis Vane, the head of the British forces, could not believe that Ceannt and Brugha had held the Union with less than fifty men, and thought that there were at least a thousand men.

Ceannt was very disappointed with the surrender and left his dying letter written in his cell in Kilmainham jail as a guide to future revolutionaries: "Never treat with the English enemy. Fight on till the end."

REDMOND'S HILL

The Second Battalion under Thomas MacDonagh took over Jacob's biscuit factory and sent a party of Volunteers to assist Commandant Mallin and the Countess in the Stephen's Green area. Jacob's high building gave MacDonagh's men a few easy shots into St. Patrick's Park where the British were parading and into the grounds of Dublin Castle. John MacBride, who was passing by at the time decided to join in the fight and was appointed second-in-command.

Jacobs proved to be a very good garrison, with an ample food supply of biscuits, cakes and flour. The British did not attack as the Volunteers had the advantage of height. The week was spent sending help to Mallin in the Green, which took the brunt of the fighting.

The British took over the Shelbourne Hotel and mounted machine guns on the roof, picking off many Citizen Army men in the open Green park. Lack of numbers, again due to MacNeill, made it impossible to man the hotel and Mallin and the Countess were forced to take over the College of Surgeons, where they held out bravely until the surrender order came at the end of the week.

The British wanted to execute the Countess, but because of the fuss they themselves were kicking up over the German execution of the English spy, Nurse Cavell, feared world opinion.

MISERY HILL

If you walk down Macken Street, named after Peadar Macken, who was accidentally shot in Boland's Mill in 1916, you will come to a street named Misery Hill. It gets its name from the lepers of old who came here to die. Many republicans were executed in the same place in 1798 and 1803.

The area around here was under the command of Eamonn de Valera and the Third Battalion. Boland's Mill was the main headquarters, with outposts at Mount Street Bridge, Westland Row railway station, Misery Hill, and the train line out as far as Blackrock.

The Battle of Mount Street Bridge, which was held by thirteen men against thousands of Sherwood Foresters, must rank as the finest battle in the annals of world history. Clanwilliam House, under the command of George Reynolds held seven men; the schools held two men; the parochial hall held two men; and No. 25, Northumberland Road held two men.

The British reinforcements, coming from England, landed at Dun Laoghaire (Kingstown) and some of them thought they were in France. They marched on Dublin and when they got to the cross-roads at Ballsbridge they rested. Then they made their mistake: instead of taking Pembroke Road they took

inal Decries Violence and injustice in Northern Ireland

NEW YORK, MARCH 17, 1988 — Amidst the splendor of St. Patrick's Church on 5th Avenue and the sea of concelebrants of the Mass surrounding him, and facing thousands of paraders, local and foreign dignitaries, and officers and men of the 69th Regiment, His Eminence John Cardinal O'Connor lashed out at the violence and injustice abounding in Northern Ireland.

The Cardinal made an emotional plea for hundreds of thousands of Irish-Americans to join the peace and justice pilgrimage to the Shrine of Our Lady of Knock in which he himself plans to participate. "I ask you to think seriously about this possibility — we must do something," declared the Cardinal. He recalled how he had suggested calling off the parade as a sign of mourning, "but that's not the Irish way," he decided. "Rather we will dedicate the parade to the honor of the victims." He continued, "I would like to feel exuberant; I would like to feel joyful, but I do not feel that way today. I do not feel like reviewing the parade and I suspect many of you feel the same way."

The Cardinal described how he prays for an end to the "madness" and asked, "Where are the 40 million Irish-Americans in this land? Why have they not raised their voices on behalf of the suffering ones?" He challenged priests and nuns and especially social activists, "who have spoken out about oppression in other lands." "Have we forgotten the very existence of Ireland and the horrors perpetrated there for so many years?"

Cardinal O'Connor often speaks out and writes about Ireland and is critical of British policy there. He was part of a delegation which visited Ireland, North and South, on a fact-finding mission in 1984, headed by Bishop James Malone, president of the National Conference of Bishops. On the tour were Bishop Mark Hurley of Santa Rosa, Calif., Bishop Francis Stafford of Memphis, Tennessee, and Monsignor Daniel Hays, General Secretary, National Conference of Catholic Bishops. On his return Cardinal O'Connor related his thoughts to writer Gerald Costello, whose article appeared in the New York Diocese publication, Catholic New York. The following are excerpts of the Cardinal's observations:

"I don't think I ever realized then just how Irish I really am."

Archbishop O'Connor, back in New York after a four day fact-finding tour of Northern Ireland with three other American bishops, was recalling his growing impatience, as a local official painted an impossibly bright picture of the troubled province during one of their many stops. Then the bishops followed up the presentation with a series of hard questions: What about plastic bullets? Why do employers discriminate against Catholics? What can be done about a judicial system that jails suspects for years on the flimsiest of charges?

If the questions found no ready answers, they served another purpose — to place in sharp focus the anger and despair that grip the northeastern corner of Ireland.

The bishops found ample evidence of those problems as they met with prisoners and their families and toured bleak sections of Belfast and Derry, where they mingled with worshippers after Mass. Their rounds of meetings were almost non-stop — with Catholic bishops and leaders of other faiths, with politicians in both the North and the Republic with business and union officials.

"You get a feel for things you can't possibly get through reading," Archbishop O'Connor said. "You get a sense of the complexity of the issues that I hadn't previously appreciated. 'I came back really disturbed. I kept telling those with whom we met that if I went home with nothing else, it was impossible to ignore that wherever I went in Northern Ireland I was told repeatedly and emphatically — and given some striking examples — about discrimination against Catholics in employment. The figures bear this out: the unemployment rate for Catholics is at least twice that for Protestants in the North. And personally, I didn't feel that the reasons given by those who were trying to explain this were satisfactory.'"

Later at a press conference, as the bishops answered questions from reporters, much of the discussion centered on violence in Northern Ireland and the role of American contributions that helped to finance it.

Noting that violence had taken place on both sides of the dispute, Archbishop O'Connor said: "I will state unconditionally that I will discourage and strongly resist the collection of money to be used in the furtherance of violence but I will not let the whole Irish cause be tied to the question of the Provisional I.R.A. . . . I would also ask people to look much more carefully at the underlying causes that provoke the violence."

President's Message

Teachtaineacht an Uachtairain
By Nicholas Murphy, National President

CROPPIES LIE DOWN

The world is beginning to see another dimension of the quality of English rule in Ireland. Since 1982 there has been in effect a "shoot to kill" policy on the part of the occupation forces in those six of the divided Irish Province of Ulster's nine counties known as "Northern Ireland". In spite of the fact that the British government in London claims to be operating in the interest of the people of the North, civil and human rights have been routinely disregarded to a greater or lesser degree throughout the nearly six decades of the existence of the six-county statelet. Not satisfied with long sentences handed down by non-jury courts in which the uncorroborated evidence of paid police informers is sufficient evidence for conviction, Her Majesty's government instituted a shoot on sight "shoot to kill" policy aimed at those who were suspected of being so-called "terrorists". The recent murder of three unarmed Irish people in Gibraltar shows that this policy is now to be implemented outside the confines of occupied northeast Ireland. Will the next victims be former IRA men now living peacefully in the United States, or Irish Northern Aid activists, members of Clan na Gael or Cumann na Saoirse or perhaps even Gaelic Leaguers?

The message of Margaret Thatcher's government is clear, it is "Croppies lie down" or Mother England will put you down.

The tragic bombing and shooting in the cemetery on March 10th was an extension of the "shoot to kill" policy. If the perpetrator was the actual agent of the occupation forces or merely their self-appointed virtual agent, the effect was the same. Three days later two armed, plain-clothes British soldiers in an unmarked car apparently attempted to harass and intimidate the mourners in the funeral procession of one of those killed at the funeral of the Gibraltar victims. They did not get away with it.

Whether acting on their own or under orders they were done in by the apparent arrogant supposition that they were somehow immune from any retribution. A shocked world watched on television that night as the mourners, presumably including many who had been attacked in the cemetery the previous Wednesday, turned on their assailants and exacted unprompted retributive justice.

The true nature of the violence of English occupation in Ireland has never been properly exposed in the general secular news media, nor has the violence of arrest and seven days torture ("deep interrogation" they call it). But the Anglophile news media have been having a field day with the story of the "brutality" of the Paddy's killing the poor English soldiers.

Ignored is the story of how short a sentence was served by the only British soldier to be convicted of murder in "Northern Ireland." Ignored are the many stories of the violence of the occupation forces over the past twenty years. Ignored are the institutionalized civil and human rights violations which are everyday life in the North. And most notably, ignored is the question of what must have caused the frustration and anger which was vented in the passion of that moment which we witnessed on the nightly TV news.

One message must surely come from these incidents: all is not well under English occupation in Northern Ireland, and, whatever the London government thinks can be accomplished by the violence of their agents — the Croppies are not going to take it lying down.

PILGRIMAGE FOR PEACE WITH JUSTICE AND HONOR

Is there an answer? John Cardinal O'Connor, Archbishop of New York, in his 1988 Saint Patrick's Day homily renewed his call for Peace with Justice and Honor for all Ireland. This answer, which should be obvious to even the most casual observer, has eluded the great political leaders of the English-speaking world for nearly two decades.

What can we do about this? Cardinal O'Connor suggests pilgrimage by Irish Americans to Knock this year to pray for Peace with Justice and Honor. Irish America must demonstrate an initiative of prayer and good works to transcend this abuse.

Irish America must surely take this initiative. If enough Irish-Americans openly make this pilgrimage for this noble purpose, then it is possible that enough political leaders on both sides of the Atlantic might be forced to pay attention to finding ways to cure the disease rather than merely trying to cover-up the symptoms.

In addition to Knock, there are additional holy places in every part of Ireland worthy of the attention of pilgrims: Tara and Kincora; Kells and St. Mac Dara's Island; Glendalough and Saint Patrick's Purgatory; Bodensoden Churchyard and Bundoran's Garden of Remembrance; Downpatrick and Armagh. Since most visitors to Ireland at least pass through Dublin at some time, I will mention a few in that city: Arbour Hill, Kilmmainham, Glasnevin, the GPO, Eamonn Mac Thomais can guide you to these and many more, or tell you about them during his "Sixty Golden Minutes" in the House of Lords Chamber of the old Irish Parliament in what is now the Bank of Ireland.

Let all Hibernians prepare to answer Cardinal O'Connor's call to join in a pilgrimage for Peace with Justice and Honor for all Ireland.

12 Irish Children to Compete in Games for Handicapped

The New York State Games for physically handicapped children ages 5-21 will be held June 2 through June 5, 1988 at Nassau Community College and at the Mitchell Athletic Complex, Uniondale, Long Island, N.Y. Competition is categorized by age and disability.

The Games this year is particularly important to the AOH because 12 handicapped children from Ireland will travel to New York to compete. The Lord Mayor of Wexford, Mr. Dominic Kiernan, is training the children and will bring the team to the Games with a limited number of coaches and parents. It is expected that no more than 19 will be in the group from Ireland.

Since the Irish children, who range in age from 10 to 17, are not citizen residents of the State of New York, all the funds needed for the Shannon-JFK air fare, the special busses required for transporting the handicapped, the sight-seeing program and the many expenses must be raised by volunteer contributions.

The Irish children will be in the U.S. from May 28 through June 12. The sightseeing plans include, hopefully, a trip to Disney World.

The visit is a once-in-a-lifetime event for these handicapped children who come from Wexford, Dublin, Belfast, and Enniskillen. Many of the children are victims of spina bifida, a tragic birth disease affecting many new-born Irish infants.

More than 1000 youngsters from New York State, 16 other states, and 7 foreign countries are expected to compete. Susan Gordon Ryan is Executive Director of the Games and she is looking toward the AOH for financial and participation support for the Irish team. I am appealing to the AOH Divisions in New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, located in close proximity to the Games, for generous contributions. Also, good AOH attendance at the Games would urge the Irish team on to a good performance.

Nick Murphy
President, National Board

Charities to Benefit from Nat'l Awards

The National Boards of the LAOH and AOH have decided that the proceeds of the 1988 National Awards Program will be used by their respective Charitable/Educational Funds.

There are several very worthy and important projects on the agendas of each Board that will benefit from your generosity this year, so I hope you will help to make this the best year the Awards Program has ever had.

The first award will be round trip tickets to Ireland for two, second will be a VCR, and a Waterford Ship's Decanter with glasses, third.

Additional books for the program can be obtained by writing Richard M. Rogers, Chairman, Box 623, Mineola, N.Y. 11501.

Father Pursues Irish Citizenship for Children

MERRICK, N.Y.: Last year, Tom and Rich Donlon from Long Island, NY who are now 11 and 9 years old, asked their father John, a lawyer who works with Jack Irwin (the past New York State AOH President) at a major financial firm in New York, to get them registered as Irish citizens in the Foreign Births Registry.

But, John then learned that because his late father (Tom's and Rich's grandfather) had not registered John, and because John had not previously registered himself, Tom and Rich are forever prevented from getting their Irish citizenship birthright. John is now registering himself, but because of the way the Irish Nationality and Citizenship Act, 1986 was written, Tom and Rich, and all children like them, cannot ever register in the Foreign Births Registry.

Although some parents took advantage of the law before the end of 1986, many others did not. John believes that the law should be changed to permit these children to register when they reach 18 years old. John says that when a child has a legal right (here to be registered in the Foreign Births Registry) and cannot exercise that right on his or her own (here a parent or legal guardian would have had to register these children), the law should permit the child to exercise that right when he or she becomes an adult.

Because the 1986 law does not protect the rights of these children, John believes that the change is a morally and legally correct one to make. John has drafted an amendment to the law to permit those children who could not have registered on their own, solely because they were children, to register within six months of reaching 18 years old. John has sent his proposal to many Members of the Dail (the Irish Parliament) and has received back a number of sympathetic responses. (Some were even surprised that these children were not permitted to register.) John's proposal is called the Children's Equal Irish Citizenship Opportunity Act, 1988.

Unfortunately, although there are probably many children of Irish descent permanently cut off from their birthright because they and their parents are being told that they simply cannot register, John is apparently the only one seeking help from the Members of the Dail. And he seeks your help. He asks that you write a brief note to one or all of the following Members of the Dail expressing your support for passing the Children's Equal Irish Citizenship Opportunity Act, 1988. The Members are: Alan Shatter, T.D. (Fine Gael Spokesperson on Law Reform); Rosiri Quinn, T.D. (Labour Party); Mary Harney, T.D. (Progressive Democrats); and Gerard Collins, T.D. (Minister of State for Justice). All letters and notes can be addressed to the name of the Dail Member at: Leinster House, Dublin 2, Ireland.

The John F. Kennedy Div. No. 2, in New London, and local hoteliers are seeking to alleviate the labor shortage problem in the hotel industry in southeastern Connecticut this summer by recruiting 100 college students from Ireland. Unemployment in Ireland is rampant and most of the students have a hopeless task of finding work there. The Division is cooperating in a work visa program run by USIT, in New York City, to assist these well-educated and hard-working students; the students pay for their air fare and all of their expenses while working here. This mutually beneficial international relations program can only work successfully if reasonably priced accommodations for these students can be found for their June 1 through October 1 stay. Rooms, apartments, or houses, furnished or unfurnished, that can be made available at reasonable, or no, cost for all or most of this period are being sought. A few volunteers to help coordinate this effort are also needed, and, since daily transportation to and from work in this suburban area may be a problem for some (these visiting students are not expected to have cars) the loan or donation of bicycles would be appreciated. Modest furniture and utensils will be required, on loan or donated, for unfurnished accommodations. Contact Jim Gallagher at 739-8216 (eve) and 440-4673 (day).

STATE NEWS: New Mexico

SANTE FE, NM — State AOH President Peter R. Moughan, Jr., was among the proud Hibernians who hailed the passage of House Memorial 54 introduced by Representatives Cisco McSorley and Tom Foy, in the New Mexico Legislature. The text of the clear and sensitive memorial follows:

Recognizing the right of the Irish People to sovereignty, self-determination and independence and requesting the United States Congress and the President to actively assist in bringing peace and justice to Ireland.

WHEREAS, THE Irish people have declared themselves a free people for over 700 years including recent declarations of independence by the parliament of the Republic of Ireland in 1919 and 1949; and

WHEREAS, the military occupation of Ireland by Great Britain and its refusal to remove British troops continues to aggravate a volatile situation and symbolizes a refusal to respect the democratic wishes of a majority of the people of northern Ireland; and

Remember—an effective voice is a voting voice!

WHEREAS, world leaders including the president of the United States, the Pope and former speaker of the United States house of representatives Thomas O'Neill have all rejected the achievement of a united Ireland by force of arms; and

WHEREAS, the heart of northern Ireland's problem both politically and morally is recognition of the civil and political rights of both the historic traditions and communities in northern Ireland; and

WHEREAS, both the loyalist and nationalist factions must recognize their peaceful aspirations and allow each other to peacefully and lawfully express their fundamental human right of freedom, rather than the suppression or subordination of another's cultural and political traditions;

Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved By The House Of Representatives Of The State Of New Mexico that the United States congress and the president of the United States are urged to actively intervene and bring peace to all of Ireland by recognizing Ireland's right to sovereignty, independence and self determination; and

Be It Further Resolved that in the struggle for justice all persons in Ireland must recognize that violence only delays the day of justice and that violence destroys the work of justice; and

Be It Further Resolved that copies of this memorial be transmitted to the New Mexico congressional delegation and to the president of the United States.

STATE NEWS: Montana

The Montana State Board of the AOH, in conjunction with its divisions in Anaconda, Butte, Helena and Kalispell, is providing reading material for a small library in rural Ireland. The AOH has begun a three year project to provide books and a nine hundred dollar ($900.00) grant to the library in Castletownberehaven, County Cork, Ireland.

Castletownberehaven, a town with a population of approximately two thousand people is located at the far southwestern tip of Ireland. The town library provides one of the few sources of entertainment for people in a 200 square mile area.

AOH State Board President Bill Harrington emphasized the fact that Ireland has for centuries been a nation that has exported its most precious resource, its people. The Montana AOH in an expression of its gratitude to Ireland has committed to maintaining an ongoing project to help an Irish community provide for its residents.

A large number of the Irish who came west to work in the mines of "Butte City" came from the Castletownberehaven area. Many Irish Americans in Montana can trace their roots back to this area.

Carroll College of Helena has contributed over one hundred books of all types to the project. It is estimated that the total impact of the grant and books will be in excess of $3,000. The Hibernians, with their commitment to friendship, unity and Christian charity, are involved in numerous charitable activities in Montana and will in the future be involved in at least one in Ireland.

STATE NEWS: Pennsylvania

CARBONDALE, PA — President Judge James J. Walsh of the Lackawanna County Court, and a charter member of AOH Division II here, has announced his candidacy for the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Judge Walsh, with 17 years experience as a trial judge, is a former mayor of Scranton, serving in that post from 1966 to 1969. He is also a former president and member of the Scranton School Board.

A native of Scranton, Judge Walsh was appointed to the Lackawanna County bench in December 1971 and was elected to serve a 10-year term in November 1973. He was re-elected to serve a 10-year term in November 1983 and was elevated to president judge on August 2, 1986.

Judge Walsh has filed as a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the primary election as required by law. "A Judge Walsh for Justice Committee" has been formed and necessary statewide circulation and signing of petitions for the 57-year-old jurist is under way.

He is a graduate of the University of Scranton with a bachelor of science degree, and earned a Juris Doctor Law degree from the Georgetown University School of Law. He is married to the former Mary Frances McHugh. The couple has two children.

Pennsylvania Hibernians Elect: Judge James J. Walsh State Supreme Court Justice

"I cite my record as a people's judge and credit my working class background for providing me with the empathy to look out for those not so privileged in our society, who, nevertheless, deserve and must receive a fair shake."

Lackawanna County President Judge James J. Walsh

After 17 years of experience on the bench, many judges would be expected to loose touch with his or her roots. Not Judge Jim Walsh.

There's a reason. Jim Walsh came up the hard way. His father died when Jim was making an outstanding record as a student and athlete at West Scranton High School. Encouraged by his mother, he stayed in school and worked as a stock clerk, R.R. section hand, usher and laborer. He finished high school and won a football scholarship to Washington and Lee, where he worked as a waiter to help earn his way. When the Korean War started, Jim entered the army and served two years as an enlisted man.

After returning from service, he continued his studies at the University of Scranton and earned his Law Degree from Georgetown University Law School. To support himself, he worked as a warehouseman, laborer, insurance adjuster, truck driver, salesman, postal clerk and teacher. Jim is married to the former Mary Fran McHugh. They are the proud parents of two lovely daughters, Maura and Jennifer.

JUDGE JIM WALSH will bring a record of independence, courage, judgment, integrity and dedication to the honored position of Justice of the Supreme Court of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

PUBLIC SERVICE—Judge Walsh has an enviable record of service including former Mayor of the City of Scranton; former member and president of the Scranton School Board and a practicing attorney since 1958.

JUDICIAL EXPERIENCE—Judge Walsh brings to the State Supreme Court 17 years experience as a sitting judge . . . as a seasoned trial judge. His record represents more experience than any of the current members of the Supreme Court had when they were elected to the court.

CIVIL & CRIMINAL CASES—Judge Walsh has tried nearly every type of civil and criminal case imaginable. He has personally handled numerous murder trials and was called upon to pronounce the death penalty in two cases.

JUDICIAL TEMPERAMENT—Judge Walsh is well suited for Pennsylvania's "Court of Last Resort." A judge must have the ability to look at things calmly and coolly. He must be courteous to the litigants and to their attorneys. Judge Walsh's temperament has been honed and refined by 17 years of experience on the bench.

HONESTY AND INTEGRITY—Judge Walsh brings to the Supreme Court a record as a trial judge of honesty and integrity which has marked his career of public service. As a "no-nonsense" judge, he has sought to be impartial, to be fair, to be firm.

STATE NEWS: Florida

As the months go by, Florida divisions are becoming more and more active, with membership growing at a rapid pace.

Brevard County Division 1 reports that on 27 January, the new Board of Officers, listed in this column in the last Digest issue, were installed. The installation team consisted of State President Jack Boyle, State Vice President John Cullinan and Chairman of the Commander John Barry Day Committee Dennis Fitzmaurice.

On Thursday evening, 17 March, the division held its 10th annual corned beef and cabbage dinner, dance, and St. Patrick's Day celebration. Secretary Ernie Kees reports that at the Division's February meeting, two new members were sworn in — Dr. William J. Deegan and his cousin James H. Deegan, who recently retired in Ireland and came to live in Florida. The Division also welcomed Brother Richard J. Girard, a transfer from Division 2.

Brevard County Division 2 held a St. Patrick's dance on 5 March in the parish hall of St. Joseph's Church, Palm Bay. Co-chairing the affair were Mary Herbert, LAOH state president and Tom Donnelly Division President. Bob Carroll made arrangements to have Division 1 President Art Lynch show slides of Ireland during their meeting of 15 March.

Pinellas County Division 1 President Bob McNulty reports that the Division held a St. Patrick's Day dance on Saturday, 12 March and also participated that weekend in the festivities of the annual St. Patrick's International Folk Fair Society. Division 1 of Pasco County on 26 March, held a successful St. Patrick's Day dinner and dance in the Knights of Columbus hall in Port Richey. Tom Condon, the recently elected president of the Division, didn't waste any time in getting off to a good start.

Broward County Division 1 President Martin McAndrew reports that the Division held its St. Patrick's Day Ball on 12 March at St. Helen's parish hall. The Division also participated in the Ft. Lauderdale annual St. Patrick's Day parade on Sunday, 13 March.

Martin also reported on the progress of the proposed Annual AOH Gathering, of which Division member Don Hartnett is the coordinator. The purposes of this occasion are to have all Florida AOH Divisions meet at least once annually to: (1) Foster friendship among members; (2) Promote the goals of the AOH and (3) Encourage the attendance of family members by providing a festive occasion for all to enjoy.

The tentative program for the gathering, subject to change, is as follows: Noon, Friday, May 20 to noon, Sunday, May 22 in Broward County. On Friday, a welcoming picnic will take place. On Saturday from 9 a.m. to noon, there will be an AOH workshop, with speakers on historical/political events, etc., followed by a bar-b-que lunch. From 2 to 6 p.m. there will be cultural/sporting events, and from 8 to 12 p.m. a dance. On Sunday there will be Mass and Brunch.

Plans are also under way to get a package deal with a motel and also provide accommodations nearby for campers and RV's. All division presidents are urged to contact Don Hartnett, 3902 W. Sailboat Dr., Cooper City, FL 33026. His phone numbers are: home: (305) 435-4200; work: (305) 874-2307.

On 6 February the quarterly meeting of the state board was held in St. Petersburg, hosted by Division 1, Pinellas County, Bob McNulty, president. High on the agenda was the election of Eamon Quinn, Broward Co. Division 1, to replace the late Bill Hurley as state treasurer. State President Jack Boyle read from a letter from National Secretary Tom McNabb asking us to watch out for cards and poetry derogatory to the Irish. Division presidents reported on their upcoming activities.

In attendance were State President Jack Boyle; State Secretary Bob Schneider; State Editor Nick Schneider; Brevard Co. Division 1 President Art Lynch; Broward Co. Division 1 Vice President Ed Nagle; Broward Co. Division 1 President Martin McAndrew; Pasco Co. Division 1 Director Tom Condon; State Organizer Jim Cummins; Bill Hulton, Jr. the State Scholarship Chairman; Brevard Co. Division 2 President Bob Carroll; Brevard Co. Division 2 Secretary Art Billingham; State Director Al Murphy; Pinellas Co. Division 1 President Bob McNulty; Past State President Ed Kalbleish, Chairman of Catholic Action Frank O'Brien; Pinellas County Division 1 Financial Secretary Michael Walsh; State Chaplain Rev. Fr. Gerald Grace; Broward Co. Division 1 Program Coordinator Don Hartnett and Pinellas Co. Division 1 member Ed Pauley.

Brevard County President Bob Schneider met with his officers and division representatives in February. Present were Vice President Bob Carroll, State President Jack Boyle, State Vice President John Cullinan; State Editor Nick Schneider; County Financial Secretary Harris McGovern; County Sentinel Dennis Fitzmaurice; County Recording Secretary Ernie Kees and County Treasurer Bill Ryan.

Support of all county division functions was widely discussed, as well as awards to those who have volunteered major services to the AOH and membership. Division 2 President Bob Carroll reported great results from their membership drive based on Jack Boyle's recommended youth movement — membership was 60 members at February's end. Two associate members were also brought in — Jim Leppert and Dennis Herbert, husbands of Division 2 LAOH President Jackie Leppert and LAOH State President Mary Herbert respectively.

In conclusion, all division presidents are urged to send their activities information to State Editor Nick Schneider, 240 Eyre Avenue, Merritt Island, FL 32953. For those living up north considering retirement, come on down and join our many Hibernians. Don't worry about the heat during the summer months. Remember, you don't have to shovel the heat.

NORTHERN IRELAND AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY TO HATE

The present day political picture in Northern Ireland was formed and shaped by continually evolving, stubborn, deeply planted ideologies — periodically shifting direction in tune with the passing times, but never too far off the philosophical aiming mark. Today's political zealots have inherited the tenets of hate from past generations, and the modern activists have added or removed little from the genetic scenerio.

Unrest and civil strife, in the six Loyalist counties in Ulster, have crested and ebbed with the passing years. The smouldering issues which ignited violence in many of the countless incidents have been obscured by the succession of geneological haters and by the inherited banners of identity. Two pedigrees of lineal enemies have been produced by an ancestral stock of inbred hate breeders. Issues and disagreements have been handed down. There have always been disagreements — political, religious, and economic.

Modern day media, with its ability to apply labels and enhance egos, adds, on a daily basis, a contentious element to the personality contests. In Ulster today, Loyalist VIPs always want to be noticed and to be the boss: Margaret Thatcher, the Orange Order, the RUC, Ian Paisley, to name a few. The RUC cannot let up the pressure or leadership heads will roll. The British military units can't let successful disorder happen "on my watch" for the same reason. The risk of failure by ego-burdened Loyalist officials is rated higher than the basic problem.

Once, oppression permeated all of Ireland; today, the six counties claim the honor. Unfortunately, the hatred spills over borders and taints the Irish everywhere they go with its lingering tragedy. Unification, with a sincere commitment to peace, is the only logical way to go.

Unification worked well in the U.S. A sectional and widely diverse population was absorbed into the nation in the days following the Civil War of 1860-1865. The causes of Ireland's civil sectarian war is akin to some of the reasons for the U.S. Civil War. The subdued Catholics in Northern Ireland are a half-step from slavery. The economic gulf between the two factions in both cases is painfully similar. Disagreements in the course of human history always stemmed from the same causative elements: fear, greed, poverty, possessiveness, power, and the old cliché, "Me and mine are better than you and yours, let's play King of the Hill." Agreements and peace, historically, have resulted from: unity, equal opportunity, prosperity, equal justice, security, respect for others — the things we find in our precious freedom and in our famed U.S. Constitution.

Ireland's differences within its people, Protestant, and Catholic, e.g., is similar to the diversity in America during the last half of the 19th century. It took a Civil War to begin the blending of the wills of a people with different political views. First, the whites and negroes; then, the northerners and the southerners; and finally, the immigrant mix. The timing regarding the immigrants may have been coincidental — but, it did happen. The passing generations somewhat cooled the simmering differences and life goes on today in America with the melting pot just below the boil.

The years of strife in Northern Ireland have created a deeply planted social polarization. The philosophical shades of difference between the Protestants of Scottish origin and the Catholic Irish natives are the hues of heritage. The people of each side are born into a protected role of hate, and they live out their mission of hate all their lives like natural enemy predators of the animal world. During mankind's history reason has seldom cured ancestral social illness. The American Civil War ended 123 years ago and racial resentment has never been completely extinguished.

The Irish must now settle, collectively, for what they think they can live with, and then try to keep the lid on the turbulent pot. It is the lack of compromising reason that constrains political progress. Diehards all, these political voices: "We will never yield," cry the Loyalists; "Give us jobs and equal justice," cry the Nationalists. How does one solve such a dilemma? The fine minds of the experts delve into the troubled history looking for a way out and find only the human disease of hatred; and the thrust upward for personal prominence and identity is always poking through the historical curtain of gunfire and bloodletting.

If it were possible to set down two large jars filled with pills of social medication in Northern Ireland today; one labeled, "Help You To Hate Pills," and the other labeled "Help You To Love Pills," I wonder which jar would be first emptied!

The years of World War II brought to the world the worst levels of hatred between enemy countries that the human race has ever experienced. The Japanese were ferocious and fanatic fighters; the German Wehrmacht was the most powerful military force in history — both were hated with an intensity beyond reason by the American servicemen. Yet, in recent years, reunions of these old warriors — American, Japanese, and German—are friendly, sympathetic and completely free from hate. The successful economy of the losing sides is evidence that the hatred is forever buried. Seething hatred can be cleansed from the mind like the sins of the sinner. Love and caring for all people is the master healer of hate.

Catholic University Plans Future for Hibernian Chair

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The AOH Chair in Celtic Languages and Literature at The Catholic University of America here has been vacant since the death of the last AOH Professor, Dr. Robert T. Meyer, in the fall of 1987, but officials at the University have decided to continue its work. The original endowment of $50,000 given by the Hibernians in 1896 to form the first American professorship in the Irish and related languages provided enough interest to give a full salary to the initial holder of the Chair Fr. Richard Henebery, and two successors, Dr. Joseph Dunn and Fr. James Geary, and in recent years supported the retirement income of Dr. Meyer. But the interest is insufficient to employ a new full-time professor. Nonetheless, three part-time instruc-

ST. LOUIS — In the spirit of James Joyce's Ulysses, over 170 revelers took part in the 10th Annual Hibernian Pub Tour in St. Louis. The event, held prior to Saint Patrick's Day, was organized by the members of Bishop Thomas J. Drury Division. The group visited eight different Irish establishments throughout the city. A portion of the proceeds from the tour are donated to local and Irish charities. The Spring Semester of 1989 will also see a course in the History of Celtic Ireland (the period up to about 1850) given by Dr. Jerrold Casway, a professor at Howard County Community College in Maryland and author of Owen Roe O'Neill and the Struggle for Catholic Ireland, recently published by the University of Pennsylvania Press.

In Fall 1988, Ms. Eleanor Max will offer a course in introductory Gaelic. Irish-born and after a successful career of teaching the language in the Irish school system, Ms. Max moved to Washington with her American husband a few years ago and has been giving Irish lessons on a freelance basis in the nation's capital.

In spring 1989, Dr. Robert Headley, one of Dr. Meyer's most outstanding students, will give a course in Old Irish, the version of the Gaelic in which the great epics of Gaelic literature were written. Employed as a linguist by the federal government, Dr. Headley is also a present, then, the three part-time instructors will pursue the aims set forth in the 1896 endowment, to foster the study and preservation of Ireland's Celtic Heritage.

The Center For Irish Studies is constantly and effectively carrying out on-going programs to achieve a better understanding of Irish Language, Irish Culture, Irish History and Irish Heritage. Part of this effort involves the University's sponsoring prominent and outstanding Irish scholars to come to the University and present lectures.

Hopefully, an early endorsement to go forward with a Fund Raising Campaign to implement the above resolution will be forthcoming.

The National Organizer's Corner

St. Patrick's Day has come and gone and all the parades are history for another year. I hope you took good advantage of the opportunity to introduce yourself to some good Irish Americans with the intention of signing them up as members of the AOH.

The news from Ireland is not good and we members of the AOH know if there is ever to be a break in the continuing cycle of violence it will be because the Irish American community will make Ireland's problems a part of the American political agenda. America is friends with both Ireland and England and the people in the North of Ireland, so it makes good sense for a friend to intercede on behalf of friends.

At the annual St. Patrick's Day Parade Mass at the Cathedral of St. Patrick in New York City, His Eminence John Cardinal O'Connor asked the Irish American community to join him in a pilgrimage of peace to the Shrine of Our Lady of Knock in County Mayo, Ireland. We Hibernians can be proud of our national spiritual leader and give him the backing and support he needs to continue to speak out for Irish political prisoners, and against all violence, official and otherwise; we can join him at the holy altar at Knock, lay open our hearts and place our petitions before the silent lady known as the "Queen of Ireland" and "Queen of Peace". We have tried every other thing; why not give prayer a chance.

Have you paid your dues for 1988? If not, you are now delinquent, and could lose your privileged standing. In most cases dues are very modest but they do supply us with the funds necessary to continue the official business of this organization. Why don't you pay your dues now and don't put it off another minute. If you are not sure where to pay your dues, send them to me and I will make sure the right persons get them.

Irish festival season will soon be with us again. The National Organizer has a beautiful Hibernian display which is available for the asking. It's a good way to decorate your recruitment booth and it gets attention. If you think you can use it, write me and I will reserve it for you. We have many reservations already on the books for 1988; first come, first served.

The Guns of Lattimer (Pa.)

One "event" unique to American labor's old testament brings forth the words of an American Protestant theologian, educator, and author, Reinhold Niebuhr (1892-1971): "Man's capacity for justice makes democracy possible but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary." In revisiting the Lattimer Massacre of Black Friday, September 10, 1897, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Niebuhr's perceptive paradox emerges.

The Lattimer Massacre casualty list disclosed nineteen died that day, and six more victims also succumbed to bullet wounds in the ensuing days. The surviving wounded would carry their injuries and/or scars through their remaining life. These particular "freedom fighters", of the anthracite (hard coal) regions, were ethnic immigrants of Lithuanian, Polish, and Slovak descent. In their believing way, these "new citizens" exercised their "Human Rights", by going-out-on-strike, and were organizing into a union — with compelling justification. Although unarmed, save for the symbolic protection of the American Flag, carried in their midst, they marched from colliery-to-colliery. On a public road onto Lattimer-Mines, these men-of-coal encountered "The Guns of Lattimer," (a documented and instructive book by Michael Novak; Basic Books, 1978).

The ethnic and trade union implications of Black Friday, September 10, 1897, also connects with "another event —" the day of the rope, Black Thursday, June 21, 1877, twenty years "before" the carnage at Lattimer, when the same Commonwealth executed, by hanging, ten so-called Molly Maguires. The

Friendly Sons Scholarship Is Again Available

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick of Washington, D.C. has renewed a scholarship program in Irish studies at The Catholic University of America.

The scholarship, to be awarded for the academic year 1988-89, provides full tuition to a full-time master's degree student specializing in Irish studies in CUA's English or Politics department. The award is made for one year and may be renewed for an additional year of study.

The society initiated the CUA program in 1988-87 to foster interest in Irish studies. Patricia C. Kelly of Washington, D.C., a 1981 CUA graduate and native of Lakewood, Ohio, received the first award. She expects to complete an M.A. in English this spring.

In CUA's Politics Department, students concentrating in Irish studies spend a semester in Dublin working as research assistants to members of the Irish Parliament. CUA English majors electing an Irish studies specialization concentrate on Irish Literature and the Gaelic Language.

Applications for the renewed scholarship must be received by CUA's School of Arts and Sciences by Saturday, April 30, 1988. In applying for admission to CUA's master's program in English or Politics, persons wishing to be considered for the Society of Friendly Sons of St. Patrick scholarship should include a brief statement indicating why they are interested in Irish Studies.

For additional information, call CUA's Center For Irish Studies at 202-835-5488.

economic, political, and sociological parallels are telling; the cogent relevance to Niebuhr's "democracy" again converges.

The Lattimer Massacre memorial plaque attached to a 25-ton overburden rock designating the shooting site, and dedicated on September 10, 1972 (the 75th commemorative year), contains the nineteen martyrs' names, and the words of a reporter-writer for a Hazleton, PA, newspaper back in 1897:

Sebastian Brostowski—Frank Chrzescieski—John Fotta Andrew Jurecek—George Kulik Andrew Monikaski—Raphael Rekiwicz—John Tarnowicz Stanley Zaborski—Michael Cheslock—Adalbert Czaja Anthony Gekos—Stephen Jurics Andrew Mieszkowski—Clement Platek—John Skrep—Jacob Tomashontas—Adalbert Ziemba Adam Ziominaki.

"It was not a battle, because the strikers were not aggressive, nor were they on the defensive, because they had no weapons of any kind and were simply shot-down like so many worthless objects; each of the licensed life-takers trying to out-do the other in this butchery." (Note: These assassin deputies were subsequently found not guilty).

This "event" of Black Friday, September 10, 1897, prompted Johnny Mitchell, the young, heroic president of the United Mine Workers of America (UMWA), to declare: "The coal you dig isn't Slavish or Polish or Irish coal, it's coal." The pain, death,

Report from NATIONAL ADVERTISING DIRECTOR

There's one thing certain to make any advertiser man happy, without qualification, and that's a happy and contented advertiser.

In our last issue of the National Hibernian Digest, we ran a sixteenth-page advertisement from a Saint Paul, MN, high school teacher. Brother H. Lewis, FSC, of Cretin High School, remarked in his letter for the advertisement that he had tried our newspaper several years ago.

He didn't reveal the results of his ad, but in his latest venture with our newspaper, Brother Lewis leaves little doubt that he was glad he returned. While completing his payment for the ad, Brother Lewis commented, no doubt happily so, that he already had some responses for "50 original Irish poems."

Good luck, Brother Lewis, we need more advertisers like yourself.

By this time almost every member of the Hibernians is aware that our National Convention is only a short spell away, and Cleveland is promising a good time for all those who attend. As usual, several National Board offices will be up for grabs and there will no doubt be a number of candidates jockeying for those posts.

This is a fine chance for those candidates and those who plan to back them to take the opportunity to place advertisements in our newspaper extolling the virtues of their candidate.

There's no doubt that a number of the candidates will send news releases to the NHD's National Editor Dave Henshaw, but it would be an additional asset to the paper for the ads.

So fellow Hibernians, take pen in hand and send in those advertisements.

Speaking of the National Convention, several communities in our realm of Hibernianism leave no doubt about their stance for locating the 1990 convention. Already two AOH communities have used our newspaper to seek support for sending Hibernians to their city for the convention in 1990.

The Hibernians in the Commonwealth of Virginia and in the City of St. Louis are the two AOH groups shooting for the National Convention two years hence.

Advertising in the National Hibernian Digest continues to remain steady, with a number of advertisers continuing their programs with our newspaper.

Just about each issue produces new advertisers, some of whom decide to keep their advertisements running in the newspaper for several issues.

One of our newer advertisers is O'Lunney's Pub in New York City, which plans to stay with us for the next five issues.

Conference for Irish Studies Held in St. Paul This Year

ST. PAUL, MN — More than 250 scholars from throughout the United States, Canada and Ireland were expected here April 20 to April 23 for the 26th annual meeting of the American Conference for Irish Studies.

The College of St. Thomas, with support from the St. Thomas-based Irish American Cultural Institute, hosted the meeting. Last year, the event was held at University College in Dublin.

While the meeting's academic and blood at Lattimer gave to all the men-of-the-mines, a common identity — a solidarity, that Johnny d'Mitch (the ethnic's sobriquet) needed for that all-embracing anthracite regions' classic strike of 1902.

Epilogue: George F. Baer (railroad industrialist, answering a reporter's question of starving miners) . . . "They don't suffer. They can't even speak English."

Comprehending the American worker's "ongoing" struggle into economic democracy, into freedom, is not only in making great discoveries, but also in seeing the connections between small discoveries in American labor history — a heritage more forgotten than remembered.

John C. Brennan
John C. Brennan is a retired trade unionist, UFCW, Local 1357, AFL-CIO, CLC; and past president of the Pennsylvania Labor History Society.

Irish actress Clare Mullen gave a private performance Thursday evening, April 21, in the ballroom of The Saint Paul Hotel.

Bakers Well, a popular Irish music group touring the United States this spring, performed for the conference delegates at the Ordway Music Theater Friday evening, April 22. A reception in the James Jerome Hill Reference Library followed the concert.

Among the meeting's academic sessions was a presentation by the Rev. Marvin O'Connell, professor of history at the University of Notre Dame, who recently completed a definitive biography of Archbishop John Ireland, the first archbishop of St. Paul and St. Thomas' founder. The biography is being published by the Minnesota Historical Society this year in connection with the centennial of the formation of the archdiocese.

AOH Political Education Chairman Stumps For Passage of MacBride Principles in Minnesota

REMARKS BY JOSEPH ROCHE BEFORE THE GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS COMMITTEE MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA

Chairman Moe and members of the Government Operations Committee, you have my complete testimony before you and I ask only that you read it before voting on this bill. Permit me to highlight several points. First, there is no dispute over the problem the bill addresses. England recognizes the futility of denying the pervasive practice of anti-Catholic discrimination. It can hardly do otherwise. Two government-owned firms—the largest employers in Northern Ireland—have never permitted more than 5% of their workforce to be Catholics. England's response to the MacBride Principles campaign here and elsewhere is to produce reports—the latest in October, 1987—and to plead, as would TV Detective Sledge Hammer, "trust me, I know what I am doing." The legislators of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey and New York know exactly what England is up to in Ireland and that's why there was no more room for trust. A 70-year record of anti-Catholic bigotry and fair employment gimmickry in Ireland is quite enough. This bill sends a message in a responsible manner. Americans will invest their money only where the principles of fair employment are practiced.

Second, unable to dispute the practice and extent of anti-Catholic discrimination in the Six Counties and failing to find legal impediments to these bills, her majesty's subjects have relied on character assassination and attempts to impugn the integrity and honesty of sponsors and supporters. I and others stand before you today—the measure of any American—to let you be the judge of our credentials and sincerity. "We" are doctors, lawyers, bishops, ministers, auto workers, farmers and educators. We are here to explain any data and to respond to any reservation you may have against this proposed statute.

Third, every state legislature that has adopted this type of legislation has done so overwhelmingly. In so doing they rejected the notion that a foreign power has any right to debate or dictate how state pension funds might be invested. In an attempt to exercise this veto power over the prerogatives of American lawmakers, England orchestrated the dismissal from employment of an expert witness of ours shortly after he testified on similar legislation before the California legislature. Such is their contempt for our democracy that they attempted to silence Oliver Kearney for telling the truth to Americans about the value of the MacBride Principles and their potential for success. Thus England will manipulate and deceive you and has done so by trampling on a cherished American value—freedom of speech. We ask you only to consider whether the citizens of Minnesota would want to be a part of such foreign intrigue or to put forth the positive example of the MacBride Principles.

We are under no illusions that the adoption of this bill will send anything but a symbolic message to a nation that commits $6 billion annually to Irish apartheid. We know, as does England, that the combined effect of this legislation across this land will be to heighten American interest in Ireland and one of the principal causes of its agony—the hopelessness of unemployment from generation to generation.

Last month Ireland laid to rest a man of uncommon valor and singular dedication to freedom and justice. His dignity, integrity and courage made him the only person in the world to be accorded three major peace awards. He was truly an international "man for all seasons." We ask that you honor his memory by supporting this legislation. In adopting this law you do great honor to not only Irish Americans in Minnesota but to all here who cherish human and civil rights. American corporations abroad—in effect our ambassadors without portfolio—must be a showcase for our values. I submit the citizens of Minnesota would not have it otherwise.

The issue addressed in this bill is one which concerns not just the organization and individuals I represent but is important to many people across this great state and nation. Their concern and ours is that public pension fund investment decisions—those involving U.S. companies operating in the North of Ireland—be morally conscious of the systematic anti-Catholic discrimination there. This bigotry has in turn produced violence and it will continue to produce violence unless this vicious cycle is broken. We have long tired of complaining about this problem and instead offer a solution crafted to combat decades of English malevolence. The solution is to link these investment decisions to the adoption and use of the MacBride Fair Employment Principles. These principles were crafted and named in honor of Dr. Sean MacBride, Nobel Peace Laureate, Former Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations and former Irish Foreign Minister. Rhode Island, Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Connecticut and 7 cities have adopted this mechanism to affirm the American values of fair employment and equal opportunity. Scores of other states, like Minnesota, are in the process of considering similar legislation.

The truly "American" nature of this legislation is readily apparent as legislators from all walks of life and religious and political persuasions—businessmen, lawyers, Protestant, Catholic, Democrat and Republican—voiced their support and voted for this positive step. It is because it is a positive measure that the MacBride Principles have been endorsed by every major Irish-American organization, various Catholic bishops and religious orders, the state and national AFL-CIO and politicians ranging from U.S. Senator Orrin Hatch (Utah) to Senator John Kerry (Mass.) and the Prime Minister of Ireland, The Honorable Charles Haughey.

This positive focus has been ignored by some newspapers that seem content to misstate the issue by using phrases like "requires divestment," "forces action," and "internal interference" etc. These editorials are uninformed, unimaginative, as they are largely supplied by British Information Services in NYC, and wholly unjustified. Editorial boards in this country have become the inner sanctum for the powerful and the privileged and are played like a stradivarius by the English government. We feel more comfortable and confident here out in the open amongst you the elected—not the anointed—and thus lay our case before one and all to critically examine.

There is in fact no dispute over the presence and practice of anti-Catholic discrimination. Let me recount some of the documentation so that you can be assured of the cause and extent of the problem and the need for Americans to act now.

A. Anti-Catholic employment discrimination has been an integral part of England's Irish apartheid policy since the Ulster garrison was set up—without benefit of one Irish vote—in 1920. The New Ireland Forum Report released in 1986 and adopted by elected Irish officials representing 75% of the population notes, "... the Catholic section of the community for over fifty years lived under a system of exclusively unionist power and privilege and suffered systematic discrimination."

B. In August, 1986 the prestigious journal Equal Opportunities Review cited government statistics showing the unemployment rate among Catholics to be twice that of the Protestant community with 35% of the Catholic men without work.

On August 16, 1986 the British journal The Economist noted that youth unemployment in Catholic ghettos like Strabane have reached crisis levels of 80%. Further analysis of unemployment data by professors Osborne and McCormack, the Continuous Household Survey (1983-84), and the Labor Force Survey (1984-85) all depict a social disaster if anti-Catholic discrimination is not forcefully and immediately addressed. Indeed, when examined by sex, religion and age, the data trends suggest that equality of a job opportunity is steadily worsening for Catholics.

McCarthy Economic Consultants in their report for the New Ireland Forum predicted a 32% unemployment rate for Northern Ireland by 1988. Irish Times correspondent Helen Shea on April 2, 1987 leaves no doubt as to where the burden of that unemployment will be felt, citing the current unemployment rates of predominantly Catholic communities of Strabane (39%), Cookstown (37%), Dungannon and Magherafelt (30%).

C. This devastating Catholic unemployment is not the inevitable result of a period of economic decline. The British ordained Sir Carson and Lord Basil Brooke to set up their "Protestant State for a Protestant People." In other words it was government policy that whatever the prosperity, Catholics were not to share in it. For 67 years the entire machinery of government in the North has carefully crafted England's apartheid policy for Ireland by locating plants, training centers, and educational facilities east of the Bann River to promote both Protestant/Loyalist prosperity and Catholic emigration and poverty.

Let no one here think that has changed! Derry Trades Council spokesman, Mr. McFeely, noted in July, 1987 that the Northern Ireland Industrial Development Board stood idly by and did nothing to prevent the closing of National Supply and Micrographics—two engineering firms in areas west of the Bann River which has a predominance of Catholics. No doubt one explanation for the indifference of the Industrial Development Board is that most of the staff are in America fighting the MacBride Fair Employment Principles.

Again in November, 1987 the called for development of proper fared no hope for vast areas of vacy. Obscuring the truth about unem is an art. Perfidious Albion

By FR. MAURICE BURKE

King George V, speaking in 1921 at the opening of the Northern Ireland Parliament, hoped that it would be "the prelude of the day in which the Irish people, North and South under one Parliament or two, as those Parliaments may themselves decide, shall work together in common love for Ireland upon the sure foundation of mutual justice and respect." His statement implied a willingness on the part of the British to accede to the will of the majority. In imposing partition, however, the British were acting contrary to the will of the majority. This was admitted by Prime Minister Lloyd George in the course of this debate on the Bill which partitioned Ireland:

"If you asked the people of Ireland what plan they would accept, by an emphatic majority, they would say 'We want independence and an Irish republic.' There is absolutely no doubt about that. The elected representatives of Ireland, now by a clear majority, have declared in favor of independence."

The 1918 Election
Lloyd George was referring to the general election of 1918. That was the only time the people of Ireland had an opportunity to express their will relative to the British presence. They returned 73 candidates favoring total British withdrawal and only 26 Unionists. Instead of accepting the democratically expressed will of the people, the returns from the different regions were used to determine the maximum area possible which could be handed over to the Unionists. They were then given what Winston Churchill called a permanent veto on the will of the majority. That that was in fact the intention when the Partition Act was passed may be gleaned from 1949 British Cabinet papers:

The Reason Why
"Now that Eire will shortly cease to owe any allegiance to the Crown, it has become a matter of first-class strategic importance to this country (Britain) that the North should continue to form part of His Majesty's dominions. So far as can be foreseen, it will never be to Great Britain's advantage that Northern Ireland should form part of a territory outside His Majesty's jurisdiction. Indeed, it seems unlikely that Great Britain would ever be able to agree to this even if the people of Northern Ireland desire it."

Three decades later the policy had not changed. Michael Mates, Minister of State at the Northern Ireland Office, made this clear: "To have a neutral Ireland, if we were to come to another conflict, would be of nothing like the same value to Western defense as having an Ireland totally committed to the West. It would be important for us, for the two nations, to sing with one voice over defense. The strategic importance of the island cannot be over-estimated." (Fitzgerald, Irish Unification and N.A.T.O., p. 38)

Ireland and NATO
"According to the Trinity political scientist, Dr. Patrick Keating, it is wishful thinking to believe that Ireland has no strategic importance. ... NATO is particularly worried that Soviet Tupolev 26 Backfire bombers could hit targets in Britain while still over the west coast of Ireland. These super-sonic, long-range fighters can hit targets from two hundred miles. They have a flight range of 4,500 miles and from bases in the Kola peninsula ... they can fly through the Iceland-UK gap to a point off the west coast of Ireland, avoiding the only radar station which might detect them, RAP Bishopscourt on the east coast of Co. Down." (Comerford, Do You Want to Die for NATO?, pp 23,34)

According to Comerford, NATO has already admitted it plans to intervene in Ireland at the first sign of war. He quotes Britain's Lt. General Sir Anthony Farrar-Hockley acknowledging "that Ireland would be of considerable use in the event of NATO becoming involved in a conventional war with the Soviet Union. Irish ports and airfields would give enormous ranges to NATO air patrols out into the Atlantic, and increase their value in terms of covering the Western approaches. If the Soviet Union ever over-ran Western Europe, he warned, he would not 'put too much money on Ireland's independence being maintained.'"

Sunningdale
While Britain is determined, mainly for strategic reasons, to maintain a British presence in Ireland, British governments continue to give public expression to a willingness to respect "the will of the majority". Thus we find in paragraph 5 of the 1973 Sunningdale Agreement:
"If, in the future, the majority of the people of Northern Ireland should indicate a wish to become part of a United Ireland, the British Government would support that wish." In paragraph 5 also the Irish Government accepted that "there could be no change in the status of northern Ireland until a majority of the people of Northern Ireland desired a change in that status." The political implications of these declarations were noted by John Peck, British Ambassador to Ireland at the time of the Agreement:

The Permanent Veto
"It sounds very fair and reasonable and democratic and so it is. With one slight flaw, Westminster democracy has always operated faultlessly in Northern Ireland—and that flaw lies in its composition. If the Northern Protestants had been willing to settle for Home Rule, there would be no need for Partition; but having insisted on Partition they had to have a political unit which ensured a Protestant majority big enough to be certain that democratic principles, self-determination, the wishes of the majority, plebiscites, elections, would infallibly produce the same result forever. So both parties to the Sunningdale Agreements made their solemn declarations knowing perfectly well that no plebiscite or any other form of popular consultation could ever change the status of Northern Ireland so long as the question was posed in the customary terms and the rest of the electorate was not consulted—which by the constantly reiterated pledges of successive governments, it cannot be. So reunification in the terms and manner hitherto contemplated has to be ruled out." (Dublin from Downing St., p.212)

Lost Opportunity
Had Britain been an honest broker in Ireland a peaceful solution could have been achieved in 1974. In January of that year Desmond Boal, co-founder with Ian Paisley of the Democratic Unionist Party, stated that a Federal solution was the only road to peace. He no longer believed in the essence of Union with England and could accept the possibility of a Federal Ireland with a constitution that guaranteed civil and religious liberties. In this Boal was accepting a solution similar to one proposed by Provisional Sinn Féin in 1972: a Federal Ireland with four provincial parliaments. The idea was acceptable also to leaders of the Ulster Volunteer Force and the Ulster Defense Association, Loyalist para-military groups. They welcomed Boal's statement as a "talking point". Ian Paisley was not personally in favor of a United Ireland. He would prefer an independent Ulster with "special and friendly relations" with the south "without which an independent Ulster would not be viable." He did not, however, rule out the possibility of a united Ireland.

Despite the prospects for a peaceful solution contained in these statements of spokespersons for the majority in northeast Ireland, Britain persisted with efforts to impose the Sunningdale Agreement which had been rejected by a majority of Loyalists and Republicans. Britain was unwilling to accede to the wishes of the majority if that meant Northern Ireland was to be part of a country outside the limits of her Majesty's jurisdiction.

Conduct of Tribunals
British politicians have demonstrated bad faith in Ireland throughout the current "troubles". A number of tribunals of inquiry were commissioned by Westminster governments to examine abuses charged to security personnel in Northeast Ireland. All were whitewashing efforts. The Cameron Commission, which was appointed to inquire into the disturbances of 1968 and early 1969, set a pattern for later tribunals. It sat in private and its terms of reference precluded it from inquiring into specific incidents which were a source of concern to the minority community. In the report that followed there was a condemnation of grievances which had already been well publicized in the world press. The damage was contained by applying the "few bad apples" principle and apportioning blame to both sides of the religious divide.

Amnesty International commented in a memorandum to another tribunal, the Parker Committee: "The purpose of your committee is, so far as we are aware, unique, for although judicial or quasi-judicial tribunals have often been established to consider whether ill-treatment has in fact taken place in the course of interrogation, it has always been stated or implied that such treatment, if it were found to have taken place, was wrong, and that disciplinary or other measures would, if necessary, be taken to prevent its recurrence. For the first time, however, a committee has been established to decide not whether ill-treatment has taken place but whether it should take place in the future."

All such tribunals, in fact, contravened the guidelines recommended by the Salmon Royal Commission. And all vindicated Salmon's prediction, when he wrote: "Any government which in future adopts this procedure (of private inquiries) will lay itself open to the suspicion that it wishes the truth to be hidden from the light of day."

Campaign of Assassination
The lengths to which British governments are prepared to go, to maintain a British presence in Ireland, were highlighted, in 1970, by the appointment of Brigadier Frank Kitson as army commander for the Belfast area. "It is surely no coincidence", Dillon and Lebane comment, page 311, Political Murder in Northern Ireland, "that Brigadier Kitson should have at this time been put in charge of Belfast, especially as he was only a Brigadier and not a full general, and was therefore the youngest man in the British Army to hold a command position. ... There is therefore a strong possibility that Kitson was given his command for the purpose of putting into practice the policies he had advocated in his book."

The book referred to was Low Intensity Operations Subversion, Insurgency and Peacekeeping. "The spirit of Kitson's book", they charge on page 314, "would seem to countenance under certain circumstances a campaign of assassination by the British Army undertaken by plain-clothes troops. There were few, if any, courses of action that Kitson would not have his special force take if they seemed likely to achieve the ultimate aim. But the crucial point is that these actions would have to be sanctioned at government level, not at a military level." These actions were sanctioned at government level.

Immunity From Prosecution
The British Government shielded, as far as possible, the terrorist activities of security personnel. Commenting on the failure of official inquiries, the authors of the Cobden Trust Study, Justice in Northern Ireland, state, page 29: "Finally, and perhaps most important, was the fact that no action was taken to deal with those cases in which the various reports found the security forces or individual soldiers or policemen to have been seriously at fault. ... It is widely agreed that in these cases actions by the security forces constituted the criminal offenses of assault or manslaughter, if not murder. Yet no proceedings were authorized by the Attorney General, despite a good deal of political pressure for such action to be taken."

Indeed, as Paul Arthur points out in Government and Politics of Northern Ireland, "no promotions—army or police—had been affected by those guilty of using the technique (of interrogation in depth)". And, when security personnel had to give evidence before the European Human Rights Commission, "the Attorney General appears to have given those involved immunity from prosecution."

Truce Talks
The bad faith of British officialdom was seen also in the conduct of 1972 and 1975 truce talks with the Irish Republican Army. William Whitelaw, Secretary of State in 1972, agreed to negotiate only for propaganda purposes. "The thinking behind the meeting with the IRA, according to the Minister of State at the time, David Howell (The Times, 10 February 1975) was that the government wanted to show that everything had been tried, including truce and meeting, so that the IRA would be seen to be concerned only with violence." (Flackes, Northern Ireland: A Political Directory, 1968-1983, p.252) Similar talks in 1975, when Merlyn Rees was Secretary of State, were deliberately prolonged until the British were ready to implement a new detention process to replace the politically embarrassing internment without trial.

Surrogate Terrorists
Since the suspension of the Stormont Parliament and the imposition of direct rule in March 1972, the overall policy of successive Secretaries of State has been the restoration of pre-1969 conditions. A "blind eye" was turned on the activities of the Ulster Defense Association which was responsible for 72 per cent of so called "sectarian assassinations". The first comman-

Ireland: The Reagan Years

Ronald Reagan, the 11th president of the United States to claim Irish heritage, is the fourth such president to serve since Ireland's unilateral partition. His tenure at the White House began and ends with a complete indifference to the real issues of the Irish conflict. The Reagan years brought America to the far corners of the earth to defend freedom and peace with justice and yet today, America looks away from Ireland where tyranny is most triumphant. How is this possible? A historical context will show how dramatic a shift in policy the President has brought about.

What most Americans know about the Anglo-Irish conflict begins with the late 60's clash between the civil rights cause and the "separatist" craftsmen of the colonial office. The social engineering required to keep partition and the state-of-seige needed to enforce it ruptured the body politic of Ireland. Bloody Sunday, mass internment, police riots and forced migration of Catholics awakened Americans to English cruelty. In 1972 Senator Ribicoff, who was joined by many in calling for British withdrawal, stated, "No talk of reform and halfway measures are sufficient. More of the same can only guarantee future conflict and tragedy." President Carter noted Britain's abuse of human and civil rights and supported an end of U.S. arms sales to the Royal Ulster Constabulary. British Misinformation Services aided by government censors soon turned this reality of State-sponsored murder and mayhem in Ulster into a fantasy of international conspiracy by communists, terrorists and criminals.

President Reagan took office in 1980 surrounded by public relations types in white hats anxious to reduce foreign policy to "terrorist" and "evil empire" slogans. So far in 1988 England has publicly approved the murder of Irish civilians, R.U.C. perjury and obstruction of justice, the wrongful imprisonment of 6 Irishmen in jail for 13 years and early amnesty for soldiers who murder Irish civilians. The silence from 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. is predictable and defiant. These actions are the fruit of an appeasement policy that began early in the Reagan presidency.

During the Hunger Strike in 1981 in which 10 helpless Irish prisoners — two elected officials — died in protest, the Department of State issued perfunctory press releases proclaiming it an internal matter. This from the same government that has made their own the cause of prisoners from Russian gulags, Ft. Bonifacio in the Philippines, and Polsemore prison in South Africa. In 1982 the President was alarmed by the State of Emergency declared in Nicaragua, but that June addressed Parliament and never once spoke of the Emergency Provisions, Special Powers and Prevention of Terrorism Acts that have made a police state of Northern Ireland since 1922. Nor did he mention the European Parliament's ban in May on the use of plastic bullets which have killed 14 Irish men, women and children and maimed hundreds of others. Instead he spoke of Poland as a regime planned by bayonet and ignored the 30,000 troops garrisoned on beachhead Belfast.

In 1983 the New Ireland Forum received faint praise but no support from Reagan. When Thatcher publicly ridiculed the wishes of elected Irish officials in the Forum Report, the President seemed to join the mockery by denying a visa to Gerry Adams, the only democratically elected official to ever be denied a chance to visit the land of the free and the brave. All this while Reagan was courting Congress with Commander Zero (Nicaragua), Jonas Savimbi (Angola) and Oliver Tambo (South Africa). Later in 1984 Reagan crouches at the Institute for Defense and European Studies, Richard Allen and Frank Shakespeare, did their part by publishing Ulster: The Undeclared Frontier, a piece of NATO myth-making rivaling any Communist regime's rewrite of history.

The contempt the President has shown for Congress was exceeded when Prime Minister Thatcher stated to Congress in February 1985 that "the principle of consent is enshrined in your Constitution and is an essential part of ours." This from the government that in fact has no constitution and that ignored the 1918 Irish General Election results, while secretly arming rightwing paramilitaries in the North. The Department of State officially ignored the release of Shoot To Kill by the International Lawyers Inquiry in June, 1985 which carefully documents how forces of occupation — not peacekeeping — caused the questionable deaths of 200 men, women and children. The hapless appointment of Ms. Heckler as Ambassador to Ireland later that year only seemed to underscore the official U.S. disinterest in the facts of British misrule in Ireland.

In 1986 it was apparent that appeasement was not enough and America would be called upon by England to collaborate in crushing Irish dissent. The unique extradition treaty adopted by the U.S. Senate put every freedom fighter in peril and disgraced Irish Americans proud of the Irish contribution to freedom in America. This was followed by U.S. funds to relieve the British taxpayer of the costs of Irish partition. Along with the recently-knighted Caspar Weinberger awarded U.S. funds to the largest anti-Catholic employer in Northern Ireland — the government-owned airplane manufacturer Short Bros; Edwin Meese has held Joe Doherty in solitary confinement for five years in service to the Crown despite repeated judicial and administrative decisions ordering his release or return to Ireland; and in 1987 our Ambassador to England publicly rebuked MacBride Fair Employment Principles, the most rational and moral idea to come out of Northern Ireland in decades.

Only time will reveal President Reagan's contribution to world peace and freedom. However, we need not await the verdict of history to prove that President Reagan has done more than any of his predecessors to imprison Ireland in violence and to destroy the cause of its freedom.

Vice President Bush Responds To Ad Hoc Committee Questions

First, let me state that I agree with the Committee that peace and justice for Ireland and Northern Ireland are non-partisan issues that deserve bi-partisan support. Further, I believe that the internal problems facing Ireland can only be solved through the concerted and cooperative efforts of all the people of Ireland.

As President Reagan stated in March, 1986, "In determining the nature of any U.S. Government aid, we must bear in mind that the agenda and timetable for progress in that troubled area are not for us to set. Those directly concerned, the people of both Irish traditions, will chart the course which will, we pray, lead to reconciliation in that troubled land." I fully support this position and would only add that I am deeply concerned over the continuing use of violence as a means of achieving those goals. It is my firm view that senseless violence achieves nothing.

I believe that job discrimination must cease. However, with respect to the MacBride Principles, I do not think that they alone will resolve this long standing problem nor would they improve the long-term economic outlook. It seems to me that one would want to improve the economic and investment climate rather than creating uncertainty and restriction on business. If the Irish can bring about certainty, predictability and safety to themselves, then the climate for investment, both foreign and domestic, will be greatly improved. Economic development is one way towards reconciliation as it will bring Irish men and women together to work on a common and non-sectarian goal. This may be hard for some but necessary when we look at the future of Ireland.

I strongly support the Anglo-Irish Agreement of 1985, and I fully subscribe to the bi-partisan, Concurrent Resolution passed by the Congress on December 5, 1985, which stated:

... That (a) the Congress commends the Government of Ireland and the Government of the United Kingdom for their achievement in reaching an agreement which charts a way towards peace, stability, and an end to violence in Northern Ireland.

maintain order.

The latest outrage, the sacrilegious shootings and explosions at the March 16 funeral in Belfast, is incomprehensible to the rational mind. Last week's execution of two unarmed Irishmen and an unarmed Irish woman on the streets of Gibraltar by undercover British security forces calls into question the methods used by the British government in countering political terrorism. A growing number of disturbing incidents involving charges of a shoot-to-kill policy, causing the needless deaths of innocent civilians, cry out for investigation. The forces of law cannot be "above the law."

Past victims of famines, they have been leaders in the fight to end African famine. Past victims of religious persecution, they have preached the gospel around the world. Past victims of land seizures, they have fought for land reform in Latin America and the Philippines. Past and present victims of political violence, they have served as UN peace-keepers in Zaire, Cyprus and Lebanon. Themselves victims of discrimination, they have fought against apartheid in South Africa.

Today we acknowledge not only the enormous contributions of the Irish to the building of America, but look to the future of a growing, new wave of Irish immigrants to our shores. Many of them are presently undocumented. We hope that they will find amnesty and hope here. For they seek to escape the political and sectarian violence in Northern Ireland as well as the economic violence of high unemployment throughout Ireland.

I believe Americans have an interest in ending all types of violence in Ireland. Both communities in the North have suffered from the sectarian and political violence of random murders through assassination and bombings. In addition, British security forces have made use of more violence than necessary to of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. I worked with the McCarran-Walter Act. I am pleased that our efforts bore fruit in the form of a one-year suspension of the Government's power to consider the views of would-be entrants into this great country. I hope that the Judiciary Committee of both the House and the Senate will soon produce a more comprehensive revision of the McCarran-Walter Act which permanently does away with these restrictions.

Human rights must be a cornerstone of American foreign policy. This means both our friends and adversaries should be held accountable for their human rights records. The recent decision by the British Government to drop its investigation into allegations involving members of the Royal Constabulary of Ulster undermines confidence in the rule of law in Northern Ireland. As a friend, we should counsel Britain to uphold the high standards of justice for which it is known.

St. Patrick's Day Declaration Reverend Jesse Jackson

St. Patrick's Day is a religious holiday as well as a celebration of Irish achievements. The sons and daughters of one small country, drawing strength from their long history of persecution and oppression, have done so much for the less fortunate on our planet.

Past victims of famines, they have been leaders in the fight to end African famine. Past victims of religious persecution, they have preached the gospel around the world. Past victims of land seizures, they have fought for land reform in Latin America and the Philippines. Past and present victims of political violence, they have served as UN peace-keepers in Zaire, Cyprus and Lebanon. Themselves victims of discrimination, they have fought against apartheid in South Africa.

Senator Paul Simon Speaks On MacBride and Irish Issues

The Anglo-Irish accord provides a framework for the resolution of violence in Northern Ireland. Its most important feature is the British Government's recognition that the Republic of Ireland has a role to play in resolving the profound differences in the North which feed this violence. U.S. economic assistance under the tripartite international agreement for Ireland should be used to help integrate Northern Ireland's economy with the Republic's economy as well to increase employment and development opportunities for all who live in Northern Ireland.

The MacBride principles provide excellent guidance for corporations doing business in Northern Ireland. Fair employment standards are good for business as well as a good way of promoting genuine social and political progress. I would give serious consideration to a bill which would mandate the MacBride principles. However, such a bill would have to be written to abide by international agreements and fit in with other important American foreign policy and commercial objectives.

I believe the United States Government has no business closing its frontiers to foreigners solely because of their political views. As a member

FREEDOM FOR ALL IRELAND

Message from Freedom For All Ireland Committee Chairman

The recent events in Northern Ireland have saddened the Irish community. Needless to say, we lament, but that's not enough. We are strong in numbers and, as I have repeatedly said, our voices must be heard. The time for action is now. Get in touch with your elected officials and if they are not aware of the deplorable situation, make them aware. Ask them to cooperate — we want to know why England did not permit Ireland to bury her dead and why those 3 were killed. The killings and bloodshed must stop. Why can't the Irish Prime Minister do as the Prime Minister of Israel — make a trip to Washington to see if our President can come up with a solution.

Let us not be Irish only on St. Patrick's Day. We are strong in numbers — let our voices be heard. Remember . . . Ireland unfree will never be at peace. Offer your prayers, as well, for God's guidance and help in this serious situation.

Also, please submit the name and address of your Freedom For All Ireland Chairman to me. Thanks for your cooperation and in conclusion, I implore you — write, call, but do let your elected officials know how you feel about England in Ireland and urge your families and friends to do the same. In unity there is strength. God bless!

"Journey On Always . . ."

"... Do not stop, do not turn back or stray away. Whoever advances not has come to a halt, whoever returns whence he set out is in retreat; whoever wears is gone astray." (Sermons of Saint Augustine)

Well might these words have been addressed to Irish nationalists during the first few months of 1988. The brazen announcement by the Thatcher government that there would be no criminal prosecutions as a result of the Stalker revelations was followed by a quick succession of paralyzing events. The refusal to rectify the ongoing victimization of the Birmingham 6 was equally shocking. Were we not all at the point where we were wondering what signal or policy shift on the part of Downing Street at all of this might represent?

Time, indeed, in its own way makes the handwriting on the wall come gradually into focus. Clarity was added with the news that Private Thane, the only British serviceman convicted of murdering an Irish civilian, had already secretly been released from prison and reinstated in the British army, after serving a mere two years and six months of the life sentence mandated by a British court.

The news is that nothing has changed! Even after a very obliging Dublin government hastily signed the Extradition Treaty so long sought after by Britain, it was obvious that the Irish would continue to be subjected to arrogance, contempt, and betrayal. Could there be any other conclusion after the shooting of Aidan McAneaspie whose mistake was to pass a border post while walking unarmed to a football match? Either "shoot to kill" is the unwritten policy of the Crown forces in the north of Ireland, or British weaponry has developed an astonishing tendency to "misfire" when Irish nationalists are within range.

Where do we go from here? First, we must heed the wisdom of Saint Augustine. We cannot stop, turn back, stray away, or weary because we are the hope of the minority in the Six Counties to the extent that our efforts are a threat and consistent challenge to British oppression there. We must learn to see British efforts like the recently proposed Fair Employment Commission as attempts to blunt our progress in promoting MacBride legislation at the federal and state levels. (Has the likes of Tom King not spent months racing across this country swearing in state capitals that the Fair Employment Agency has been genuinely effective and efficient since its inception in 1976, seeking to prove, thereby, that MacBride legislation is unnecessary?) If we have become a cause for concern at Westminster and Stormont, then we must "journey on" with even greater vigor.

'Sean MacBride Day' Proposed

NEW HAVEN, CT — Congressman Bruce A. Morrison (D-3) has filed a resolution in the U.S. House of Representatives to honor the memory of the late Sean MacBride by designating January 26, 1989 "Sean MacBride Day."

"This date is the 85th anniversary of the birth of Sean MacBride," Morrison said, "and it is fitting that the memory of such a distinguished individual be recognized officially."

MacBride was an Irish statesman and crusader for human rights who was one of the founders of Amnesty International in 1961 and shared the Nobel Peace Prize awarded the group in 1977 for its campaign on behalf of political prisoners throughout the world.

MacBride was also the chief sponsor of the antidiscrimination code known as the MacBride Principles, which calls for U.S. companies that operate in Northern Ireland to ensure equal employment opportunities for Roman Catholics.

"It is appropriate that I introduce this resolution on the day that we pay tribute to the people of Ireland and the 40 million American citizens of Irish descent," Morrison said. "Sean MacBride worked all of his life for peace and human rights in Ireland and elsewhere in the world. It is fitting that we spend a day to celebrate peace and the man who worked for it."

Official Defends British Efforts

WASHINGTON D.C. — A top British official defended his country's record in seeking to end job bias against Catholics in Northern Ireland, and said a movement to require U.S. companies investing there to subscribe to a strict set of anti-discrimination measures developed by Irish human rights activists would increase unemployment.

John Stanley, Minister of State for Northern Ireland, also said that Anglo-Irish relations have been strained recently by an "extraordinary series . . . of unrelated events." Those include a decision by British justice officials against prosecuting Royal Ulster Constabulary authorities over the 1982 killings of six suspected terrorists, and the release of a young British soldier imprisoned for killing an unarmed Catholic civilian.

Stanley spoke to reporters at the British Embassy, March 8, during a 10-day, cross-country trip to confer with politicians and potential corporate investors, and to blunt the push to enact the so-called MacBride Principles for ending religious discrimination.

Legislation proposed by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government would require employers in the province to make efforts to recruit Catholic workers to achieve a religious balance in their labor forces.

Stanley said the proposal had been welcomed by the government of the Irish republic and had received "a generally good reaction in Northern Ireland" — including strong support from Catholics.

Backers of the MacBride Principles, named after Nobel Peace Prize winner Sean MacBride, seek to increase the Catholic share of employment in U.S. businesses operating in Northern Ireland by convincing the companies' U.S. shareholders, including state and local pension funds to pressure the firms to practice fair employment.

Stanley's itinerary included a private, embassy-sponsored lunch at Catholic University with U.S. Protestant and Catholic figures March 7. According to one participant, the official was pressed by representatives of both groups on the decision not to reopen prosecution in the 1982 case in which Northern Ireland police were alleged to have employed a "shoot-to-kill" policy against the Irish Republican Army, and other controversial incidents involving security forces.

He said Stanley was "taken aback by the vehemence" of the questions. He also said that the embassy had sought to expose the official to such "vehemence" out of concern that authorities in London and Belfast were unaware of the depth of feeling in the United States over such incidents.

But in response to a question, a British official said the government is aware of American feelings. Stanley was in the United States to inform interested Americans of the British point of view, he said.

The recent decision not to prosecute in the so-called Stalker-Sampson case, has also stirred strong feelings in the Irish Republic. (From the Long Island Catholic.)

U.S. Companies in Northern Ireland Facing Legislative Pressure To Adopt MacBride Principles; Twenty-Six Companies Affected

WASHINGTON D.C. — An intense, well-orchestrated and rapidly expanding campaign in this country to encourage corporations to comply with the MacBride principles, a code to combat religious discrimination by employers in Northern Ireland, is turning up the heat on the U.S. companies that operate there. Twenty-six companies are involved, including such giants as American Brands, Du Pont, Exxon, Ford, General Motors, McDonnell Douglas and Xerox, according to a recent report of the Investor Responsibility Research Center, Inc.

Legislation tying state investments to corporate compliance with the MacBride Principles has recently been introduced in Maine, Maryland, New Hampshire and Vermont. This brings to 10 the number of states with pending legislation. Similar laws are already on the books in five states—Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York and Rhode Island — and numerous cities, including Cleveland, Detroit, Hartford, Philadelphia, Springfield, Wilmington and Rochester, N.Y.

Proponents of the MacBride principles also are lobbying companies directly. Seventeen of the 26 companies have received shareholder resolutions on the subject to be brought to votes at their annual meeting this spring.

The MacBride principles, the campaign for their adoption and the employment situation in Northern Ireland that they address are documented in a report released today by the Investor Responsibility Research Center. The report also profiles the 26 U.S. companies in Northern Ireland, some of which have not been identified on any previous lists.

U.S. companies provide 11 percent of the manufacturing jobs in Northern Ireland and employ about 11,000 people there. No U.S. company has yet endorsed the MacBride principles, although Ford recently adopted a code of conduct that it says incorporates "the substance of the MacBride principles while avoiding legal and operational obstacles."

The MacBride principles were developed in the office of the Comptroller of the City of New York, Harrison J. Goldin, in consultation with Irish-American activists.

The British government firmly opposes the MacBride principles as "unnecessary and undesirable." It has conducted a high powered lobbying campaign against the principles, arguing that they will inhibit much-needed investment in an area that suffers from chronically high unemployment. The government aggressively recruits foreign investment in Northern Ireland, offering generous tax and grant incentives to companies that locate there.

The British have also voiced concern that some of the MacBride principles would be illegal in Northern Ireland because they would require companies to practice discrimination in favor of minority employees. The New York City Comptroller's office, the Irish National Caucus, a variety of church groups and other supporters of the principles dispute this claim, arguing that the principles do not require reverse discrimination and would not violate Northern Ireland law. In 1986, Sean MacBride issued an amplification emphasizing that the principles require companies to make only "reasonable, lawful efforts" to achieve the goals established by the principles.

*This list includes all publicly held companies known to have more than 500 employees. IRRC was not able to determine the number of workers employed at some of the other companies profiled in its report.

IRRC's report, U.S. Companies and Fair Employment Practices in Northern Ireland, contains detailed profiles of the 26 publicly held U.S. companies in Northern Ireland. The profiles give the name, location and principal line of business for each company's Northern Ireland operations and, where available, a breakdown of its work force by religious affiliation and details of its employment practices. The report also describes the development of the MacBride Principles campaign, the current employment situation in Northern Ireland and the background of sectarian tensions there.

Ancient Order of Hibernians were among the 50,000 abortion opponents, from every State of the Union and Canada, that converged on Washington, DC for the 15th Annual Right to Life March. They were protesting the Supreme Court decision, 15 years ago, to legalize abortions.

Over the public address system at the pre-march rally on the Ellipse, the crowd heard a telephone conversation between President Reagan and Nellie Gray, March for Life organizer. The president said his administration will soon publish regulations that will eliminate federal funds for "abortion-related activities" at family planning clinics. (See the President's Proclamation on Page 19).

After the rally, the marchers left the muddy Ellipse, carrying their banners, signs and placards for the 15th Annual Right to Life March. They paraded by the White House and traveled along Pennsylvania Avenue to the Supreme Court and the Nation's Capitol. A few were arrested at the Supreme Court, but most converged on the House and Senate Office Buildings to visit their representatives.

All marchers hoped that the Supreme Court decision would be overturned and that this would be their last march.

A Proclamation

By the President of the United States of America

On January 15, 1988 President Ronald Reagan issued the following Proclamation, declaring January 17, 1988 "National Sanctity of Human Life Day."

America has given a great gift to the world, a gift that drew upon the accumulated wisdom derived from centuries of experiments in self-government, a gift that has irrevocably changed humanity's future. Our gift is twofold: the declaration, as a cardinal principle of all just law, of the God-given, unalienable rights possessed by every human being; and the example of our determination to secure those rights and to defend them against every challenge through the generations. Our declaration and defense of our rights have made us and kept us free and have sent a tide of hope and inspiration around the globe.

One of those unalienable rights, as the Declaration of Independence affirms so eloquently, is the right to life. In the 15 years since the Supreme Court's decision in Roe v. Wade, however, America's unborn have been denied their right to life. Among the tragic and unspeakable results in the past decade and a half have been the loss of life of 22 million infants before birth; the pressure and anguish of countless women and girls who are driven to abortion; and a cheapening of our respect for the human person and the sanctity of human life.

We are told that we may not interfere with abortion. We are told that we may not "impose our morality" on those who wish to allow or participate in the taking of the life of infants before birth; yet no one calls it "imposing morality" to prohibit the taking of life after people are born. We are told as well that there exists a "right" to end the lives of unborn children; yet no one can explain how such a right can exist in stark contradiction of each person's fundamental right to life.

That right to life belongs equally to babies in the womb, babies born handicapped, and the elderly or infirm. That we have killed the unborn for fifteen years does not nullify this right, nor could any number of killings ever do so. The unalienable right to life is found not only in the Declaration of Independence but also in the Constitution that every President is sworn to preserve, protect, and defend. Both the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments guarantee that no person shall be deprived of life without due process of law.

All medical scientific evidence increasingly affirms that children before birth share all the basic attributes of human personality — that they are in fact persons. Modern medicine treats unborn children as patients. Yet, as the Supreme Court itself has noted, the decision in Roe v. Wade rested upon an earlier state of medical technology. The law of the land in 1988 should recognize all of the medical evidence.

Our Nation cannot continue down the path of abortion, so radically at odds with our history, our heritage, and our concepts of justice. This sacred legacy, and the well-being and the future of our country, demand the protection of the innocents must be guaranteed and that the personhood of the unborn be declared and defended throughout our land. In legislation introduced at my request in the First Session of the 100th Congress, I have asked the Legislative branch to declare the "humanity of the unborn child and the compelling interest of the several states to protect the life of each person before birth." This duty to declare on so fundamental a matter falls to the Executive as well. By this Proclamation I hereby do so.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, RONALD REAGAN, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim and declare the unalienable personhood of every American, from the moment of conception until natural death, and I do proclaim, ordain, and declare that I will take care that the Constitution and laws of the United States are faithfully executed for the protection of America's unborn children. Upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God. I also proclaim Sunday, January 17, 1988, as National Sanctity of Human Life Day. I call upon the citizens of this blessed land to gather on that day in their homes and places of worship to give thanks for the gift of life they enjoy and to reaffirm their commitment to the dignity of every human being and the sanctity of every human life.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this fourteenth day of January, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-eight, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twelfth.

Ronald Reagan

Pro Life

Twenty years have passed since the New York State Right to Life Committee, Inc. was formed out of a meeting of pro-life citizens who met at Ed Golden's home in Troy, New York. The year was 1967. The people gathered to protect the lives of the unborn and other defenseless human beings and to prevent the legalization of abortion. The pro-abortion forces were over-powering in the 'liberal' climate of the late sixties and early seventies. Thirty-two states had passed referendums between 1970-72 to maintain the abortion statutes making abortion illegal. Yet, the pro-abortionists were pushing their cause through the courts. It happened in 1973 that abortion was made legal for the first three trimesters or the full nine months of pregnancy in the Roe v. Wade U.S. Supreme Court decision. Seven justices voted for the decision and two justices dissented. Justice Byron White, one of the dissenters, called this decision "an exercise of raw judicial power."

The preoccupation of pro-life activists in the late sixties and early seventies was on the passage of a human life amendment or on calling a constitutional convention in order to protect the lives of the unborn. Differences on these strategic approaches by various pro-life organizations and individuals often led to angry and divisive disputes.

The pro-life movement of the late seventies and early eighties became more unified and productive as different voices worked together to stop abortion. The goal was to get pro-life legislation through Congress. Passage of the Hyde Amendment in 1976 led pro-life people to begin to sense victory. This amendment, introduced by Congressman Henry Hyde (R-Ill.) and passed by Congress, stated that the federal government did not have to fund abortions unless the life of the mother was endangered. Pro-abortion groups challenged the constitutionality of the Hyde Amendment in the lower federal courts between 1976-80. Finally, victory came in 1980 when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that the Hyde Amendment was constitutional. Yet, while when an abortion-neutral amendment was added onto and passed nine states continued to use state taxpayer funds for abortions. One of these states, New York, continues to spend an average of fifteen million dollars a year on abortions.

In 1982 a victory for the pro-life movement followed the tragic starvation death of 'baby Doe' in Bloomington, Indiana. This baby was starved to death only because it was born with a handicap. Following this tragedy the federal government issued protective regulations for all handicapped newborns. These regulations were struck down by the courts. However, Congress, acting with pro-life support, passed legislation protecting the lives of handicapped newborns.

During the more recent years of 1987 and 1988 the pro-life movement has seen major victories in Congress. On December 3, 1987 (by a vote of 14-11) the U.S. Senate Appropriations Committee voted to prevent a total of fifty-five million dollars from going to organizations which promote abortions overseas. The Planned Parenthood Federation of America lost thirty million dollars to promote population control through abortion overseas. The United Nations Fund for Population Activities was denied twenty-five million dollars because China, a U.N. member, enforces a 'forced abortion policy' of one child per woman and if a woman violates this she must face economic hardship and other penalties.

Another pro-life victory occurred on January 28, 1988 in the U.S. Senate (by a vote of 75-14) and on March 2, 1988 in the U.S. House of Representatives (by a vote of 315-98) when an abortion — neutral amendment was added onto and passed with the Civil Rights Restoration Act, also known as the Grove City Bill. This major victory means that religiously affiliated hospitals and colleges, which have moral objections, would not be forced to provide abortion services.

The pro-life movement is alive and well after twenty years of struggle and better than that — we are winning. At times pro-life activists get discouraged or feel 'burned out'. That is why it is good for us to pause and see our victory. Yes, we are winning and we will continue to win because our cause, the protection of all innocent God-given human life, is just. As we pause and reflect let us also be encouraged by the words of the convert Saul or St. Paul of Tarsus: "Let us not lose heart in doing good, for in due time, we shall reap it, if we don't grow weary." (Gal. 6:9).

Convention News

Cleveland Convention Call! The great city on the north coast of Ohio is preparing to roll out the red carpet (or is it green in our case) for Hibernian Convention goers, July 25-28, 1988. The "Doings" those Clevelanders have planned are Grrr...eat!!!

Here's a "sneak preview" of convention events. The Convention opens Monday night, July 25th with Mass, followed by a real Hibernian-Style Ice Breaker. Tuesday night is Cleveland Night — you have a choice of a night at the old ball game or for the more romantic Irish, a cruise. Seating on the cruise is limited, so make your reservations early. Keeping those wonderful activities rolling along, Bill Chambers and Shelia Murphy have been diligently planning Irish Night for Wednesday, July 27th — a night that promises to bring out the "Celtic Charisma" in all of us. You must know that Joan Cavanaugh and Kevin Reynolds will not be outdone — the Thursday Night Banquet on July 28 promises to bring a wonderful weed of Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity to an elegant climax, with Father Malloy, President of Notre Dame University, the Keynote Speaker.

Remember, convention registration must be in by June 15, 1988 to obtain the $99.00 registration fee. Registration after the deadline jumps to $140.00. The Convention Committee has secured a block of 400 guest rooms at the Bond Court Hotel, Convention headquarters. A block of 300 guest rooms has also been reserved at the Hollenden House Hotel, a "sister" property located two blocks away. Reservations will be taken on a "first come-first served basis", so book early. Both hotels have the same room rate of $66.00 (plus local taxes). The convention rate will be honored for both the weekend before and the weekend after the convention.

Special airline prices for convention goers are offered by Northwest Airlines in the form of a special discount on air fares, plus entrance in a drawing for two free tickets on Northwest to Ireland. Lyndon Travel is the official conventional travel agent. Make your reservations by calling 1-800-331-2428, weekdays, between 9 and 5 EST. Remember that you must mention your special code number: 12707. Northwest tickets must be purchased through Lyndon Travel to be eligible for the Ireland trip award.

Matthew J. Kane

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Matthew J. Kane, 66, the proprietor and impresario of Matt Kane's Bit O'Ireland, one of the city's best known Irish pubs, died of an aneurysm February 3, 1988 at Providence Hospital. He lived in Washington.

Mr. Kane opened his bar in 1960 at 1118 13th St. NW. Since then, it has catered to a varied clientele, ranging from Irish tourists and Irish-American politicians to maids, marines and newspaper people.

Among well-known figures who partook of the hospitality at Matt Kane's were former House Speaker Thomas P. (Tip) O'Neill and Senator Robert F. Kennedy Jr.

Much that was truly Irish was honored at Matt Kane's. The flags of Ireland's counties and four provinces hung over the bar, and the musical accents of that far-off and troubled land could often be heard around it.

Mr. Kane was a native of Chicago. During World War II, he served aboard submarines in the Pacific. He moved to Washington after the war and operated guest houses in the city before opening his tavern.

He was Washington commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars from 1953 to 1954 and captain of the Adm. Robert Peary VFW Post No. 427 in Washington in 1957.

Memorial To Locate in D.C.

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-Bronx/Yonkers) announces that a 4.5 acre federally owned site in Washington, D.C., called Judiciary Square, will be the site of the National Law Enforcement Officers' Memorial.

Biaggi, a 23-year veteran of the New York City Police Department, is founder of the Memorial project and, together with U.S. Sen. Claiborne Pell (D-RI), authored the legislation allowing the Memorial to be built on federal land. The authorizing legislation (Public Law 98-534) was unanimously approved by Congress in 1984. Biaggi first proposed the idea of a national memorial to law enforcement officers in 1975.

According to Biaggi, the Judiciary Square site was first proposed for the Memorial last July, with approval coming this month from the National Capital Planning Commission. The site was previously approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, the National Capital Memorial Commission, and D.C. Mayor Marion Barry, Jr., who has operational control over the property.

"This memorial seeks to pay a lasting tribute to the thousands of law enforcement officers who have died in the line of duty, while also honoring the many others who continue to risk their lives for our protection every hour of every day," Biaggi declared. "The Judiciary Square site is perfectly suited for this monument. It has strong linkage to law enforcement, it is easily accessible, and it is in close proximity to the other major landmarks in our Nation's Capital."

The National Law Enforcement Officers' Memorial Fund, a non-profit group managed by 15 law enforcement organizations, is now working to raise $5 million to build the memorial. The project is being financed entirely through private contributions from the American people. Congress had directed that ground breaking for the Memorial must begin by October 19, 1989. Although a final design has not been chosen, the memorial is expected to include the names of law enforcement officers who die in the line of duty, Biaggi said. He noted that a police officer dies in our country every other day.

Judge Comerford - In Memoriam

mitted to the New York Bar in 1947. He also earned a Doctor of Philosophy degree from New York University.

From 1947 to 1953 Jim Comerford served as Assistant District Attorney to Frank Hogan in New York County. In 1953 Jim Comerford became Judge Comerford, the title by which he has been known ever since. From 1960 until his retirement in 1971, Jim Comerford was a Judge of the New York Criminal Court.

Judge Comerford was active in a great many Irish organizations in the United States. He joined the County Kilkenny Association in 1927 and was later President of the United Irish Counties where he promoted Irish culture and tradition as Chairman of the United Irish Counties Feis.

Judge Comerford joined AOH Division 3, New York County in 1937 and rose through the ranks of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America, becoming National President in 1962. He was responsible for the re-incorporation of the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America under the laws of the State of New York in 1964.

Judge Comerford became involved with the New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade and Celebration Committee early on; he became an officer of the Parade Committee in 1948 and was responsible for bringing the United Irish Counties into the parade that year. In 1965 Judge Comerford took over the Chairmanship of the Parade Committee from Harry Hines and held that position through 1984. Judge Comerford was a strong and determined leader who gave his all to the New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade all year 'round. Many of the practices he introduced as early as 1948 are still followed by the Parade Committee. Frank Beirne, who succeeded Judge Comerford as Chairman of the largest parade in the Free World, freely admits that the experience of serving under Judge Comerford for almost twenty years on the Parade Committee was the best possible preparation for the job. Even so, it has taken the actual experience of being Chairman to give proper insight into just why "The Judge" did certain things the way he did them.

It would take too long to list all of Judge Comerford's accomplishments with the many Irish, Catholic and professional organizations with which he was associated during more than six decades of his life in New York. Jim Comerford was married in 1940 to the former Vera Carr of New York who was the strong woman whose support made possible many of his accomplishments. Together they lived for over 40 years across from Ascension Church on West 107th Street in the apartment previously occupied by Irish patriot and internationally renowned composer, Victor Herbert.

We share the grief of Mrs. Comerford's brother Robert Carr, his wife Helen and their family and of his dear friend Joe Garraghy, all of whom stuck by Jim to the end. At the same time we share the Hope of all Christians in the resurrection promised by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and in the infinite Mercy of God.

Our Brother Hibernian, Judge James J. Comerford, was a distinguished American jurist and law enforcement officer, a faithful Catholic and an outstanding Irishman.

The greatest tribute which we can pay to the memory of Judge Jim Comerford is to preserve, protect and enhance the New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade and then hand that parade on to those who will come after us. It will always be important to proclaim the equal right of immigrant and native alike to the freedom of this great city; it will always be important to assert that Irish are welcome to apply; it will always be important to remind the world that the Irish in America have not forgotten the motherland of our race nor her ongoing freedom struggle.

Judge James J. Comerford showed us how to do all of these things under the spotlight of world attention, how to stand tall as we asserted our Liberty and our traditions on Fifth Avenue on Saint Patrick's Day.

Thank you, Jim.

Let us arise now and follow in the footsteps of this great man.

Francis P. Beirne, Chairman
New York Saint Patrick's Day
Parade and Celebration Committee

THE LAST MEETING of the New York Saint Patrick's Day Parade Committee attended by the late Judge James J. Comerford (seated without sash) was the installation of the 1986 Grand Marshal, Al O'Hagan of Brooklyn (center) and his Aides. Seated to Al's left is Frank Beirne, present parade Chairman, who succeeded "The Judge" in 1984. Judge Comerford, who marched in his first Saint Patrick's Day Parade in 1927 with the County Kilkenny Association, was a former President of Kilkenny and of the United Irish Counties as well as National President of the AOH (1962-1964) and Chairman of the Parade Committee (1965-1984).

"THATCHERISM"

Dear Editor,
Mrs. Thatcher must think people are very subjective, or stupid, to hear her talk of killings, and ask clergy to help her put an end to them (let her include Rev. Paisley).

She is the one responsible for all the killings since the Gibraltar Massacre. Her vicious bad examples, the "shoot to kill" policies, the cover-up of the Stalker report, show her to be an absolute hypocrite.

Let's hope the clergy will have the courage and conscience to point these facts out to her (the soldiers are her victims, too).

She is engulfed in a blind, racist, bigoted tirade of lunacy and is totally blind to the facts. She needs a severe "dressing down" — "it's a two-way street," Mrs. Thatcher.

SEAN MACBRIDE

Dear Mr. Henshaw:

I am sure that you share my deep sense of loss over the recent death of Sean MacBride, one of the great Irish patriots of the twentieth century.

As you know, one of Sean MacBride's legacies was to call our attention to the struggle for national self-determination and justice, no matter where it occurs — in Northern Ireland, or in Southern Africa. To that end, he developed a code of conduct for businesses operating in Northern Ireland which were modelled on the pioneering work of Rev. Leon Sullivan in South Africa.

I am an original sponsor of H.R. 722, which was introduced in the House of Representatives on July 22, 1987, calling for the implementation of the MacBride Principles by U.S. businesses engaged in Northern Ireland. I assure you that I will work hard for its passage.

I know that you join me not just in mourning his passing but in rejoicing in a great life passionately lived.

TRIBUTE TO MACBRIDE

Dear Editor:

This past January, Ireland mourned the passing of one of her most beloved sons, Nobel Laureate and Irish Nationalist Sean MacBride. His significant contributions on behalf of human rights and world peace are a source of great pride for Irish Americans.

Below, for your information, is my tribute to this great man reprinted from the Congressional Record of January 25, 1988.

Norman F. Lent
Member of Congress

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, on January 15, the world mourned the passing of a truly remarkable individual, Mr. Sean MacBride, whose diplomatic career and dedicated work for human rights won him international recognition.

Sean MacBride's distinguished career spanned nearly 70 years. As a young man, he became actively involved in the cause of Irish nationalism and went on to serve as chief of staff of the IRA during the 1930's. He obtained a law degree at Dublin's National University, and following a brilliant career as one of the most successful trial lawyers in Dublin, Sean MacBride helped establish a new faction in Irish politics, the Republican Party. He was elected to Parliament in 1947 where he served until 1958.

In 1948, Sean MacBride entered the international political arena with his appointment as Irish Foreign Minister. As a lifelong advocate of human and individual rights, Mr. MacBride may best be remembered for founding Amnesty International in 1961. He served as the organization's chairman until 1975 and as Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations from 1973 until 1976.

Sean MacBride was a long-time friend of the Ad Hoc Congressional Committee on Irish Affairs, of which I am a member, appearing before the committee on several occasions to discuss issues relating to Ireland and Northern Ireland. One issue that prompted considerable debate both in Ireland and in the United States was the antidiscrimination code he sponsored, the "MacBride Principles," which called on American companies operating in Ireland to offer equal employment opportunities to Roman Catholics.

In 1974, he was honored with the Nobel Peace Prize for his work to promote human rights, and 3 years later, he was honored with the International Lenin Prize for Peace Among Nations for his efforts to end the arms race and achieve world peace. He is only the second person to win both these distinguished awards.

Sean MacBride's remarkable achievements earned him international respect and admiration, and his significant contributions to ensure human rights and world peace should be a source of great pride for all Irish-Americans. Sean MacBride will be missed, but his legacy lives on.

SEAN MACBRIDE

Dear Mr. Henshaw:

On January 15 Ireland and the world lost one of the great humanitarians of our time, Sean MacBride. His commitment to the oppressed was legendary and inspiring. In recent years I was honored to work with this remarkable man in combating religious discrimination in Northern Ireland.

Sean MacBride's most fitting memorial is our re-dedication to the high ideals which he exemplified in his long and fruitful life. May his work continue!

BIRMINGHAM SIX APPEAL

Parochial House
42 Abbey Street, Armagh

The Editor:

The judgement of the Appeal Court in the case of the Birmingham Six was negative. Also it was not couched in the sober words one would have expected from three experienced judges considering a case decided 13 years ago. It contained unmeasured tones of language of denunciation of witnesses and castigation of coolly presented scientific evidence, a certain fury of denunciation, an abolitionist exclusion of all apportioned grievances, a refusal to balance views against each other, indicating that this was a polemic like the second Philippic of Cicero against Anthony rather than the wisdom of Solomon or Solon. It

Dublin Celebrates Millennium in 1988

ABC to Broadcast Live from Dublin on May 9th

In observance of the City of Dublin's one thousandth year, ABC's "Good Morning America" will broadcast live from Dublin on May 9, 1988. The tribute will include a look at the city through a walking tour. Joel Siegel will report on the theater of Dublin and will talk about the music, the great tradition of writers, the politics of Ireland, and much more.

A brief history of Dublin follows: Dublin, the capital of Ireland, is a city of great antiquity, with a history spanning more than one thousand years. The city has an excellent situation at the mouth of the river Liffey, and it lies in the latitude 53° 20' 38" north, and in longitude, 6° 17' 36" west. The ancient Irish name for Dublin was Baile Átha Cliath, the town of the ford of the hurdles, which refers to the ford where Father Matthew Bridge now stands. The city's English name is derived from the Irish Dubh Linn, or "Black Pool," a reference to the original settlement near the confluence of the rivers Poddle and Liffey.

Origin and Early History

Scholars are agreed, on the basis of archeological evidence, that Dublin was founded by the Scandinavian Norsemen, or Vikings, who established a settlement on the south bank of the river Liffey in 841 A.D. The Norse Kingdom of Dublin became one of the most powerful in western Europe and by the tenth was the British establishment defending itself against the 'Croppie Boys'.

Regarding the plight of the Birmingham Six we must however look at the positive side:

(1) Many politicians, churchmen and journalists in Britain, in the USA as well as Ireland are convinced that the Birmingham Six are innocent or that there is a doubt regarding their guilt sufficient to allow their release.

(2) Many of the British public also believe that the case against them is doubtful.

The time is ripe for the release of these men. We believe that diplomatic pressure from Ireland, the USA and other states including the Vatican should result in their release within 1988. Release we desire as soon as possible but that cannot be the end of the sad story. These six men cannot have the guilt of 21 murders affixed to their names nor can they be expected to resume their lives without adequate compensation. Therefore:

(1) an appeal must be made to the conscience of the police officers who beat them into signing false confessions.

(2) to the conscience of the prison officers who saw their bruises and injuries and added more.

(3) to the conscience of the IRA who bombed Birmingham to give full forensic and other historical details and in every possible way help clear them.

(4) to the conscience of the prison governors and security authorities to declare publicly that they have for a long time accepted the innocence of these men and in many ways have treated them as innocent.

(5) to the conscience of the British Government. Let every Irishman in the next election vote for the party who will release innocent Irish prisoners in jail in Britain.

Yours sincerely,
Dr. Denis Paul
Fr. Raymond Murray

century it was a wealthy and successful trading centre. Not surprisingly, the city was raided repeatedly by successive Irish Kings. The most significant of these raids was carried out by Mael Sechnaill II in 988 A.D., according to the medieval annals. Mael Sechnaill captured Dublin after a siege lasting twenty days, and imposed a tax of one ounce of gold on every tenement in the town, to be paid on Christmas night forever.

This turning-point in the early history of Dublin is the focal-point for the Millennium Celebrations in 1988. Mael Sechnaill's victory paved the way for the later triumph of Brian Boru, High King of Ireland, at the Battle of Clontarf in 1014 A.D., when the Norse power in Ireland was decisively broken. The Norse continued to rule in Dublin for another 150 years, a period of comparative peace which saw the foundation of Christ Church Cathedral, which will celebrate 950 years of history in 1988, during the Dublin Millennium.

Dublin and the Norman Invasion

Dublin was captured in 1170 A.D. by Norman adventurers under Richard de Clare, Earl of Pembroke, who carried the nickname Strongbow. In the following year, Henry II, King of England, established his authority over the city and granted it to the men of Bristol by Royal Charter. The provisions of this and subsequent charters were to form the basis of municipal government in Dublin. The first Mayor of Dublin was elected in 1229 A.D. to preside over meetings of the Dublin City Assembly which were held at the great feasts of Easter, Midsummer, Michaelmas and Christmas.

Dublin was also the centre of Norman administration in Ireland, with its headquarters at Dublin Castle, built in the early 13th century. The Normans were also responsible for the massive city walls, portions of which survive to this day, and which are dramatically illustrated on the 13th century Dublin City Seal. The city withstood an attack by Edward Bruce in 1317 and was to enjoy relative calm during the following two hundred years.

Life in Medieval Dublin

Commercial life within the walled city of Dublin was centred on the trade guilds, which included goldsmiths, carpenters, shoemakers, and coopers. The trade guilds were responsible for the annual Corpus Christi pageant, when each guild enacted a scene from the Bible appropriate to its calling. Other pageants included the Riding of the Franchisees, or the perambulation of the city boundaries, and the story of St. George and the Dragon. Dublin's continuing strategic importance is reflected in the personal gift of the City Sword by King Henry IV in the early 15th century. Religious life revolved around the two great cathedrals of Christ Church and St. Patrick and numerous religious houses, including the Priory of All Saints and the Abbey of St. Thomas.

Dublin and the Tudor Monarchs
Dublin became the centre of resistance to Henry Tudor, who was crowned Henry VII of England after the Battle of Bosworth Field in 1485. In May 1487, the pretender Lambert Simnel was crowned as King Edward VI in Christ Church Cathedral and an army set sail for England, only to suffer defeat at the hands of the Tudor King one month later. The Irish continued to intrigue against the Tudors, and a rebellion against Henry VIII, led by 'silken' Thomas Fitzgerald in 1534, was doomed after a two month siege of Dublin failed to capture the city and Dublin Castle.

Henry VIII introduced the Reformation to Ireland and this was followed by the suppression of the religious houses. The lands of the Priory of All Saints were granted to Dublin Corporation in 1589. The site of the Priory was subsequently given by the Corporation for the foundation of Trinity College, Dublin, which was established by the last of the Tudor Monarchs, Elizabeth I, in 1592.

Dublin and the House of Stuart

Dublin was to be the fore in support of the Restoration of Charles II in 1660. In return, the King heaped honours on the city, elevating the Mayor to the status of Lord Mayor and presenting him with a Chain of Office. The Royal Hospital was built at Kildmainham, near Dublin, by Lord Deputy Ormond as a home for retired soldiers. Ormond was also responsible for the enclosure of the Phoenix Park, which with 1,762 acres is one of the largest in Europe. Dublin's prosperity was greatly augmented by the arrival of Huguenot refugees from France, bringing new skills and helping to develop the silk and poplin industries.

Dublin remained faithful to the House of Stuart and declared its support for James II after he was deposed and replaced by William of Orange in 1688. The decisive defeat of James at the Battle of the Boyne in 1690, meant that Dublin had no option but to submit to William, who later presented a new Chain of Office to be worn by the city's Lord Mayor which is in use to the present day.

Dublin's Golden Age:

The Eighteenth Century
Dublin enjoyed unprecedented peace and prosperity during the 18th century. The city was the seat of the Irish Parliament, which met in the new Parliament House in College Green, built in 1729. Other magnificent buildings soon followed, including the Four Courts and Custom House, designed by James Gandon, and the Royal Exchange which is now Dublin's City Hall. The Lord Mayor of Dublin was provided

Roche Stumps for Passage

Peter Archer, a former Solicitor General of Great Britain has confirmed in affidavits before the SEC that there is nothing in the MacBride Principles which contravenes the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Act or violates English statutes. In the 1986 case involving American Branda, U.S. District Judge Carter declared that the MacBride Principles "do not call for discrimination against anyone. All nine of the principles could be legally implemented by management in its Northern facility."

(2) The Switch — Adoption of the MacBride Principles will lead to disinvestment and contribute to economic decline. The objective here is to switch your attention from the investment decisions of U.S. pension fund managers which the bill addresses to the totally unrelated disinvestment decisions of corporations. The Royal rump who espouse this specious argument fail to acknowledge at least half a dozen more critical factors affecting business decisions such as devaluation of currencies, export/import imbalances, taxes and duties, availability of raw material, transportation costs, the cost of borrowing and British fiscal and economic policies.

From June 1979 to June, 1986 manufacturing jobs in Northern Ireland declined by 33% (48,000 jobs). The MacBride Fair Employment Principles were developed and promoted beginning in 1985. England would have you believe this decline is in some way attributable to the MacBride Principles. These same officials attempted to link the 1986 announced closing of Gallagher's Belfast plant to the threat of the MacBride Principles. In fact, the Gallagher's consolidation was due to West German imports and the Thatcher government's duty increase on cigarettes!!

Finally, in over 30 hours of testimony in five states not one independent representative of the business or investment community testified against the Principles. If these Principles pose any threat to investment it apparently is unknown to fiscal officers or investors, or is so insubstantial as to not warrant a statement from them.

(3) The Bribe — offer something in exchange for delay or rejection of the MacBride Principles. In at least two states — Illinois and Rhode Island — British officials have attempted to influence state legislators by offering trips to Northern Ireland. In California, British investment was hinted as retaliation against the MacBride bill.

The bribe is actually a key component of the Northern Ireland occupation strategy. In the 1970's the British government threw tax incentives, loans and grants at bigoted Unionist politicians and firms like Harland and Wolff and Shorts in a Parliamentary vote-buying ploy that

In the 1980's the English government chose to make a Catholic ghetto out of the Northern Ireland Civil Service in an attempt to bribe some Catholics and draw attention away from their dismal performance at addressing anti-Catholic discrimination in these government sponsored firms in the private sector. Nearly 50% of the entire workforce (9 out of every 20) in Northern Ireland are on a public payroll, but not one of the government's witnesses today will suggest to you that huge public debt could lead to disinvestment, economic stagnation, or a disincentive to investment. Only the MacBride Principles could do that!!

Oliver Kearney, the Secretary for the Northern Ireland Fair Employment Trust set up by Dr. MacBride, would not take the bribe and for his advocacy of the MacBride Principles before the California legislature, was summarily dismissed. Kearney is the most feared man in England today. Why? Because he possesses the truth and the courage of his convictions.

(4) The Dodge — Leading political representatives of the Catholic/Nationalist Communities oppose use of the MacBride Principles. Individuals like Hume, Fitt and Cusack, who have testified at other hearings, are affectionately referred to as England's pet Catholics. They represent the fruits of the bribe. They are paid by the British government but the party they ostensibly represent, the Social Democratic Labor Party (SDLP), has never adopted a policy in opposition to the MacBride Principles. Consider the hypocrisy of Mr. Hume, and Lord Fitt when a month ago Sean Farren, the SDLP spokesman on employment called for the "adoption of U.S. type laws and a tough program of affirmative action." In other words the MacBride Principles as American investment guidelines would somehow threaten jobs but the same principles enshrined in law as advocated by Hume would not harm investment. A more classic case of double-speak would be hard to find. Moreover, the Prime Minister of Ireland and Gerry Adams, a Sinn Féin Member of Parliament who represents 1/3 of the Catholic/Nationalist vote in Northern Ireland, are both strong advocates of the adoption and use of the MacBride Principles. Mr. Hume's simplistic "We want jobs not principles," begs the question of basic rights no matter what the economic climate.

(5) The Stall — There is no need for American concern because a British White Paper on the issue of employment in Northern Ireland has been published. Every time England's illegitimate role of occupation is thrust into public view a White Paper is promised or a Royal Commission is created in the best tradition of colonial paternalism. The sole purpose of these devices and that of the Anglo-Irish Accord is to stall for time and to give the appearance of concern. Listen carefully to the Sept. 10, 1987 words of Mr. Viggers announcing the release of the new Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights

Dublin in Transition:
The Nineteenth Century

The Act of Union, 1800 abolished the independent Irish Parliament and united it with the British Parliament at Westminster. The aristocracy and gentry followed the Parliament to London and this led to a decline in Dublin's standing and prosperity. Many elegant terraced houses degenerated into tenement shums, as the numbers of Dublin's poor were swollen by the effects of the Great Famine, in the 1840's.

Not all was gloom and doom, however. The rise of the Catholic merchant class after Emancipation in 1829 led to a boom in church-building. Improvements in the infrastructure included the introduction of the railways and trams. The provision of piped water from the Vartory reservoir in the 1860's and the development of a main drainage scheme were valuable weapons in the fight against disease. New and improved hospitals were built, such as the Mater Misericordiae and St. Vincent's Hospital. The municipal franchise was extended, allowing a greater say in running the city's affairs to a larger number of people.

Report: "These proposals . . . [include] tough economic sanctions including grant denial are more comprehensive and radical than the MacBride Principles." The proposals are, in fact, just that, and it is reliably estimated that a two-year trek through Parliament would get most of them. Isn't it ironic. However, in two years the "radical" MacBride Principles have become so tame and how in America the principles would do harm, but in Northern Ireland they would be effective.

Everett Dirksen when faced with adoption of civil rights laws he did not support remarked, "Just when it looks like you are going to be run out of town on a rail — turn around and look like you are leading the parade." Alas, Britain would now have you believe she is leading the parade. If ever there was a reason to doubt the Russian Bear — beware when dealing with the sinister Saxon. England is every bit committed to Irish apartheid as South Africa is to racial apartheid.

I have found that legislators invariably decide on this legislation on the basis of subterfuge merit and intuition — choosing the dedication and integrity of the late Dr. Sean MacBride over the pandering of paid mercenaries; choosing common sense over nonsense. We plead for your support of this measure as a simple matter of justice.

New services were provided, including the city's own police force and fire brigade.

Toward the end of the century, efforts were underway to provide housing for Dublin's thousand slum dwellers, and red-brick artisan's dwellings were built by private, charity and public purse. Meanwhile the city's suburbs had extended beyond the two canals, into Rathmines and Ballsbridge on the south, and Clontarf and Drumcondra on the north.

Dublin Today:

The Twentieth Century

In the early 20th century, Dublin witnessed two movements which shaped modern Ireland: the 1913 Lock-Out, which stamped the labour movement under the trade union leader Jim Larkin, and the 1916 Rising, which led ultimately to the foundation of the Irish Free State in 1922. The Irish Civil War started in June of that year, with the destruction of the Four Courts, and large areas of central Dublin were destroyed, as they had been in 1916.

The cessation of hostilities in 1923 allowed for a reconstruction programme in the city centre; meanwhile, garden suburbs such as Marino and Crumlin were built by Dublin Corporation. The city boundaries were extended in 1930 with the inclusion of the Townships of Rathmines and Rathgar and of Pembroke. A further extension was effected in 1942 when Howth was incorporated to the city. Modern Dublin is not without its problems, which come from the difficulty of containing an expanding 20th century city within an 18th century core without damaging the environment.

Whatever its difficulties may be, and whatever its future may bring, Dublin has been guaranteed immortality through the greatest work of 20th century literature, James Joyce's Ulysses which encapsulates for all time the story of Dublin, the city built beside Anna Livia Plurabelle.

Grand Marshals on British Policy

FORMER GRAND MARSHALS, l. to r., Paul O'Dwyer, Peter King and Michael Flannery held a St. Patrick's Day news conference at O'Lunney's Restaurant in Manhattan to discuss the British murder of Irish citizens. O'Dwyer was Grand Marshal in 1974; Flannery in 1983; and King said there was "nothing for Irish-Americans to celebrate on St. Patrick's Day as long as British soldiers are on Irish soil."

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans!

Happy St. Patrick's Day! Honor the Patron Saint of Ireland in a manner that is befitting a gentleman of his stature, not to mention the rest of the Irish Saints or those Irishmen and women who have done so much to better the world we live in; the country we love dearly; the state in which we dwell and the city which we call home. It has been and will continue to be a great place to live, thanks to these Irishmen and women. Let's go to sports.

Superbowl: The big game has come and went. The Redskins have triumphed over all. The Denver Broncos once again were defeated because of their defense. YR heard a comment by a sportscaster who was picking Washington prior to the game. This sportscaster's comment was that all he could see from last year's Superbowl was Phil Simm's having an excessive amount of time to set up and throw passes. He alleged that Denver's defense was suspect. This proved the case. Washington also disproved the myth that black quarterbacks can't make it in the NFL. Mr. Williams did an exceptional job.

Perfidious Albion

der of the Ulster Defense Regiment, Brigadier Denis Omerod, even went on television to say that the regiment was open to members of the Ulster Defense Association.

Lord Carrington

British politicians were also associated with "dirty tricks" operations. The Littlejohn brothers were signed up by Lord Carrington, then Defense Minister, and Geoffrey Johnson-Smith, a Cabinet aide to Prime Minister Heath. They were sent to the south of Ireland to carry out illegal operations, including bank robberies and the petrol-bombing of police stations, in order to discredit the IRA.

Sectarian Policies

British politicians have continued the Stormont practice of fostering high unemployment rates in Catholic areas. The Fair Employment Agency was understaffed and under financed. Employees who tried to accomplish the aims for which it had been set up were harassed. Grants from the European Parliament, designed to help long term unemployed, were withdrawn from projects in Catholic areas. Employees of the Fair Employment Trust were dismissed or threatened with dismissal for promoting the MacBride Principles.

Mis-Use of American Grants

Anti-Catholic prejudice is evident also in the use of American funds. "The Irish government", the Irish Voice reported 12/12/87, "is pressing for a major review of the United States-backed International Fund for Ireland, which was set up after the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement. The government's move comes after the Fund's decision to allocate only one percent of its budget for job creation projects to the deprived area of West Belfast".

Even the government-owned British Broadcasting Corporation is availed of to promote sectarianism. The music of the Lulliburero, an anti-Catholic rallying song which dates back to the time of William of Orange, is used as a signature tune before every world news broadcast.

The Hibernians in the DC area (MD, VA, DC and points west) can take great pleasure with the Redskin's success.

One aside to the Superbowl was Jimmy "The Greek" Snyder's abrupt departure from CBS. He uttered his own execution with his comments on black athletes. A man in his seventies should know better. So goes the world of sports. Much money passed hands during this year's Superbowl. The only ones that came out ahead were the bookies, as usual.

College Basketball: The Big East is becoming quite interesting. Syracuse is being upset by teams that aren't thought to be that good this year. Georgetown is supposedly in a rebuilding year yet they are playing good ball. Villanova is not taking a back seat just because the sportswriters don't rate them too highly. Then there is UConn, the University of Connecticut. Not what one might call a jock school or diploma mill by any stretch of the imagination, yet at the moment, one of the better teams in the Big East. As Arte Johnson used to say, "Verry Interesting!" A late note, Syracuse took Villanova to claim the Big East berth in the NCAA.

The Midwest has teams such as Purdue, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio State, DePaul and Notre Dame beating themselves black-and-blue. A lot of good ball being played by these teams. Not to short change Notre Dame this year, but YR doesn't think that Digger Phelps has the horses to make it to the Final Four this year. The kids have a lot of heart but they're missing too many shots. Indiana has practically every team in the nation gunning for them. Not because of their playing ability but because of their coach, Bobby Knight. YR doesn't know Knight but his arrogance and temper when coaching doesn't thrill too many people. Is this the image of college sports that parents want their kids to emulate? The fans probably think it's great. It's not. Enough of this editorializing.

The team that is presently ranked No. 1 in the polls is Arizona. Now, YR hasn't been to the state of Arizona. He doesn't know that much about the school. What he has learned is that Arizona has a good academic record. They have a guard that has suffered tragedy in his young life. This same kid is carrying a very impressive grade point average. On a Court, this blond-headed guard doesn't have to take a back seat to anyone. His point average is also very good. His last name is Kerr. His father was the president of the American University in Beirut, Was, because his father was killed there in the kid's freshman year at Arizona. YR isn't the only one that is impressed with this kid. In addition to the president of Arizona University, his coach, the NBA, there are a few captains of industry that would love to have a guy such as Mr. Kerr on their corporate team.

Speaking of the NCAA Final Four, which YR wasn't, some corporations are running contests to see who can pick the final four. If you enter one of these contests, Good Luck.

Brawl: Whether it is professional or amateur sports, bench-clearing brawls and fights have no place in any game. Georgetown has been guilty of provoking some incidents. The latest incident happened between the Redmen of St. John's and the Black Friars of Providence. Players and fans got into this one. It was ugly! Besides the obvious reasons for not doing such things, there is an issue that is being lost. At one time Catholic colleges were not only for turning scholars some of which could play sports, but also ladies and gentlemen. The latter part seems to have gone by the wayside in these modern times. No longer is it enough to be a gentleman on the court or the field; you have to be an aggressive athlete who believes in the Code of Hammurabi. Whatever happened to finesse? These guys today think they have to duke it out anytime an opponent bumps them. This not only detracts from the game, it detracts from the player involved and from the school whose colors he is wearing. It also reflects on their coach. Let's put brains back into the game and leave the brawls for the guys in the bars. To quote Grantland Rice, "It isn't whether you win or lose but how you play the game that counts." Go and sin no more. Amen.

Winter Olympics: Much has been said about the lack of gold won by the U.S. team. Fine, these kids, and most of them were kids, are strictly amateur. Yes, there were more corporate sponsors and monies available for training than in the past. YR feels that these kids gave their best. So the hockey team played a little erratic. You can't have a miracle every time out. So some of the figure skaters didn't live up to the hype about them. Did you ever think that perhaps the hype was wrong? YR is proud of what they did in Calgary. You should be proud of them too. Be proud of a team that can be called an amateur team. Amateur does not mean bush-league or mediocre. Amateur means non-professional in the strictest sense of the word, as in doing it without compensation. Be it by government subsidy or pseudo-athletic club largesse, in the USA, there isn't a full-time Olympic figure skater on the payroll.

As far as TV coverage went, ABC did make some gaffes, but overall, the network did a good job. Some of their reporters were more comfortable covering the events than others.

Baseball: Spring training has opened in Florida and Arizona. Opening day can't be far behind. The odds are against the Cardinals and Twins repeating. In the American League, the question isn't who's going to win the pennant but how long will Billy Martin manage the Yankees? The odds on this say Billy won't last the season.

Hibernian Shamrock Run A Popular Annual Event

A PORTION OF the field of 800 runners taking part in the Fourth Annual Hibernian Shamrock Run, held March 5 in Forest Park in St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS: The sound of the starter's gun signaled the start of the Fourth Annual Hibernian Shamrock Run, and unofficially the beginning of the running season in St. Louis.

The Hibernian Shamrock, held March 5 in Forest Park, is one of the most popular on the running circuit. The run is monitored and sanctioned by the St. Louis Track Club.

Over 800 runners took part in the event, which is actually two runs. For recreational striders there is a 3K race, and for more competitive runners, a 10K.

The Hibernian Shamrock is sponsored by Hibernians of St. Louis and St. Louis County. Corporate sponsors include Flanagan Wallpaper and Paint, Vess Beverages and Anheuser-Busch companies.

Local Irish-American businessman Bill Flanagan, president of Flanagan Wallpaper and Paint Co. was the honorary starter of both races. Post-run festivities included entertainment by the Irish musical group "Limerick" and refreshments provided by Anheuser-Busch and Vess. Monies raised by the run support the AOH Saint Patrick's Day Parade, and local and national AOH charities.

"Runners really give the Hibernian Shamrock high marks," said organizer Dan Friel. "Not just the run, but the whole event. Many of them say it is one of the best in St. Louis, with the music and refreshments."

"But to tell the truth, it's just as much fun for the Hibernians," Friel added. "The biggest benefit of the run and the AOH parade is the sense of unity it has brought to the St. Louis Irish community.

ONE OF THE youngest striders in the 3K race takes to the task of the Hibernian Shamrock. He did finish (and with a good time too!)

"A big vote of thanks has to go to our corporate sponsors: Flanagan, Vess and Anheuser-Busch. Another group that must be recognized is the St. Louis Track Club, especially Dan Sebben and Tom Eckleman. We couldn't do it without all their help."

NOTE: Please forward questions to Mr. William T. Malone, Dept. of English, Program for Irish Studies, Catholic University, Washington, D.C. 20064.

Q. Can you please provide me with information on the name Davis? Mr. E.J. Davis, Sharon Hill, PA.

A. Davis is a pet form of David meaning 'beloved.' The name is usually associated with that great Celtic land, Wales. But its history in Ireland is very old. In Irish the name appears in several regional spellings: Ulster, mac daibhir; Wexford, mac daibhrd mor; but most commonly as daibhir. All of these are pronounced dawver, which, if an English word, would rhyme with flower. Related names in English are M'David, M'Davis, M'Dave, M'Day, M'Da, MacDavid, Davidson, Dawson, all meaning 'son of David,' while Davy and Davies, mean 'of David.' It was a common name among the early Anglo-Welsh settlers. There were also a powerful Scottish clan and a branch of the Burke family. In addition two separate native Irish families have the name. The MacDavids of Thomond and those of Wexford. The title of the head of the Wexford clan was known as mac daibhrd mor, 'the great son of David.' His patrimony lay in the northeast part of Wexford. The Book of Leinster, written between 1125-50 A.D., states that this family is descended from Mardock the Gael. Such a reference attests to the ancientness of the use of the name in Ireland.

Q. Could you please help me with the name of Nahlill? Anthony Nahlill, Bensalem, PA.

A. In Irish your name appears as O Neighill pronounced just like the English transcription. Irish is equal to English long a, thus the a in your name. It was common practice for immigrant officers and record keepers to spell out Irish names (and other foreign) as they sounded. Your name could belong to a branch of the glorious O'Neill family of which there is much written. Other forms of your name are O'Neill, O'Nihill, O'Nyhill, and O'Niall, which means 'descendant of Niall.' The name is of Norse extraction and is popular in Limerick where the Vikings established one of their first settlements in the 10th century. There is a Norse Saga called Niall's Saga. It is not connected with your name, but shows its Scandinavianness. Many believe that your name is not a branch of the O'Neills of Ulster because of its Norse origins and those Ulstermen were fighting the Danes near Dublin as early as 919. So unless your namesakes betrayed their fellow countrymen, a not too rare occurrence, mind you (if the gold was sufficient), then there is probably no connection with those Ulster O'Neills. There is, however, an O'Neill of Dalmanis of Dalmanis origin and descended, according to the 16th century historian Keats, from the King of Cashel, Aodh Caomh, who reigned from 871-901, and whose power base originated in south Co. Clare, where the O'Nihill family still flourishes. Of great interest is that Brian Boru was a Dalmanis. By 1000 he had subjugated and made allies of the Danes in southwest Ireland. So your ancestors may have fought their own countrymen after all. Boru died on Easter Friday 1014 before he could know that his army defeated the Danes thus halting Danish supremacy. If there were ever such a thing as a King of All Ireland, Boru would have to claim that title. If your family is associated with either the Ulster O'Neills or the Dalmanis O'Nihills, they helped to create Irish history by successfully driving out the marauding Vikings.

Q. Could you please tell me the origin of my family name Whitney. Francis Whitney, Staten Island, N.Y.

A. Whitney is a Scandinavian name that came to England during the Danish invasions. In Irish it appears de Fuitigh pronounced f, ui as in guilt, ni as in nip, gh-y in year. It means 'one who came from Whitney' in Herefordshire, England or from White Island, England.

Q. Could you please give me some information on the origin of the name Fay? James Fay, Arlington Heights, IL.

A. In Irish the name has several regional spellings: O Feich and O Feisch in Connacht; O Faith in Galway, O Faedbeach in Westmeath; other forms are de Fao and A' Fao. O Feich is O Fay, Fay, Fay in English. The name means 'descendant of a Raven.' The many Irish spellings provide a variety of Anglicized spellings for each Irish one, yet each Irish spelling provides your form of the name. Other related English spellings are Fybie, Fybee, Fee, Fye; o Faith, O Fagh, O Faye, Foy, Fahy, Fahy, Faghy. A few of the Irish spellings translate to mean 'green,' because it resembles the Irish word faithche, which also means field. Another theory is that the name in French means 'beech tree' and may have come to Eire during the Norman invasions. The most illustrious branch of this family lived in Ul Maine, Co. Galway, and much of their land, called the Poblewinterfahy (note the -Fahy at the end) was wrested from them during the Cromwellian confiscations.

Northern Ireland Is at War — John Stalker

In An Interview with National President Murphy

"I have known honorable men in similar positions who ordinarily would not accept a free cup of coffee — however, if the possibility of a Knighthood was dangled under their noses, they would kill for it."

In a seven-week period in late 1982, six unarmed Catholic men were killed in Ulster by officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary (RUC). Two years later John Stalker, one of Britain's most highly respected criminal investigators, was sent to Northern Ireland to inquire into alleged abuses by the RUC, including the existence of a secret but official "shoot-to-kill" policy. Despite being stonewalled by the RUC for two years, Stalker managed to uncover possible offences of murder, perjury, and conspiracy to circumvent the course of justice, and was on the brink of discovering vital evidence when he was abruptly pulled off the case. "I was getting close to the truth about policemen operating under cover and without proper control," says Stalker. "I believe I was hurriedly removed because I was on the threshold of causing a major police scandal and political row."

Stalker's interim report had recommended that eleven RUC officers be tried for murder. That was the last straw for the British establishment. In the apparent conspiracy between the Thatcher Cabinet, Sir John Hermon, head of the RUC and others, false charges were brought against Stalker. He was suspended from duty and removed from the "Shoot-to-Kill" investigation. Sixty days later Stalker was cleared of all charges and returned to duty as Deputy Chief Constable of Manchester. Disillusioned at being unable to complete his inquiries, and facing a wall of silence upon his return from his superior, Chief Constable James Anderton, John Stalker resigned from the Police Force in March of 1987. The RUC investigation was taken over by Colin Sampson, Chief Constable of West Yorkshire.

John Stalker then decided to tell his story and wrote a book called "The Stalker Affair." The book was launched in the United States on May 20, 1988, by its publisher, Viking Penguin Inc. I met John Stalker on May 23, 1988 and spoke to him about his experiences in the RUC investigation. I found Stalker to be outgoing, friendly and unflappable. In spite of his ill-treatment by the British establishment, he remains surprisingly without a trace of bitterness toward those who wronged him. The story of this man of unquestionable honesty and integrity should be of great interest to Americans, especially Americans of Irish descent. The following are excerpts from the interview:

Murphy: In your book you did not fully support the "shoot-to-kill" theory. Does that mean you believed that what appeared to be the work of "death squads" was the work of individuals acting without authority?

Stalker: What I said was that the word policy is a very difficult word to define. By policy I had to define my own meaning for the word. By policy I meant a written or verbally expressed instruction to policemen to go out and kill terrorists rather than arrest them — and later tell lies about it because it was in the best interest of the police in Northern Ireland. I didn't find that sort of policy. What I did find was a state of affairs that indicated that those junior policemen who actually did the shooting honestly believe that was what was expected of them. They were hyped up to the point that they believed that that was what their bosses wanted to happen. Then when it did happen, their senior officers disappeared and left them to carry the can. It was that I referred to in my book when I said there was an inclination if not a policy to shoot-to-kill. I have to say there is nothing wrong with a shoot-to-kill policy, provided those you are shooting at are armed, and are shooting back. In those cases, of course, the people were unarmed and I think that is the essential point. They could, in my view, have been arrested rather than shot.

Murphy: Would you call what's going on in Northern Ireland a war?

Stalker: I would. The police regard it as a war. The people on the other side regard it as war. People living in certain parts of Northern Ireland consider themselves living in a war zone. Having said that, there is no official acknowledgement that it is a war.

Murphy: Some who have read your book say you appeared to have been an 'innocent' man when you went to Northern Ireland. Why were you surprised considering the RUC had been convicted of gross human rights violations by the European Court of Justice?

Stalker: Surprised, yes — because I believed that it was in everyone's interest that if policemen had committed murder they should be thoroughly investigated. I believe that the majority of people in Northern Ireland, and that includes the RUC, would not want wrongdoing

Murphy: From your investigations in Northern Ireland do you believe that the British occupation of that section of Ireland has been expensive for Britain in view of its having corrupted the political and judicial system all the way to Number 10 Downing Street?

Stalker: I don't know. I know that what happened in my case was shameful and I hope that people are ashamed of it. It has been a very shabby and sad episode in investigations of this type and I expect that it will make the next one, if there is ever another investigation into police activity in Northern Ireland, almost impossible to do.

Murphy: Did Margaret Thatcher have a hand in your dismissal from the investigation?

Stalker: I can't say for sure. I can say that my appointment to the investigation was made at a very high cabinet level. I must assume that my removal from it in light of the very delicate nature of the Anglo-Irish agreement at that time, must have been endorsed at an equivalent level.

Murphy: Must Sir John Hermon (Chief Constable RUC N.I.) be

Toward Fair Employment Donnelly-McGrath Bill Uses Tax Incentives and Penalties

U.S. Reps. Brian Donnelly (D-MA), Raymond McGrath (R-NY), William Coyne (D-PA) and Barbara Kennelly (D-CT), along with a bipartisan group of 12 members of the Committee on Ways and Means, have introduced legislation to create employment incentives for U.S. firms locating in Northern Ireland. The bill would also require firms in Northern Ireland to comply with a series of fair employment standards modeled after standards proposed by the British government.

"Some of the problems in Northern Ireland are attributable to the high unemployment rates there," said Donnelly in remarks on the floor of the House of Representatives. "Those minority workers there who do have jobs are frequently the victims of discrimination in employment. The time has come to take measures to encourage employment and end discriminatory practices in employment in that troubled section of the world."

Donnelly cited statistics comparing the overall Northern Ireland unemployment rate of 18.1% to other areas of the region where the unemployment rate for Catholic

Governor Mike Dukakis Addresses Irish Forum

NEW YORK, NY: Governor of Massachusetts Michael Dukakis, as candidate for the U.S. presidency, addressed the Irish Forum '88 in April. Here are some excerpts from his presentation:

MICHAEL DUKAKIS

"America is a land of immigrants. That's one of the reasons we're so strong... we care so deeply not only about our own citizens but about opportunity and freedom and respect for everyone in the world."

"For generations, our nation has been enriched by the contributions of Irish Americans. The Revolutionary Army was largely Irish. Your contributions to this country have been very important and no one knows that better than the Governor of Massachusetts."

"John Kennedy's election in 1960, in a very real sense, was an expression of the principles upon which this nation was founded. America is a land that is dedicated to the proposition that every citizen ought to have the opportunity to go as far as he/she can, based upon their abilities, their talents, no matter who they are or where they came from or the color of their skin or what their ethnic origin."

President's Message

Teachtaineacht an Uachtaráin
By Nicholas Murphy, National President

A SIGNAL HONOR

It has been a great honor to serve our Order as National President during the past two years. In my ten years of direct involvement with the National Board it has been my privilege to work with many fine people, all of whom generously volunteer their time and efforts to work for the programs and principles of the AOH. It is also quite evident that the average Hibernian (if there be such) is above average.

There is another thing regarding the National Presidency about which prior presidents had warned me, that is that it can be virtually a full-time job. The greatest part of my time and efforts over the last two years has been devoted to the AOH. We (not I but we) have continued old projects and begun new ones. We have accomplishments, yet there remains much to be done. It is because my personal situation does not permit me to continue to devote the same level of intensity of effort that I reluctantly have declined to seek another term as your National President. This does not mean that I intend to retire from Hibernian activity, nor that I will be unavailable for service to the National Board. But, to another must fall the opportunity to serve as National President for the next term; fortunately, there is no shortage of talent in our Order, which makes my decision a little bit easier. (In fact, one of our great strengths over a century and a half, is the orderly and regular transfer of power in our national leadership while maintaining continuity of purpose.) Whoever the next National President is, he will have my active support and my understanding.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

We have reestablished relations with the people of Ireland on several levels. No party or leader of opinion in Ireland is excluded from communication. It is important to recognize that it is possible to continue to exchange views with those with whom we disagree, whether they be in or out of government. This is true not only of the people of Ireland, but also of Great Britain, since it is the failed policies of English Imperialism which are at the root of many of Ireland's woes.

As an example, promoting the restoration of the Irish forests, destroyed by past English exploitation, we have joined with the Irish American Cultural Institute in planting a Hibernian Forest in Kerry. We must continue to propagate Irish culture in the New World as well as to support Irish culture in the Old. It is our responsibility as Americans to offer to America what is best in the traditions of our ancient heritage. Music and dance, literature and language, religion and philosophy, all this and more can we continue to give to the world — and most importantly to our own posterity.

Our youth are our future. With this in mind we have adopted the Irish Youth Foundation as a charity of our Order. We have also recommended support for Colaiste na bhFian, Between, Project Children, Scoil Gaolach - Beal Feirste, and other worthy youth projects.

The MacBride Principles Campaign remains high on our agenda. Successful in seven states to date, we must continue with Illinois, Michigan, California, Pennsylvania and Congress as our next targets. In the area of public relations generally we must redouble our efforts to make American opinion makers take seriously "Irish" issues and issues of interest to Irish America. This means the lobbying not only of public officials, but of the news media, by mail and by direct meetings with their editorial boards. To this end we have met with the editorial board of the New York Times; while we don't seem to have converted them, we have gotten more reporting of Irish stories into the paper. We have also issued a booklet of guidelines for dealing with opinion makers to each Hibernian division. Grass roots effort is absolutely essential in this area.

We have sounded the call for the US Postal System to issue a Commodore John Barry commemorative stamp by the bi-centennial of his being appointed to head the new US Navy by President George Washington. Congress must also make Commodore John Barry Day, September 13, a National Commemoration (as distinct from a paid holiday). This is not too much to ask in view of the major role played by the Irish in the winning of the In-

Nat'l President in Ireland

WHEN CONGRESSMAN Brian Donnelly of Massachusetts visited Ireland, National President Nick Murphy took him on a tour of North Kerry to show him the effects of immigration on this hard hit area. Here Nick introduces the congressman, at left, to a gathering in Nick's home village of Tarbert, Co. Kerry.

ON A RECENT visit to Ireland National President Nick Murphy, left, paid a courtesy call on a great friend of the AOH — His Worship The Mayor of Wexford, Dominic Kieran. The mayor will host "Irish-American Week" in Wexford June 19-26.

IN DUBLIN National President Murphy presents a check to Norma Smurfit, president of the Irish Youth Foundation. The contribution was a joint project of the AOH and the Ladies AOH.

Ireland is famous for its crystal. Every piece is the product of rare craftsmanship and strict adherence to quality.

The same is true for Budweiser.

We brew our beer with the finest hops, rice, and barley malt. Then we age it with Beechwood, to aid the natural carbonation. The result is a clean, crisp taste that has been distinctively Budweiser's for over one hundred years.

For those who appreciate quality, this Bud's for you.

THOMAS E. GILLIGAN

Gilligan Makes Bid for Second Director Term

National Director Thomas E. Gilligan announces his bid for reelection to his current office, as AOH National Director. Active in the AOH for many years, Tom has served the order through levels of division, state and national involvement. He was particularly instrumental in spearheading the remarkable growth of the order in his state of Florida. As a former National Advertising Director Gilligan raised over $20,000 for the Order. His energy and ability led to his appointment as National Organizer, during which tenure he added several new states and many members to the organization.

From his current position as National Director, Gilligan has represented the AOH on several boards and worked closely with other organizations on issues of mutual interest. He was instrumental in establishing the coalition of groups to promote the adoption of the MacBride Principles in Florida.

Asked why he devotes so much of his life to the AOH, Gilligan said, "The AOH is the nation's finest organization, and I want to continue to represent and promote the AOH in the South whenever possible."

Tom is married to the former Bridget Halligan and resides in Fort Lauderdale. The couple has two sons, Brian and Patrick. Besides his AOH activities, Tom finds time to serve as vice president of the Irish Cultural Institute, and on civic associations. He has been called upon several times to represent the Irish American community in Florida.

McInerney Is Endorsed for Director Post

The Midwest States have endorsed the candidacy of John T. McInerney for a second term to the Office of National Director. In addition to holding that office for the past two years, Brother McInerney has served as chairman of the Anti-Defamation Committee. That Committee is currently engaged in a campaign to force Hallmark Greeting Cards to cease distribution of Saint Patrick's Day cards which subject the Irish to degradation and ridicule. He is at the forefront of the convention in Cleveland, Ohio. The Texas State Board has endorsed his candidacy.

Bill has served as Texas State President, Division President, Deputy National Director and successful chairmen for the Texas site committee, and the Miami (80) convention which brought the National efforts to implement the MacBride Principles Bill in his state of Michigan. The Bill currently needs only to clear the Senate in order to be signed into law.

A past division secretary, county secretary and state secretary — and current financial secretary of Detroit's Patrick Ryan Division, Brother McInerney has extensive knowledge of the Order from a working viewpoint. Through his efforts the state of Michigan publishes a quarterly newspaper that reaches every member of the state, keeping them informed of news from both Ireland as well as the state.

Brother McInerney is co-chairman of the Detroit International Feis, an active member of the Detroit chapters of CCE, INA and the Irish American Cultural Institute.

A graduate of Detroit's Lawrence Institute of Technology with a BSME, he is employed as a Senior Design Engineer with Ford Motor Engineering's Chassis Division. He is married to the former Cheryl L. Deering, the father of two children, Maureen and Patrick and resides in Plymouth, Michigan.

Convention to San Antonio.

Bill's goals as National Director are to 1) support the National President and board to implement their programs of our Order; 2) work to improve the prestige and recognition of the AOH with the Catholic Church; 3) continue to place before the American people the tragic conditions in the North of Ireland and work to bring about a peaceful united 32-county Ireland; 4) support and promote the Right To Life program; and 5) actively participate in expanding the membership of the Order.

A native of Arkansas, Bill settled in Texas after serving with the U.S. Navy during World War II. He is married to the former Antoinette "Tony" Bowen of Dallas. Their family includes daughter Susan, sons Bill and James and two grandchildren.

Frank Kearney Seeks Return As Director

FRANK J. KEARNEY, SR.

Director Michael Carroll Seeks AOH Vice Presidency

National Director Michael Carroll of Worcester, MA, has announced his intention to seek the office of National Vice-President at the National Convention to be held in Cleveland, Ohio.

Michael Carroll is currently serving as National Director, elected at the Buffalo, N.Y., National Convention in 1986. Mike is a long-time member of Division 36 Worcester, where he served in almost every capacity. He was Division Treasurer (7 terms), Vice-President, President, and from there went on to serve the Massachusetts State Board as Secretary, Vice-President, and President. He still serves on the Massachusetts Major Degree Team and also as State Organizer.

A native of Co. Cork, Ireland, he is married to the former Mary Nangle from Co. Sligo, Ireland, and the proud father of four children, two boys and two girls. There are five grandchildren.

Mike will continue his life-long dedication to the AOH and by all legitimate means will help the people of Ireland secure a free and united nation.

MICHAEL CARROLL

Frank J. Kearney, Sr., of Meriden, CT, has announced that he will be a candidate for reelection to the office of National Director at the upcoming National Convention in Cleveland. He has received the unanimous endorsement of his home division, the New Haven County Board and the Connecticut State Board.

An active Hibernian for many years, Frank, whose grandparents came from Counties Mayo and Tipperary, has served as division financial secretary, county secretary and state director, secretary and vice-president. In addition to his duties as National Director, Frank currently serves as chairman of the John F. Kennedy Memorial Medal Committee. During 1987 Frank successfully spearheaded the AOH drive for the passage of the MacBride Principles Bill through the Connecticut Legislature.

Frank is a communicant of Holy Angels Church in South Meriden and a member of the parish Men's Club. He and his wife Mary are the parents of three sons. Frank is a retired manufacturing foreman of Pratt and Whitney Aircraft Corp.

In announcing his candidacy, Frank notes that in addition to helping secure the passage of the MacBride Principles through the various State Legislatures, some other priorities of the National Board are pushing for the passage of the Kennedy/Simpson Immigration Bill and the Donnelly Fair Employment Bill through the U.S. Congress. He notes that encouraging all Hibernians to keep after their elected representatives is an absolute must.

Clevelanders are getting ready for the "invasion of the Irish".

Opening Parade and Mass

Monday, July 25th is the opening day of the 84th Biennial National Convention. The green parade stripe is being painted and the pipers are tuning their pipes in anticipation of the opening parade which is set to start at 7:00 PM. The pipers will lead us to St. John's Cathedral for the opening Mass at 7:30 PM. Following Mass there will be a cocktail party at 8:30 PM, complete with drinks, hors d'oeuvres and entertainment at the Bond Court Hotel. Sean Moore, a local Irish entertainer, and his band will help to get the evening going. What fun it will be to renew old friendships and make new acquaintances!

Cleveland Night

Tuesday night, July 26th, has been declared Cleveland Night. The evening's affairs kick-off with dinner on Mall C. Mall C is a block from the Hotel and sits between City Hall and the County Courthouse providing a good view of Lake Erie and Cleveland Municipal Stadium. Entertainment during dinner will be provided by local Irish talent. After dinner, there is a choice of 2 activities: baseball game or lake cruise. The Cleveland Indians are in second place in the American League Eastern Division. They are scheduled to play the Baltimore Orioles that night. The lake cruise is aboard the "Goodtime". A band on board will provide dance music and a cash bar is available. The "Goodtime" cruise provides a very romantic view of Cleveland at sunset; however, there is limited seating. Those interested in this cruise should make sure to mark that on their registration form as availability is on a first-come first-served basis.

Irish Night

Irish Night will be celebrated on Wednesday night at the Bond Court Hotel. Festivities will start at 7:30 PM with dinner. Beer will be provided and a cash bar will be available. Entertainment for the evening will, of course, be Irish. Local singers and dancers will be featured. Dance music will be provided by the Cara Show Band of New York. A good night of singing and dancing is promised!

Closing Banquet

As at all conventions, the closing Banquet will take place Thursday night. It will be held at the Cleveland Convention Center which is located across the street from the Bond Court Hotel. Cocktail hour is at 6:30 PM and dinner will follow. Master of Ceremonies for this formal event is Cleveland's Tom Bush. The formal portion of the program will include: keynote speaker Father Malloy, president of Notre Dame University; installation of officers; presentation of mission checks; presentation of the coveted John F. Kennedy Memorial Medal to Dennis P. Long of St. Louis; announcement of the site of the 1990 national convention. Entertainment at the Banquet will be provided by the Cara Show Band and a pipe band. It will be a memorable close to the 84th National Convention.

Major Degrees

For those Hibernians that do not have their degrees, the convention provides a good opportunity to obtain them. Degree ceremonies will be held Wednesday at 3:00 PM at the Hollenden House Hotel. The cost is $10.00 per candidate and $5.00 per degree observer. A reception will follow. Registration will be available at the convention.

Sightseeing

For those who are attending the convention, but not participating in the business meetings, Cleveland has a lot to offer in historical buildings and shopping areas within walking distance of the hotel. Within a short drive of the hotel, you can see: many museums (Cleveland Art Museum is one of the top 5 in the country); Cleveland Metroparks Zoo (130 acre home for more than 1500 animals); Hale Farm and Village (restored mid-1800's farm and village); Nasa Lewis Research Center; West Side Market (one of the largest Old World style indoor/outdoor markets in the U.S.); and much, much more.

Post Convention Activity

The weekend after the convention will be one to stay in Cleveland. Friday night, July 29th is opening night for the Cleveland Irish Cultural Festival. This festival takes place at 7863 York Rd., Parma, Ohio. It's only a 20 minute drive from downtown Cleveland. This year's festival features Tommy Makem, many other entertainers (dancers, singers, musicians, storytellers) and arts and crafts exhibits. A worthwhile weekend to be sure! For more information, call (216)251-0711.

Registration

Registration for the convention package is $99.00 if received by June 15th. After that date, registration will jump to $140.00.

Cleveland Hibernian Announces Candidacy for AOH Director

During the last week of July Hibernians will converge on the City of Cleveland for the 84th Biennial AOH/LAOH National Convention. This will be the first convention to be held in the State of Ohio in over one hundred years and it is fitting that a Clevelander will be a candidate for an AOH National Board office.

Kevin W. Reynolds, a member of Cleveland's Boland/Berry Division, will be a candidate for one of the seven National Director positions.

Throughout his fifteen years of involvement with the AOH he has been an active and contributing member. This is evidenced by his service over the years as chairman of many of Cleveland's AOH social activities as well as his chairmanship of the joint AOH/LAOH Ways and Means Committee. Additionally, on a Division level he has held every elected office including president. During his period of involvement in Division leadership positions, membership in the Boland/Berry Division grew from less than forty to over two hundred.

On a State level he was elected and served in the offices of treasurer, secretary, vice president and president. He is currently the immediate past president of the Ohio State Board and also serves as Press and Publicity chairman. When he completed his term as president in July of 1987, the Ohio State Board treasury was at an all time high. In addition, during his tenure as president a new Division was organized and the groundwork was laid for the establishment of several new Ohio Divisions.

He served on the Committee that successfully solicited the National Convention for Cleveland and as Ohio State Board president led the contingent that made the formal presentations regarding the Convention to both the Men and Ladies at the Buffalo Convention.

In 1984 he was appointed by then National President Joseph Roche to the National Board as Chairman of Political Education. During his term he participated in numerous AOH educational efforts aimed at educating our elected local, state and federal representatives as well as other individuals and groups in a position to influence our government's policy on Ireland. He testified on behalf of Irish-American concerns before the Democratic National Committee's Council on Ethnic Affairs.

Kevin has been a delegate to every Ohio State Convention since 1979 and to each of the last four National Conventions. In 1975 he received the Major Degrees of the Order in Akron, Ohio. Brother Reynolds is a respected member of Cleveland's Irish-American Community as is evidenced by his selection as co-chairman of Cleveland's 119th Annual St. Patrick's Day Parade in 1986. He served for many years as an AOH delegate to the Greater Cleveland United Irish Societies. He is a member of Cleveland's East Side Irish American and West Side Irish American Clubs and is a former treasurer of the Cleveland Chapter of the Irish National Caucus.

He is married to Marian O'Donnell Reynolds and is the father of two sons, Michael and Brendan. He is the son of Jim and Mary Reynolds of Rocky River, Ohio, who have been awarded "Life Memberships" by the AOH and LAOH National Boards.

Brother Reynolds is employed as a Senior Consultant with Clemans, Nelson and Associates, an Ohio based Management Consulting firm. He is a graduate of St. Edward High School in Lakewood, Ohio, and was awarded a Bachelor's Degree in Business Administration by Kent State University in 1972.

Kevin Reynolds is dedicated to the growth and enhancement of Hibernianism and looks forward to contributing his talent and experience to the AOH National Board.

dependence of the United States.

IMMIGRATION

Perhaps our greatest single effort continues to be in the area of immigration reform. Our last National Convention proposed certain principles, developed under the leadership of Tom Murray; these were introduced by Congressman Joseph DioGuardi of New York (with eleven co-sponsors). Immigration legislation had also been introduced by Congressman Brian Donnelly of Massachusetts. As part of a compromise worked out among Congressmen DioGuardi, Donnelly and Hamilton Fish, the House passed an immigration bill which was watered down by a House-Senate Conference Committee to give a one-shot, 10,000 visa lottery. It was something, but certainly not justice for the Irish.

Congressman DioGuardi has reintroduced the Hibernian immigration bill (H.R. 1683), and, as a consequence of a fact-finding trip to Ireland undertaken at the request of the AOH, has introduced (with Senator Al D'Amato of New York) additional legislation aimed at providing legislative relief to over 100,000 "out of status" young Irish people already out here. H.R. 4079/S. 2131 (suggested by Neil Blaney, T.D.) would allow employers and labor unions to sponsor people, by name, on renewable 5-year "Provisional Work Visas". H.R. 4080/S. 2133 would allow numbers of persons from countries disadvantaged by the 1965 legislation to qualify, under a point system identical to the Kennedy-Donnelly bill which has already passed the Senate, for "Redress" visas to partially compensate for the inequities of the immigration policies of the past twenty years. H.R. 4081/S. 2132 would permit limited numbers to earn permanent residence status in the United States through enlistment and three years honorable service in the Armed Forces of the United States, the Reserve components thereof and the Militias of the several States (e.g., the National Guard—including the 69th New York Infantry). All of this legislation was drafted with the assistance of an attorney from the Archdiocese of New York and enjoys the support of John Cardinal O'Connor. The military enlistment bill is also backed by Major General Lawrence Flynn, Military Chief of Staff to the Governor of the State of New York.

Congressman Joseph P. Kennedy of Massachusetts has introduced legislation explicitly aimed at providing relief for "out of status" Irish immigrants. Joe has also shown great interest in a number of other Irish issues and, like other Congressmen before him (e.g., Biaggi, Fish, Gilman, DioGuardi, Morrison, etc.) has traveled to Ireland to investigate the situation first hand.

The Kennedy-Donnelly immigration bill, while not increasing the number of immigrants to this country, provides for the creation of what can be thought of as a seventh preference through a point system which should benefit numbers of skilled or educated English-speakers. Since this should result in a net increase in legal immigration from Ireland it should be supported along with that legislation which has been introduced at the request of the AOH.

In one form or another the immigration issue has taken about two days a week of my time. This is one area in which I intend to remain active. In New York the AOH pioneered an immigrant assistance center which is still active in Saint Brendan's Parish in the Bronx. Hibernian organizations should be following this example across the country, particularly in established Hibernian halls. An aggressive effort must also be continued in recruiting, particularly in recruiting newly arrived immigrants. Immigrants must be assisted locally on an individual basis in addition to our efforts for legislative relief.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

When you come right down to it, the greatest part of our political efforts should be expended where we have the greatest potential for success and that is in the United States Congress. While Irish politicians in Ireland occasionally regard the American Irish as a natural constituency for some purposes, that does not extend to the point of giving the "postal more ballot" to Ireland's exiled children in America. United States Senators and Members of Congress can be held to account with regularity by all those among us who take the time to REGISTER AND VOTE. In 1988 we will elect a President and Vice President, a House of Representatives and one-third of the Senate. Let no Hibernian fail to be heard on election day and during the campaign.

Because Washington, D.C. must of necessity be the focus of most of our (always issue-oriented) political activity, we have established a Hibernian lobby in that city; in this work we are joined by the Irish American Unity Conference. This work, so well begun, must be strengthened; that will require the commitment of additional financial resources.

Our most effective efforts to further Freedom for All Ireland will continue to be fought in the halls of Congress. It will continue to be our task and duty to educate Congress, to educate them to the reality that Irish Freedom is in the interest of the United States and the North Atlantic community, particularly to educate them to the realization that Peace with Justice and Honor is possible only in a re-united sovereign Irish Republic, an Ireland which fulfills the bright dream of the Men of 1916.

Let us continue together, in Friendship, Unity and Christian Charity.

St. Louis Campaigns for 1990 AOH Convention

The year 1904 was an exciting one in St. Louis, Missouri. People came from throughout the world to attend the grandest World's Fair ever held. Athletes came from every country to take part in the Third Modern Olympic Games. And Hibernians from throughout the country convened in St. Louis for the AOH National Convention.

Again in 1990 St. Louis welcomed Hibernians as they gathered here in National Convention. While cheering our own John F. Kennedy as he brought his message of Hope and Freedom to the White House, the Ancient Order of Hibernians sent its message of Christian Charity to the world with the establishment of the Hibernian Charitable and Mission Fund.

Days of Excitement! Days of Accomplishment!

The Hibernians of St. Louis now look to 1990 to continue this St. Louis tradition of great Hibernian National Conventions. We need your help to make it happen.

St. Louis is ideally located near the population and geographic centers of the country. We have reserved an 850-room prestige hotel which will house virtually the entire convention under one roof. No late night walks to some satellite facility here. The hotel overlooks the Mississippi River, the beautiful grounds of the Gateway Arch and the oldest Catholic Cathedral west of the Mississippi. Literally hundreds of nearby activities and attractions make St. Louis the right 1990 choice for Hibernian conventioners and their families.

At the 1988 National Convention in Cleveland be sure to visit us in the St. Louis Hospitality Suite and be sure to Vote St. Louis for 1990.

Three Nat'l Presidents Get Together in St. Louis

ST. LOUIS, MO — On May 14, 1988 National President Nick Murphy and Past National Presidents Jack Keane and Jack Connolly got together in St. Louis to discuss old times and future developments. Jack Keane was National President from 1974-1978 and Jack Connolly was National President from 1980-1982.

President Murphy and Jack Connolly were in St. Louis on National Hibernian business and as members of the Site Review Committee in St. Louis to inspect the Clarion Hotel of St. Louis as a potential site for the 1990 AOH National Convention. Jack Keane is a resident of St. Louis and serves as Vice Mayor to the City of St. Louis.

In addition to President Murphy and Jack Connolly the Site Review Committee consisted of Committee Chairman Connie O'Sullivan, LAOH National Vice President Mary Bradley, and John Foody, AOH Chairman, Catholic Action. St. Louis Committee Chairman Tim Wiese, Vice Chairman Eileen Canty, Missouri State President Mike Kilker and Past Missouri State President Tony Conroy joined in the review of the hotel. After touring and reviewing the hotel's facilities, the entire group was treated to a delicious dinner in the Clarion's revolving rooftop restaurant.

The Hibernians of St. Louis were honored to have the opportunity to host such a distinguished group.

IRISH PRIDE IN SAN FRANCISCO

There are many fine Irish American cultural centers, AOH halls, and clubhouses around the country. Few can match the splendor and size of San Francisco's United Irish Cultural Center located at 2700 45th Avenue. Sponsored in membership by several Irish American societies — the AOH being the largest — the Cultural Center has flourished on a grand scale since it opened in 1974.

An Irish Cultural Center was an idea talked about over kitchen tables and Communion Breakfasts until Tim Brosnan, a builder, decided in 1971 that the American Irish of San Francisco needed a meeting place, and a center for preserving Irish heritage and history. Charter members paid $100 each for seed money and a down payment of $125,000 for the property purchase was eventually made. Today, thank God, it is debt free. The Center was built with no financial assistance from federal, state or local governments. There were no money grants. No handouts were sought. It was done with hard work and sacrifice, and with a sincere desire to honor those Irish people who had, in the past, helped to settle that part of America and who built a great city for all Americans of all ethnic backgrounds.

As many as 100 men volunteered on weekends and on their days off to build the Cultural Center facility. Every trade was represented, carpenters, electricians, roofers, tile setters, engineers, plumbers, and many more. Coffee, tea, donuts, and soda bread were brought to the site by the ladies — many also worked. Before long, the huge building took shape and opened in 1974. The San Francisco Irish can be proud of their great project and their self-sacrifice.

The contributions by the Irish have made San Francisco into a great city — since it was first settled. The seafarers, miners, soldiers, laborers, craftsmen, policemen, and professionals of Irish birth and parentage have continually invested and given their talents, muscle, and brains to the growth of this great city. They demonstrated, also, their devotion to their faith for all to see in the city first established by Franciscan Fathers of Spain, and later molded into its modern shape by the Irish.

The Center hosts Irish social, cultural, sporting, and traditional events. A first-class restaurant seating more than 350 looks down on an attractive bar and stage area. A huge hall provides for catered banquet affairs, and large scale Feis and dance competitions. A

The museum artifacts and photographs trace the history of San Francisco's Irish. Many fine meeting rooms serve the 32 Irish organizations making up the membership, now numbering 3000.

A visit to San Francisco would not be complete without a visit to this great Irish Center. President Jack Curtin and his associates extend their greetings and welcome to all.

welcomed the announcement by the British government of improved steps to insure nondiscrimination against minority workers in Northern Ireland. "Our legislation would require U.S. firms operating in Northern Ireland to comply with these standards as a condition of receiving U.S. tax benefits," said Donnelly. "It is a statement from the United States to United States firms that they cannot engage in behavior overseas that would be blatantly illegal here in our country. It is wrong for taxpayers to subsidize discriminatory behavior. Simply put, American firms that discriminate against Catholics in Northern Ireland will no longer receive the privileges of the U.S. tax benefits of the foreign tax credit and deferral."

The tax incentive envisioned by the legislation would allow U.S. firms to calculate the foreign tax credit allowed under U.S. law without regard to the foreign tax credit limitation. Thus, taxes paid to the British government with respect to manufacturing operations in Northern Ireland would be creditable in the United States immediately. Under present law, there is a limitation on the amount of foreign taxes that can be credited against U.S. tax liability.

"My intent is for this to be constructive legislation designed to encourage employment," said Donnelly. "I intend to work in the Committee on Ways and Means this year, with my colleagues who have joined me on this measure, to see this legislation adopted."

Summary of Proposed Legislation on Fair Employment Standards in Northern Ireland

(1) If a U.S. corporation located in a high unemployment area of Northern Ireland, and had a work force which reflected the community balance in Northern Ireland (i.e., at least 40% employment from religious minorities), the corporation would be entitled to calculate its foreign tax credit without regard to the foreign tax credit limitation.

(2) The bill would deny certain benefits to U.S. corporations doing business in Northern Ireland (that section of Ireland under British control) if they did not abide by certain fair employment standards. These standards are:

(a) Take steps to insure that no direct or indirect discrimination on religious or political grounds exists in employment.

(b) Actively practice equality of opportunity in employment.

(c) Take advantage of affirmative action programs designed to give under-represented groups better access to employment and training opportunities.

(3) Firms that did not abide by these fair employment standards would lose the foreign tax credit with respect to taxes paid to the United Kingdom on North Ireland-source income, as well as the benefits of deferral.

(4) A U.S. taxpayer would have to certify to the Secretary that they were abiding by the fair employment standards. Failure to report would subject the taxpayer to a $25,000 fine and/or one year in prison.

(5) The legislation would generally be effective for taxes paid or accrued, or income received or accrued, after December 31, 1988. Beginning on July 1, 1989, the Secretary would be required to determine which U.S. corporations were in violation of the fair employment standards.

FALLEN IRISH SOLDIERS REMEMBERED

Across the National Cemetery at Fredericksburg, Virginia taps echoed as the Ancient Order of Hibernians of Virginia and the 28th Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry joined to honor fallen Irish soldiers of the Battle of Fredericksburg. The battle of 125 years ago was one of the most bitter and bloody of the conflict.

As representatives of both sides yet of one vein of blood stood side by side Mark Elrod of the Bay Stater's contingent blew a heart wrenching taps. Captain Colin MacDonald of the 28th Regiment called the color guard to attention and all present bowed their heads in homage.

Virginia State President Ancient Order of Hibernians Jerry Gorman earlier in the day administered the oath of office to officers of the newly formed division, the General Thomas Meagher Division No. 1. Members of the Division joined in the memorial services as did the honor Guard of the Virginia State Board.

The annual event looks forward to entertaining other AOH Divisions in December this year. The new Division will make arrangements for any division. Start planning now.

CATHOLIC ACTION

James V. Lavery, chairman for Catholic Action of Summit County's Mark Heffernan Division, is announcing the organization of a new activist group. The purpose of the organization is securing just and equal treatment for students in Catholic and other non-public schools.

Contrary to political conception, the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution does not require the complete neglect of vast numbers of citizens because of their varied religious beliefs, Lavery says.

Lavery is organizing as the National Catholic Students Union, Parents and Friends, For Social Justice.

The first priority is the institution of a Federal tax voucher system.

IRISH TRIVIA

With permission, the following questions and answers from the book Irish Trivia are proposed for your enjoyment. (Answers on page 18).

1. Who was the "barefooted Babe Ruth" of Irish hurling?
2. What river runs through Derry City?
3. What are the nine counties of Ulster?
4. What are the dimensions of a hurling field?
5. What are the "Statutes of Kilkenny"?
6. What is the largest inland county in Ireland?
7. Who introduced the tricolor flag of Ireland in 1848?
8. Name the three Aran Islands, Co. Galway?
9. What does the white in the Irish Tricolor flag represent?
10. In what year was the Irish Constitution adopted?

James Gallagher

Benefits would be delivered directly to students for use at schools of their own choosing. World War II Veterans education programs (GI bill) is a well established precedent for the program, Lavery says.

A national movement with a chapter in each county in the U.S. is envisioned.

Lavery believes the program should be of special concern and priority for Catholic Action, and Political Education Committees of the AOH.

Anyone interested in the program should contact: James V. Lavery, National Catholic Students Union, 1770 Leighton Ave., Akron, OH 44314.

Bloody Ireland

A reporter chronicles her attempt to investigate killings in Northern Ireland — and describes the forces that conceal the secrets of a dirty war.

By JO THOMAS

(Jo Thomas worked at The New York Times for ten years — as a reporter, Miami bureau chief, assistant national editor, and foreign correspondent. She is now a visiting associate professor of journalism at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.)

It was one of those small Irish houses in County Armagh in which the only warmth comes from the hearth, and some of the men get up to leave, quickly and without comment, when a stranger enters the room. I was looking for information about the deaths of three young, unarmed members of the Irish Republican Army shot by undercover police. The initial police account of the circumstances in which they died had proved to be a tissue of lies, according to subsequent court testimony. But what really happened the night the three men died in a firestorm of bullets was still a mystery. None of the victims survived.

I was, at the time, a correspondent for The New York Times, a junior member of the London bureau, a journalist for eighteen years. Originally, the Times had hired me because I liked doing investigations. As a reporter and later as an editor, I had seen a lot of them through. "I won't stop," I assured the family of one of the victims, "until I get to the bottom of this." I don't think they believed me. Another person had visited them recently, they said, an amazing policeman from England. In Northern Ireland one is more likely to see an elephant on roller skates than a policeman making a polite call at the home of an I.R.A. man, dead or otherwise. But this policeman, they said, had explained that he had orders to re-investigate the Armagh shootings, and he intended to be thorough. He was Detective Chief Superintendent John Thorburn, of the Greater Manchester Police, second in command to Deputy Chief Constable John Stalker, an expert and impartial investigator looking into six controversial shootings in Northern Ireland. The family of the dead man wished them well but didn't think their chances were much better than mine.

As it turned out, the family was right. As he has since told the story, Deputy Chief Constable Stalker was stonewalled by top police officials in Northern Ireland for months after the shooting. He was urged to apply for better jobs in England and Scotland. When it became clear that he would not leave, quit, or consent to a whitewash, he was pulled off the case, his integrity was called into question, and an investigation into his personal life was instituted. Although no wrongdoing was found, he was still off the case in Northern Ireland. His mistake, he has revealed, was to ask questions about the involvement of MI 5 (British domestic intelligence) and senior police officials in the killing of a teenage boy and the severe wounding of his companion. Early this year the British attorney general declared the whole matter closed, in spite of evidence that justice, in his words, had been perverted. He gave "national security" as the justification. Stalker, who has resigned from the police, has told his side of the story in a book titled Stalker, published in England in February. Viking Penguin will publish it this month under the title The Stalker Affair. His revelations, also serialized in the London Daily Express, caused such a sensation in Britain that people even began talking about movie rights.

What happened to me was quieter. A senior editor, who kept a home in London as well as New York and who had been enthusiastic about my initial dispatches from Belfast, began telling me to stay out of Northern Ireland. A high-ranking British official, who in the past has had close ties to the intelligence community in Northern Ireland, took me to lunch and suggested I drop my investigation in exchange for a lot of access to the secretary of state for Northern Ireland, the British official who administers the place, as well as an exclusive first look at the Anglo-Irish pact then being negotiated between London and Dublin. I refused. Several American colleagues in London suggested I leave the difficult investigations to the local press: if there really were a story, British and Irish reporters would be on top of it. In fact, they were not — but some of them began treating me as if I were a member of the I.R.A. Then, too, the mail at my house in London started to arrive opened. In Northern Ireland, I was refused all official records, even transcripts of inquests and trials that had been open to the public. "We are not obliged to open our investigative files to you," a police official replied when asked to explain why the police had misled a newspaper photographer who was permitted to take a picture shortly after an army shooting — one of the rare instances in which this was allowed. (The bullet-riddled car shown in the photo which the police said belonged to an innocent man caught in I.R.A.-Army crossfire, actually belonged to the army; in fact, according to witnesses and his family, the victim had been elsewhere. According to evidence released by the deputy state pathologist, two and a half years after the shooting, he had been killed by a shot in the back with a handgun.)

At the outset, in December 1984, I had wanted to learn how many times police and army undercover units had been involved in questionable shootings, and how these shootings had occurred. I picked 1982, the year of the Armagh killings, as a starting point. This is not when the shootings began — there had been some particularly infamous cases in earlier years — but I felt that two years was the longest time I might be able to depend on the accuracy of anyone's memory. And any new information about these cases would have to come from new witnesses and new evidence.

I had some success. I found some eyewitnesses and learned of physical evidence the police had overlooked. The first story appeared in the Times on April 12, 1985. From then on I had to bootleg the investigation during whatever time I had in Northern Ireland, which was relatively little. Then, in February 1986, I was abruptly ordered home. (In light of constant complaints that I had been paying too much attention to Northern Ireland, I suspected this was the cause, and one senior editor confirmed that this was so. The foreign editor and other senior Times editors, however, said that while my work was good it was not distinguished and they wanted to replace me with one of the finest writers on the paper.)

Before I left, I was able to finish a second story (March 17, 1986) about the shootings, this one about two army undercover killings, one of an unarmed Catholic youth with no ties to the I.R.A., the other of a Protestant businessman. After that, the shootings continued — indeed, the shooting of three unarmed I.R.A. guerrillas in British Gibraltar in March led to a virtual bloodbath afterward in Belfast — but no reporter has investigated them.

I've left the Times to teach journalism and to have more time to spend with my children, who are very young, but the silence about what is going on in Northern Ireland troubles me, and it should worry people who care about journalism as much as it troubles those who care about justice — or the lack of it — in that place.

"If a police force of the United Kingdom could, in cold blood, kill a seventeen-year-old youth with no terrorist or criminal convictions, and then plot to hide the evidence from a senior policeman deputed to investigate it, then the shame belonged to us all," Stalker writes. "This is the act of a Central American assassination squad — truly of a police force out of control."

Stalker looked into six cases. But, by my count, between 1982 and 1987 there were at least forty-seven suspicious shootings by police or army undercover units. At least twenty-one of the victims, according to police statements or court records, were unarmed. On the basis of the available evidence, it's doubtful that those who were carrying weapons were given any opportunity to surrender before they were killed or — in the cases of three who lived — seriously wounded. How, in a place where the security forces are as tightly controlled as they are in Northern Ireland, did this happen? And why isn't this news? I can't answer either question, but I can tell you a little about the way American reporters cover the place, which, for a lot of reasons, is not very well.

It is the misfortune of Northern Ireland to be covered from London, that most beguiling of cities. Like many Americans, I was an enthusiastic anglophile when I went there, and I loved the place. Publisher A. O. Sulzberger invited me to a lunch at the Savoy the day I arrived. It was easy to feel important. It was also easy to feel well-informed. American journalists get a weekly confidential briefing at No. 10 Downing Street and another at the Foreign Office. They are also invited to dinner at the best places and to the best parties. There are hierarchies of lists. No one understands hierarchies better than the British, and they are careful to make close friendships with members of important American news organizations. It makes us reluctant to offend, especially to bring up the touchy subject of a war, in Northern Ireland.

Because of the way assignments in London are generally structured, with large territories to cover — some in the Middle East — American journalists cover in short trips sandwiched between other assignments, if they go there from London, with no on-the-ground reporting, even though Belfast is just an hour away by air shuttle. When reporters do go, they are predictably swung through what is thought to as "bandit country," along the border

Sometimes the press officers in the Northern Ireland Office, the administrative outpost of the British government, will do something as blatant as arranging a visiting correspondence this when I was there — but most of the time they do something more subtle and even more effective; they set the terms in which the situation is discussed, which is usually and counterterrorism, or religious sectarian battles in which both sides are inaccurately portrayed as equally bigoted, equally powerful, and equally unreasonable. Until recently, a British government has tried to portray itself as the principal peacekeeper between the "hard men" on both sides. November 1985 of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, the Dublin government has been given a symbolic role as the advocate for the Catholics in Northern Ireland, although the Irish government has no legal or actual power there and wants nothing to do with the large minority of those Catholics who support Sinn Féin, the po-

If you see Northern Ireland in these terms, as a cauldron of violence, religious bigotry, and terrorism — and it seems to — then it makes sense to rely on Irish officials in trying to grasp the situation. The British and Irish know the place, and they are "reasonable" — and their elected representatives — are "bigots" or "terrorists," to use the terms of the "peace" movement. If you see Northern Ireland as a place where the "peace" movement is the only force, as I've seen and heard it described, it's also a place where "peace" is a word that is written about "peacekeepers," as America even if these well-meaning souls have no right of the terrible wrongs which are being done. To see Northern Ireland this way, and suffering of many of its people. Almost everyone in Northern Ireland, what price they're willing to pay to maintain the status quo, in a state set up to maintain the status quo, as they put it, "to live on the edge." Protestants, on the other hand, status quo would strip them of their identity. They would rather fight. The "peace" movement, on both sides, deeply

In trying to describe a foreign political landscape, language is everything. Just as our command of our ability to think, the way we name things in Northern Ireland profoundly influences readers — feel about them. We can talk of assumptions without even realizing it.

Take, as a revealing example, the nearly universal use in the American press of the word "Ulster" as a synonym for "Northern Ireland." Both terms are controversial. Ulster is used in Ireland only by the British and by the Protestant unionists, who want to maintain their union with the Crown. The British should get out of Ireland, would prefer the use of "the six counties" or "the North of Ireland." For them, it is anathema to Ireland. Historically, as they point out, Ulster was one of the four provinces of Ireland and included nine counties. The British carved Northern Ireland out of six of them. When nationalists use "Ulster," they mean the historic province still claimed by the Irish Republic as part of its national territory. I'm not suggesting that reporters should start using "Ulster" — that term always means the I.R.A. does — but to call the place "Ulster" is to be profoundly unaware of the Catholic minority, some 610,000 people, because their country was partitioned in 1920 to ensure a perpetual upper hand for the Protestants, who are the North and would be a permanent minority of about 4 million Catholics. (I use "Northern Ireland" because that is the official name of the six-county political entity.)

The major antagonist of the British government in Northern Ireland is the I.R.A. The government defines the I.R.A. as a "terrorist" rather than a guerrilla organization, even though it is one of the oldest insurgencies in the world and, in an earlier incarnation but using the same methods, fought the British and won independence for the Republic of Ireland. It is now a crime, punishable by imprisonment, to be a member of the I.R.A., so journalists are accurate in referring to the "outlawed I.R.A." This makes it sound like a bunch of criminals, constrained to refer to "the outlawed New People's Army" in the Philippines. I see it as an example of the British genius for public relations.

The terms in which the conflict is described are of supreme importance to the British government. It has declared the problem to be a "criminal," not a "political," one. That was the significance of the hunger strikes in 1981, in which ten prisoners, including Bobby Sands, died in an effort to retain the special status which had been accorded — and subsequently denied to — political prisoners. If the problem is a criminal one, it can be solved by the criminal justice system, such as it is — by the police, by courts without juries, by allowing the uncorroborated evidence of paid informers, by long and, in some cases, indeterminate prison sentences — and also by a massive public relations campaign, such as a recent one on television, to strip the I.R.A. of the popular support it has to have in order to survive. Language is an essential ingredient of the government's "criminalization" policy.

If the I.R.A., whose members are Catholic, kills a soldier or a policeman who happens to be Protestant — and most of them are, because, under the government's policy of "Ulsterization," English troops have been replaced, where possible, with local hires — the shooting will be described not as an act of guerrilla warfare but as a "murder," usually as a "sectarian murder," as if it were no different in character from the random killings committed in Catholic neighborhoods by Protestant paramilitaries.

Nowhere is the obfuscation of the true nature of the conflict in Northern Ireland more evident than in stories filed from places where much of the fighting is going on — rural areas near the border with the Irish Republic. Typical is a story frequently filed by American reporters, in one version or another, that the I.R.A. is involved in a campaign of "genocide" against Protestant farmers, especially men who are the only sons in their families, in an effort to drive them off their land. One problem with these stories is that they rarely mention how many of the victims were members, or thought to be members, of the security forces in Northern Ireland. The police and army include many part-time members who also farm. At this writing, the I.R.A. has killed more than 800 police and soldiers, including Catholics, since 1969. The I.R.A. contends that its members are fighting a war; the British say they are simply murderers. If they are also engaged in a massive private land-grab, some results — some change of land ownership — would eventually show up. I have yet to see any documentation of this. And since many, if not most, Protestant farmers would never sell their land to a Catholic, let alone a known supporter of the I.R.A., I have my doubts that the motive behind the killings is related to an attempt to take over border-area farms. Meanwhile, purveyors of the "genocide" theory don't bother to mention that nationalists who live near the border have been killed or burned out by Protestant paramilitaries, simply for being Catholic. There are some lovely country roads along the border in County Tyrone on which Catholics I know are afraid to drive day or night.

I am not saying that journalists should never use the word "murder," but I think they should be aware of its political implications. "Genocide," I think is simply a distortion.

In the battle for hearts and minds, the I.R.A., which has no press operation, and Sinn Féin, which has a clumsy one, are often portrayed by government officials as waiting for or gloating over a "propaganda victory" when the government is caught in a wrongdoing, such as a police or army shooting of a civilian. So great is the concern over this "propaganda," this possible assist to terrorism, that the wrongdoing itself — how and why it happened and who will have to answer for it — tends to get lost in the shuffle. The British government, which has an adroit press operation with many resources, is never portrayed as caring about propaganda at all.

I didn't know any of this when I first went to Belfast, and I confess that, if I could have avoided going there at all, I would have. Like many Americans who are not of Irish ancestry, I knew only what I had read about Northern Ireland in newspapers or had seen on TV. At a distance it seemed to be a tiresome and confusing place, an old battleground that was not a good candidate for page one. But as the number two person in the bureau, I had it as part of my beat. I managed to delay going there for one good reason or another, for more than two months after I arrived in London. When I was finally ordered to go, a police shooting was the cause.

Martin Galvin, a leader of Irish Northern Aid, an American group that sides with the I.R.A., had, in defiance of a British government ban, appeared to speak at a rally in Belfast. Police moved in to arrest him, firing plastic bullets into a crowd of men, women, and children who had complied with an earlier speaker's request to sit on the ground. The supposedly nonlethal bullets killed a man in full view of the TV cameras. I was sent to Belfast the next day.

A march to protest the shooting was announced, declared illegal, and held anyway. It was peaceful, but, in the rush to get back to file, I was forgotten by the television crew with whom I, not knowing West Belfast, had been advised to hitch a ride. There was nothing to do but walk back. The cameras had gone, the march crowd had evaporated, and things started to get rough. I found my way blocked by a flaming street barricade. Feeling ridiculous in my suit and high heels, I realized I was caught between a throng of children throwing rocks and a fleet of armored police vehicles rapidly bearing down on the children. A man came from behind a building and pulled me out of the way — the children knew how and when to scatter — and the conversations I had afterwards with the people in the street left me angry and depressed.

The letter noted that Sen. Lautenberg has "heard serious charges that the money from the fund is not going to areas of greatest need, and is not being used according to principles of non-discrimination." "Despite the fact that West Belfast has an extraordinarily high unemployment rate, and is an area which has borne the brunt of the North's two decades of violence and

Euro-Parliament Calls For A Reopening of 'Shoot-to-Kill'

By 102 votes to 51 the European Parliament last month called on the British Government to re-examine its decision not to prosecute RUC (Northern Ireland Police) officers responsible for the unlawful killing in Northern Ireland under an alleged shoot-to-kill policy.

The resolution, tabled by all political groupings in the Parliament apart from the British Conservatives, will be sent to the British and Irish Governments as well as all other member countries.

Two of the abstentions were by Tory members, Lord Bethel and Andrew Pearce, who could not go along with their group's decision to vote against the resolution.

The Rev. Ian Paisley voted against. The Parliament expressed its "grave disquiet" at the British Attorney General's decision for the rule of law. It called on the British Government "to re-examine this decision with a view to undoing the grave damage which has been done."

The Parliament's agreement to bring forward the debate and the large majority in favor of the resolution brings new pressure on the British Government to reconsider its decision.

Throughout the one-hour debate, speech after speech emphasized that the rule of law must be upheld and confidence re-established by prosecuting those alleged to have perverted the course of justice. Paddy Lalor, speaking for Fianna Fail, called on the British authorities to act immediately "if confidence in the administration in Northern Ireland is not to be irreparably damaged."

He said the "unfortunate and misguided" decision of the British Attorney General "has caused a severe setback to Anglo-Irish relations," and contravened both the letter and spirit of the Anglo-Irish Accord.

Joe McCartin for Fine Gael, questioned how any government could pursue an effective policy of extradition "if there are strong grounds in the public mind for believing that the member States receiving suspects are not prepared to prosecute their own police when murder has been committed, not to mention the many cases of brutality which have already been documented."

The Stalker affair, he said, threatened "the very foundation of the British democratic system and put at risk political stability on all the island of Ireland." McCartin added that although he could sympathize with the RUC, people had to be sure that it did not contain "within it" elements or individuals whose actions have put them on a level with terrorists themselves.

Allegations of Misuse Of Irish Fund Surfacing

WASHINGTON — U.S. Senator Frank R. Lautenberg (D-NJ) states that he is deeply concerned about complaints over the management and fairness of the International Fund for Ireland, and said he will raise the matter before administration officials during upcoming Senate hearings.

In a letter to Sir Anthony Acland, British Ambassador to the United States, Sen. Lautenberg said he heard strong criticism on how the fund is working, particularly in the Catholic minority areas of Northern Ireland.

The Senator visited Northern Ireland accompanied by New Jersey Irish Americans.

Sen. Lautenberg raised concerns over the administration of the fund during a meeting with the Ambassador. The fund was established by the United Kingdom and Ireland in 1986 to spur economic growth and reconciliation under the Anglo-Irish Agreement. In 1986, Congress authorized $120 million over three years for the fund.

The letter noted that Sen. Lautenberg has "heard serious charges that the money from the fund is not going to areas of greatest need, and is not being used according to principles of non-discrimination."

"Despite the fact that West Belfast has an extraordinarily high unemployment rate, and is an area which has borne the brunt of the North's two decades of violence and turbulence, less than one percent of the sums approved by Congress for the fund, or $1.2 million, has been allocated to projects in the nationalist part of West Belfast."

Sen. Lautenberg cited other criticisms of the fund, and also indicated he will be bringing these up shortly with Charles Brett, chairman of the board of the fund, who will soon be visiting the United States. "I will be asking for proof, not promises, that the fund is being appropriately used," the Senator wrote.

Sen. Lautenberg said, as a member of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, he will probe officials of the state department's Agency for International Development for "detailed answers" to the allegations. The hearings are scheduled in April and June.

Sen. Lautenberg said some individuals he spoke to in West Belfast said the applications for funding business enterprises were dismissed without a member of the fund's board or any other representative visiting the project.

"... This contrasted with the review procedure adopted in the case of other projects whose representatives made no application until they were approached by officials and asked to do so," he wrote.

"According to these critics, the difference in attitude and treatment followed the lines of political and religious affiliation."

Irish-British Relations Spiral Downward

By WILLIAM PFAFF

LONDON — Anglo-Irish relations are now at their worst since the 1985 agreement between the two countries that acknowledged Dublin's legitimate interest in Northern Ireland's affairs. The reason relations are so bad has to do with a hardened view of security matters in the Thatcher government.

The immediate problem follows a decision by that government not to prosecute senior police officers said to have been responsible for a 1982 "shoot to kill" policy that produced six deaths as well as intrusions over the border into the republic. Five of those killed were Irish Republican Army men or members of the rival Irish National Liberation Army, but all were unarmed when they were shot.

Deadline for next issue
July 18, 1988

The affair was investigated by an English senior police officer, but he ran into obstruction and cover-up in Belfast, was pulled off the case and forced into premature retirement.

The Irish negotiators of the 1985 agreement believe they were given assurances that there would be prosecutions in the affair. Yet, on Jan. 25, Britain's attorney general told the House of Commons that "national security considerations" precluded action and that the matter would be dropped.

Adding to Irish feeling, three days after the attorney general's statement, a trial appeal failed in England in the case of six Irishmen convicted in 1979 for an IRA pub bombing in Birmingham that killed 21 people. The six were widely believed in Ireland to be innocent and to have been convicted with rigged police evidence.

Last week, the Thatcher government also announced that a special trial system would be continued in Northern Ireland, in which terrorist cases are decided by a single judge sitting without jury.

The Irish government's reaction to all this has nonetheless been measured, and Prime Minister Charles Haughey says that cooperation will continue, but it is plain that the Irish no longer have the faith in cooperation that existed before.

The Thatcher government seems unmoved, possibly because the British simply do not see how the situation in Northern Ireland can really be improved other than by security measures that cause the IRA and the nationalists, and the unionists and their extremists, eventually to wear themselves out.

Policing Ulster with the British army is a nuisance but a tolerable one. The IRAs support in the republic has fallen. People are sick of meaningless atrocities like the Enniskillen bombing last November. New political initiatives from London would stir up the militant unionists, who have considerable sympathy on the backbenches of the Conservative Party.

This nonetheless is an insensitive as well as unimaginative policy. Governments are elected to settle problems. Thatcher's government seems simply to have decided that Northern Ireland is a security problem and only a security problem.

Along with this decision, there is a new, controversial conception of security in London, and a drive to control security information, to enjoin newspapers and broadcasters from reporting certain security affairs and to silence present and past security officers.

The government has made the novel claim that threats to security may extend beyond spying and terrorism to include acts of political opposition to defense and foreign policies. It also claims that the powers of the security services derive not only from statute but from the Royal Prerogative, the ancient and theoretically unlimited rights of the Crown in defending the realm.

These claims constitute a challenging assertion of executive power, with implications much beyond the Irish problem, obviously. While Ulster is certainly a security problem, it is essentially a political problem. Basic to the political problem of Ulster is the conviction, now reinforced, of the Catholic Irish there that however national security may be defined in London, there still is neither security nor equity for them.

U.S. Aid Reviewed

U.S. Rep. Mario Biaggi (D-NY), has been provided with a detailed report on the distribution of monies from the International Fund for Ireland, including $85 million in first time U.S. economic aid which has already been obligated.

Biaggi, as Chairman of the bipartisan Ad Hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, had requested the report following charges from Father Desmond Wilson, of Northern Ireland, that funds were being spent in a way that was not benefitting both communities as prescribed by U.S. law. The report provided to Biaggi came from the Agency for International Development (AID).

Among the items in the report:

- The required Presidential Certification to release the final $35 million in U.S. funds is expected in the early summer. This certification expresses the President's views that the U.S. aid is being spent to benefit both communities and to promote human rights. This certification is required annually and without it, the U.S. funds cannot be sent. The previous year's certification was provided in March of 1987.

- Once the President certifies the release of the final $35 million, according to AID, "this will complete the U.S. government's commitment." Biaggi noted that the President's budget proposal does not provide for funding beyond this fiscal year.

- AID indicates that on the basis of observations by their staff and the United States representative on the International Fund, William Fine, that the board "takes seriously the charge to promote equality and non-discrimination in determining project selection."

- AID indicates that the Board "is looking to increase financing activities in the high unemployment and depressed target areas, for example, the fund is devising a strategy for use of fund resources in particularly disadvantaged areas such as West Belfast."

Biaggi also said that the AID report includes a listing of all so called "priority" projects to be funded by the International Fund. AID also indicated that the Chairman of the International Fund, Mr. Charles Brett, would be visiting the United States during April. Biaggi said every effort would be made to schedule a meeting between Mr. Brett and interested members of the Ad Hoc Committee.

Victims' Relatives Seek End To Use of Plastic Bullets

By LIZ O'CONNOR

(From Long Island Catholic)

Hempstead — A "plastic bullet" sounds like something harmless to be shot from a toy gun.

But two women who visited The Long Island Catholic last week as representatives of a group called the "United Campaign Against Plastic Bullets" know better.

Brenda Downes' husband John and Eileen Kelly's 12-year-old daughter, Carol Anne, were killed by plastic bullets fired in their home city, Belfast, Northern Ireland, by security forces.

The women and other members of their group, which is made up of people who are relatives of people killed or maimed by plastic bullets, were traveling in the U.S. as part of an attempt to arouse international public opinion against the use of the weapons by British forces.

"Mrs. Thatcher controls the media" in Britain, Mrs. Kelly alleged referring to the British prime minister, and so, she said, it is difficult to tell the world about what is happening to the ordinary people of Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Kelly was watching from a window the evening of May 19, 1981, when her daughter, returning from a local shop where her mother had sent her for a pint of milk, was shot at a range of 20 yards by a plastic bullet fired by a passing British Army patrol. She died May 22 from the resulting head wounds.

Mrs. Kelly says there was no one else on the street in their Twinbrook neighborhood of Belfast at the time of the shooting but her daughter and two other local children. Mrs. Kelly claims the soldiers were angered by the killing that day of five British soldiers in South Armagh and had been shouting at the neighborhood that they were going to "get" someone in revenge.

Mrs. Downes said her husband was taking part in a peaceful demonstration in August, 1984, against the British policy of internment of residents of Northern Ireland without trial. A large number of the RUC (Royal Ulster Constabulary, the police force) came to violently disperse the demonstration. Mr. Downes, 22, was shot with a plastic bullet at point-blank range and died. Mrs. Downes says that only because the shooting was filmed by news media did his case come to trial.

The security forces, the women said, say that their guns were faulty or their hands were jerked at the moment of firing as an explanation of why the "minimum force" plastic bullets kill and maim people. But the day John Downes was shot, his widow says, "the hospital was packed . . . they were packing ambulances full of children."

Both Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Downes speak bitterly about the way they were treated by the court system. They see no difference between the British soldiers and the RUC. "They cover up for one another," Mrs. Kelly said, and their lies are "accepted as evidence."

"Nobody has ever had justice," Mrs. Downes said, although some victims' families have received monetary compensation. "We're not allowed to take part in the judicial system."

At the inquest on her husband's death, she said, "The whole thing was in their favor." Only police witnesses were called, and "they had a whole year to prepare their statements," which they were allowed to read and on which they were not cross-examined.

"They know that they'll not be brought up for any crime," Mrs. Downes said. "They have a license to kill."

Mrs. Kelly has a letter she received from Mrs. Thatcher in response to one she sent the prime minister with a picture of Carol Anne. In it Mrs. Thatcher urges her to cooperate with the police, saying "it is surely in everyone's interests that all the evidence should be brought out."

But Mrs. Kelly says, "No policeman ever came to my door." Instead, she says, during demonstrations which followed her daughter's shooting, "they came up and they shot plastic bullets through my windows and my doors," and potential witnesses were told they'd be charged with "riotous behavior."

The women have obviously not forgiven Mrs. Thatcher for refusing to yield to hunger strikers' demands in 1981. "She let those hunger strikers die," Mrs. Kelly says. "What kind of a woman is she? She has a son herself . . ."

When Mr. Downes died in 1984 he was the 15th person to die in Northern Ireland of wounds from plastic or rubber bullets. Four of those were children 12 or younger; four others were teenagers.

Mrs. Downes and Mrs. Kelly say that only in what they call the "police states" of Chile, South Africa, and Northern Ireland are plastic bullets used against civilians. Other countries have deemed them too dangerous.

The United Campaign Against Plastic Bullets is non-sectarian, including both Catholics and Protestants, and the women say it is non-political.

But they themselves are convinced there will be no peace in the north of Ireland until British troops are withdrawn. They're not security forces in any conventional sense, Mrs. Downes said; Catholics are not secure in their homes or streets as a result of their presence. "They're there as a weapon of repression," to keep Catholics off the street.

She tells of picking her daughter, aged five, up at school, and seeing at a distance RUC officers arresting someone. Her daughter clung to her, saying, she says, "Are they going to shoot him? Are they going to shoot him?" She's terrified, terrified of the RUC.

"Our children live in fear."

Stalker: I wish I knew the answer. The best I can say is what's not the answer. It's already been acknowledged that there can be no military solution. I'm sure there's got to be a political solution.

When I asked Stalker why two senior officers like Sampson and Anderson would participate in a conspiracy to discredit him, he stated, "I have known honorable men in similar positions who ordinarily would not accept a free cup of coffee — however, if the possibility of a Knighthood was dangled under their noses, they would kill for it." There seems to be no aspect of British officialdom that has not been corrupted by the war in North East Ireland.

MRS. EILEEN KELLY (left) and Mrs. Brenda Downes (center) spoke with Patricia Murphy (right), Nassau Co. Comptroller Peter King's press secretary, during an interview at the Long Island Catholic newspaper. The two women were in New York, Boston and Philadelphia speaking out against the British policy of using plastic bullets. Mrs. Kelly is the mother of Carol Anne Kelly, the 12-year-old child killed with a plastic bullet by a British soldier in May of 1981. Mrs. Downes is the widow of John Downes, who was shot and killed with a plastic bullet fired by the British police during the Internment Day demonstration at Connolly House in August 1984.

Long Island Feis August 7, 1988

The 20th Long Island Feis will be held on the spacious grounds of St. Joseph's Academy in Brentwood on Sunday, August 7, 1988. Sponsored by Divisions 8 and 9 of the Suffolk County AOH, the Feis features competitions in singing, dancing, language, art and music at all levels from individual performers to the spectacle of massed bagpipe bands.

Each year this remarkable event has grown, and has drawn more and more competitors and spectators from local Suffolk County communities, from nearby states, and from as far away as Canada. Last year over 1,000 competitors, and thousands of spectators were accommodated.

The history of the Feis goes back many centuries in Ireland. In the Famous Book of the Four Masters is recorded the great Feis called by the then High King of Ireland, Rory O'Connor — it was in 1169 AD. It is interesting to note that the line of chariots carrying the king, nobility, and chieftains to the Feis stretched for a distance of six miles.

Although the Long Island Feis only goes back 20 years, many are attracted to its entertainment each year. The grounds at St. Joseph's afford more than ample space for the competitions, games, and entertainment for the spectators who are expected. Free parking is being offered and an entrance fee of $3.00 per adult is charged. Children are admitted free.

For further information or syllabus and entry cards, write to Long Island Feis, P.O. Box 53, Centerreach, NY 11720.

The National Organizer's Corner

The summer season is here again; it's the time for festivals, feis, field days and picnics. It is also a time to extend a cead mile faile to friends and neighbors and invite them to your summer outing. That will give you an opportunity to tell them about the AOH. Explain to them that we have over 150 years of continuous service to God, country, family, and our ancestral homeland. Explain to them how we have preserved the traditions, the culture, and heritage of the Irish people here in the new world. Tell them how proud we are to be Irish Americans who love this great country of ours, with all its virtues and faults. Explain to them that being a member of the AOH puts you in an organization which has great influence and prestige; that the Order today is accepted as the voice of the Irish race giving the date and how long you want it. I am sure if the demand was great enough we could have one or two more displays made to circulate among members.

If you are division, county or state organizer, you should have an organizer's kit readily available. This kit contains a full supply of AOH reporting forms, membership applications, and other information necessary for the performance of your duties, namely the recruitment of new members and the organizing of new divisions. If you need anything to help you do your job better, please do not hesitate to call on me, and if you have any good ideas about recruiting, why not share them with me. In that way I can pass the suggestions on to other organizers. Working together and sharing ideas we can be successful.

in America, speaking out against violations of human and civil rights all over the world and especially in the occupied part of Ireland.

We have a plastic trifold display which can be used as a backdrop for your membership recruitment booth. This display is very attractive and explains in a few words what the Hibernians are all about. You can have it for your next event, if it is not already booked, by writing to me.

For those of you going to the National Convention, I hope to meet you there and don't forget to sign up for the organization committee meetings. We need all the input we can get. I will have the display set up at the convention; stop by and look it over. For the rest of you, have a nice safe summer and keep signing up new members. May the good Lord take a liking to you, but not too soon. God bless all.

Director Plugs MacBride Bill In Florida

The MacBride Principles campaign in Florida has made great progress and is advancing in both the House and Senate. National Director Tom Gilligan attributes this success to several factors.

A coalition of interested groups was formed and a network across the state has been established. This has filled in many voids, reports Gilligan. Tom, a member of CWA, traveled to the Florida state convention and lobbied this union for support and was successful in getting a resolution passed supporting the MacBride principles. With this support Tom traveled to Jacksonville, and with the aid of the powerful IBEW union was able to obtain the endorsement of the Florida AFL/CIO, and have this legislation placed on this labor organization's "must pass" bills. To quote Tom, "This was one of the best and most important things we did. It has opened many closed doors."

The bill has passed through several Senate and House committees with very favorable votes, and has met the usual opposition from the British Government. An official from the British Consulate in Atlanta was in Tallahassee and while there testified before a committee. What he did not know going into the room was that on this day, every major trade union in Florida had representatives in Tallahassee, and most of these were in the room to testify on behalf of the bill! Needless to say the bill passed through that committee. Last seen, the British official called a press conference and was very upset at the result of the vote. He remarked that this would be the last committee that would pass on the bill favorably, vowing to put more pressure on the legislature of Florida and hiring a full time lobbyist to work against the bill.

In a surprise development, the Florida Catholic Conference of Bishops endorsed the MacBride Principles and conveyed this to the entire legislative body in Florida. National Director Tom Gilligan has been working on this endorsement for several years. Gilligan reports, "I just would not give up, and at every opportunity I moved to get an endorsement." Using the remarks of Cardinal O'Connor, Gilligan drafted a letter once again requesting support, and this time had many of the Irish organizations sign it. "Our letter made sense to them, and they finally realized that we were not going to go away. Why it took so long for the Catholic leaders of Florida to speak out is beyond me, but they have spoken loudly and that's all that counts."

As of this writing the bill had only a few committees to go through before reaching the floor for a full vote. Gilligan reports that support continues to grow. Most recently the coalition obtained the services of a full time lobbyist to work the bill for them, at no cost.

Maryland MacBride Bill

OLIVER KEARNEY from Antrim, N. Ireland, left, meets workers for passage of the MacBride Principles bill in the Maryland legislature. Next to him is Sister Annella Martin, Ladies AOH and state coordinator for the MacBride campaign; Representative Ann Marie Doory, a first term House member who waged a spirited campaign for passage; Jack Callahan, Division 3 and Joe Roche, chairman, AOH Political Education Committee.

Minnesota 7th State To Pass MacBride Bill

On April 28 Minnesota became the seventh state in the U.S. to pass MacBride legislation and the first in the Midwest. The bill received final passage on April 20 in both houses, by a vote of 110-9 in the House of Representatives and 37-28 in the Senate. The bill's sponsors were Senator Jerome Hughes, (DFL), and Representative Rich O'Connor, (DFL). Governor Rudy Perpich signed the bill on April 28.

The British government were determined to stop this legislation in Minnesota because the state does not have a large Irish population. A total of eight witnesses testified in opposition to the bill before legislative committees, all but one from Northern Ireland. They included Bob Cooper, head of the Fair Employment Agency of Northern Ireland, John Cushman, former head of the Alliance Party in Northern Ireland, Howard Burns, a union representative, Sister Genevieve, a Catholic nun and principal of a large Catholic girls' school in Belfast, and C. Patrick Quinlan, a retired U.S. State Department official and local resident.

Testifying in favor of the MacBride principles were Joe Roche, past national president of the AOH

STATE NEWS: Florida

Since starting this Florida column, I have received several letters from Hibernians planning to relocate in Florida. As an example, a recent one from Brother Ken Clinton, past president of AOH Division 1, Passaic Co., N.J., requests information about job opportunities and adequate schools. In Brevard County I described the opportunities provided by NASA and the space program and its supportive corporations, and that the school system is one of the best in the state. Ken would like to hear from the presidents of the various divisions in Florida about the opportunities in their regions, helping him to make decisions. Please write to Ken Clinton, 17 Sweetman Lane, West Milford, NJ 07480.

Brevard County. At its May meeting the following members were elected county officers for 88-89: President Robert J. Carroll, Vice President Arthur Billingham, Recording Secretary Ernest Kees, Financial Secretary Edward P. Reilly, Treasurer Matthew J. Manix, Chairman of Standing Committee Thomas L. Donnelly, Marshal Richard J. Girard, Chaplain Father Val Sheedy and Jr. Past Vice President Robert F. J. Schneider.

Members of Division 1 who received the Shamrock Degree at the meeting were Thomas Schneider, William J. Warren, Jr., Salvatore Vitale, Stephen I. Ryan and Jeremiah J. O'Shea.

Installation team, all from Brevard Division 2, consisted of State President Jack Boyle, State Vice President John Cullinan, State Director William Ryan, County Vice President Arthur Billingham and Jerry Costlow.

Brevard County Division 1. Because of the resignation and relocation of Division President Art Lynch to Chicago, State Secretary and Brevard County President Bob Schneider has assumed the presidency of the division. State Editor Nick Schneider will serve as vice president.

Brevard County Division 2. At a recent communion breakfast, President Bob Carroll's division was pleased to have the following dignitaries in attendance: Florida State President Jack Boyle, Mayor of Malabar Gene Callaghy, former Mayor of Palm Bay Hal Bryant, Mayor and Vice Mayor of Melbourne respectively, Joseph Mullin and John Buckley.

Broward County Division 1. Because of conflicting activities and commitments of the divisions throughout the State, President Martin McAndrew advises that the planned AOH State Family "Gathering" has been temporarily been placed on "hold."

In addition to what has been reported above, I would like to focus on "what has not been reported." Obviously there is a lot going on in all the divisions that should be shared with brothers all over the land, and I again urge division presidents to apprise me of their activities — whether or not you may consider them newsworthy. Let me be the judge. I further request to be placed on your mailing lists to receive any newsletters you may send out as a way of sharing items with me for this column.

A detailed report of the State Board of officers and family social will appear in the next column. Meanwhile, please write to Brother Clinton. Before you know it, we'll have enough Irish from the north down here to have our own N.Y. City Fifth Avenue Paddy's Parade!!!

O'Connor, president emeritus, Emerald Isle Division, AOH. Among the guests were Monsignor Joseph R. Dooley and Bishop Raymond J. Merchandise certificate from an exclusive boutique, the Celtic Fair, Ltd., Alexandria, VA; loaves of Irish bread and silk flower decorations on each table were all offered as door prizes. The newly installed Bishop Raymond J. Boland, formerly the chancellor of the Washington Archdiocese was the guest speaker. McNulty, chancellor of Duquesne University, Pittsburgh. With him, from left, are County President Mary Margaret Maurath, County Treasurer Sarah Mains, County Chaplain Sr. Sarah Marie Healy, R.M., and State President Margaret A. Cooney.

The State of Pennsylvania is saddened by the loss of two ladies who exemplified and promoted Hibernianism as their life's work, Mae O'Grady, past state president from Allegheny County and Catherine Kearney, past state historian from Lackawanna County. Many accomplishments and advancement of Hibernianism were attributed to their dedicated service. Until 1984, both attended the National Conventions.

The State Board pre-convention meeting was held on May 22 in Camp Hill, State President Margaret Cooney presiding.

Allegheny County Spring meeting was conducted by President Mary Margaret Maurath on March 30 at the Homestead AOH Hall, hosted by Division 13. Division President Theresa Vernon and the members outdid themselves with hospitality and delicious food.

Division 11, Pittsburgh, held a memorial Mass for Mae O'Grady at the Chapel of St. Agnes Church. Celebrant was Rev. Roonan J. Deegan, T.O.R., state chaplain. Mary Kennedy coordinated the special service at which State President Margaret Cooney gave the eulogy. The members of Division 21, Castle Shannon, under the direction of Virginia Brubach, historian, are embroidering quilted wall hangings, depicting Irish symbols as part of a fall fund raiser.

Division 2, Freeland, held their Mass honoring St. Brigid on April 17 in St. Anne's Church. The celebrant was Father Peter Carr, O.F.M. and the children of the members presented the special gifts.

Breakfast at the Elks Club followed. Joining in the event were members of Division 1, Wilkes Barre.

Mrs. Kathryn D. Back, president of District Board; Mrs. Patricia Muir, secretary; and Miss Peggy Dee, historian, carried the gifts to the altar. Monsignor W. Louis Quinn, pastor of St. Matthew's Cathedral and Rev. Brendan McCormick, state chaplain, concelebrated the Mass.

Immediately following the ladies and friends walked to the monument and placed there a beautiful basket of flowers. The participants closed the memorial with a luncheon.

Miss Albert Headley, who is a member of Division 1, was elected president of the Archdiocesan Council of Catholic Women.

Sheila M. Clifford
National President

The National Convention is just around the corner . . . many of the States/Counties/Divisions have filled out their credential cards, committee form sheets, etc., and returned them to the National Secretary or National President. Most of the National Officers are busy writing their reports listing their activities and accomplishments for the past two years, but what am I doing . . . I'm trying to complete plans for the Convention, do a column for the Digest, and try to coordinate the Ladies Hibernian News.

During the past months, we lost a lady who for the past five or six years, dedicated much of her time to seeing that the Ladies Ancient Order of Hibernians got their news published in the Digest. On April 22nd, Frances Hamre, as we state in our Ritual, passed to her eternal reward happy in the consolation of the Faith of her Fathers, and we will meet her again in Tir n'an Og. We will remember the many hours that she spent seeing that the LAOH columns were published. May she rest in peace.

In a separate article, you will find a list of the Committee Chairmen for the 84th National Convention and a "tentative" agenda.

The winners of the 1987-1988 Annual Irish Essay Contest were announced by Kathie Linton, National Historian. All winners certificates and prizes have been mailed to the State Irish Historian.

During the past several months the AOH and LAOH have had a couple of projects that the membership should be working on. First is a membership drive; each member of the AOH and LAOH should bring in at least one new member during 1988. The second project is the AOH Awards Program; tickets were sent to each Hibernian and returns are to be sent to Mr. R. Rogers. Remember that for any project to be a success, we all must participate and do our share.

Looking forward to seeing many of you at the 84th National Convention in Cleveland. Hope you all have a very happy and safe summer.

school level. Fifteen states were represented. The Judges thoroughly enjoyed reading the essays; some of their comments on the winning essays on Bloody Sunday are listed.

"Personal history comes alive through research and the sharing of memories of parents with her."

"A very mature presentation. She senses the tragedy of the Irish situation and her feelings of involvement are revealed."

"Provided a good understanding, not only of Bloody Sunday, but also the more recent tragedies in Northern Ireland."

"This student loves Ireland; is deeply involved in Irish heritage, having learned its history from family and research."

The hearts of the Judges were won by the grade school essays on Blarney Stone. They stated that they were "like a breath of fresh air, lots of originality and provided many a chuckle."

bring in at least twenty-five new members.

Meriden Division 15 participated in the Daffodil Festival; they sold corned beef sandwiches at the ethnic food taste. The local Irish step dancers participated in the entertainment for the ladies booth.

Lower Naugatuck Valley Division 72 worked with the AOH to hold an Irish Pub Night at St. Jude's Church Hall on June 4. Tom Callinan provided the entertainment for the evening. The Annual June Dinner meeting was held at the Curtis House in Woodbury.

MANY GOING, FEW RETURNING

Jack Flatley

Churned by the tumbling sea
Streams of sand
Commute with each crashing wave
Arrival and departure
Grind and burnish,
Wash away.
Carried in by the rolling breakers,
Drained away by the sucking tow;
Many going, few returning.
Slow death of the emerald shore.
The land edge naked
In geological beauty.
The shore grass stubble
Slow grown and lean,
Greener inland
Where the rich earth of Mother Ireland
Feeds all who grow there.
They grow tall — these young Irish
Wild, restless, eager.
They follow the call of the job;
Many going, few returning.
The riches of Ireland,
Talent, energy, enterprise,
Quick wit, muscle, guile,
Flowing into the sea,
Eroding the race
Sired by legend, pride and misery;
Many going, few returning.
Off on a venture of wide-eyed wonder;
The greener grass on the blind side of the hill
Beckons the yearning youth.
The heritage of the land of the saints
And heroic kings
Has given way
To the pull of a new quest for survival.
A familiar history —
Emigration reborn;
Many going, few returning.
The vision and strength
Of the adventurous Irish
Created wealth and great cities,
Explored wilderness,
Fought the foreigner's war
Laid down track, and concrete highways,
Trod the beams of steel,
Built the banks for the green money
In all lands.
Again now, Ireland's loss
A rich man's pleasure,
Somewhere — not in Ireland.
The lure of the buck is strong
With Irish pockets and bellies wrinkled flat.
Born poor, raised poor, shipped out.
Is there no other way?

your ancestral home, the problems of Ireland, north and south, concern all Americans because, as Americans, we are concerned about the principles of equality and opportunity and justice anywhere on the face of the earth. And because of our close ties of heritage and of history, we have a special concern and a special role to play in applying those principles to Ireland.

"As President of the United States, I expect to give a special priority to the issues that affect Ireland and Northern Ireland first by strengthening and expanding our immigration laws to open up additional opportunities for immigration for Irish citizens. Secondly, by helping to work hard in concert with the Irish people and the international community to build a future of economic opportunity for the people. I support the International Fund for Ireland. I think we should continue to contribute to it, and I will work with the Congress to make sure that the assistance provided by that fund is used fairly and that it goes to communities most in need.

"There's one principle I believe in whether here at home or abroad. It is that the benefits of economic growth and economic opportunity must be shared by all. Just as we in America cannot go forward as separate regions or separate ethnic groups, so the people of Ireland cannot go forward in an atmosphere of discrimination and hostility. The Catholic community in Northern Ireland deserves strong and effective fair employment laws now — because it is right and because it will help all Ireland to grow and to prosper.

"In 1985, with the strong support of my Legislature, I became the first Governor in America to sign legislation recognizing the importance of fair employment laws as reflected by the MacBride Principles. As President, I would use the power and the authority of my office to encourage an end to job discrimination by American firms in Northern Ireland, and I believe we can do that.

"I will encourage all sides to build on the Anglo-Irish Agreement to make further progress towards peace and reconciliation and human rights for all of the people of Ireland. I want to work for the reform of an unfair legal system in Northern Ireland. Justice is not justice unless it is evenhanded. The no-jury, one judge, no bail system of those (Diplock) courts is not evenhanded. It is inconsistent with basic principles of justice, and it must be changed.

"We must also encourage a law enforcement system that respects the rights of all, a public code of conduct

The violence in Northern Ireland baffled me. My unease was reinforced by what I then took to be fair comment by British and Irish officials: that ill-informed Americans with romantic, anachronistic ideas about Northern Ireland had caused untold death and damage there, principally by drumming up support for terrorism, by which they meant only the I.R.A. (Nobody ever mentioned the Protestant paramilitaries, who, at that point, had killed more ordinary people than had the I.R.A.) Reporters, these officials said, could share the blame. "A bad newspaper story can do more harm than a bomb," they warned.

They didn't have to worry about me. My first story, which made the front page, led with the fact that the police who did the shooting at the rally were trying to arrest "an American supporter of the outlawed Irish Republican Army." I dutifully repeated the warning of a Roman Catholic bishop that Irish-Americans should not be "seduced" by television coverage of the rally, and of the killing that occurred there, into giving the I.R.A. money for guns. And I included all the warnings about the "propaganda victory" for the I.R.A. I filed four stories in all, and two of the headlines used the word "Ulster." The praise for my work was effusive. But I went back to London troubled, hoping that the place would quiet down and that I wouldn't have to go back too often.

Two months later, the I.R.A. tried to assassinate Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at the Tory Party Conference at Brighton. Clearly, something was going on in Northern Ireland that shouldn't be ignored — and if what I am saying here is, inadvertently, an argument for terrorism as a device to catch our attention, it will have to stand. I still had no idea why people there were so willing to kill — or to die.

A few weeks before, I had interviewed Gerry Adams, the president of Sinn Féin. He had suggested that I might want to spend some time living with a Sinn Féin family, to see what life was like in West Belfast. Now I decided to take him up on his offer. I also arranged to live with the family of a leading member of the Ulster Defence Association, the legal guise of the largest Protestant paramilitary organization, which operates its illegal activities under other names. The men in both families had served time in prison: one for possessing explosives, the other on a weapons charge. The visits, reported in a cover story for The New York Times Magazine (March 10, 1985), opened my eyes. In doing the reporting I began to realize that religious fanaticism was not the issue. Power was: Who had it? Who benefited — and who lost out?

Shortly after my stay in West Belfast, on December 6, 1984, two I.R.A. members were shot dead at the Gransha psychiatric hospital in the city nationalists call Derry, its ancient Irish name; the British, who renamed it in 1613, call it Londonderry. The I.R.A. men, carrying loaded handguns, were reportedly planning to kill a part-time member of the security forces who worked at the hospital. An army undercover unit cut them down with a fusillade of bullets as they rode a motorcycle onto the grounds. Few official details were available — they rarely are — but what intrigued me about the case were reports, later confirmed, that the suspects had been shot dozens of times. Apparently, they had been given no opportunity to surrender.

John Hume, the local member of Parliament and leader of what the press likes to describe as the "moderate" nationalist party — the one that does not support the I.R.A. — was moved to ask whether the authorities had abandoned the rule of law. Church leaders, other British and Irish politicians, and human rights groups had been asking the same question: Do the British, who do not have the death penalty, have a "shoot to kill" policy in Northern Ireland? Were police and army undercover units, following orders that violated British law, going out to ambush their fellow citizens and killing them on the spot? Did the ends justify the means? And was the rule of law subservient to the imposition of order?

Government officials have always said no. I felt it was important to find out whether they were telling the truth. This much I did learn: they lied about the circumstances of at least some of the shootings. But by the time I had to leave I wasn't even close to finding out whether "shoot to kill" was actually a policy. John Stalker, who had access to the police, came closer, but he was denied vital evidence and was able to conclude only that "the circumstances of these shootings pointed to a police inclination, if not a policy, to shoot suspects dead without warning rather than to arrest them." He also has left. What keeps on are the shootings. And the press coverage is just more of the same.

On February 21 of this year, a young man I knew was walking to a Gaelic football game in a field on the northern side of the border at Aughnacloy. He had returned earlier in the day from his uncle's funeral in County Monaghan, one of the counties of historic Ulster that is in the Irish Republic. He had parked his car in an Aughnacloy housing project and had walked back through the army checkpoint toward the field. In broad daylight, without warning, a soldier shot him to death. The army said the shooting was accidental and expressed deep regrets. The Irish government expressed its doubts and said it would conduct its own investigation. The American press covered this from London.

The Times wrapped the shooting into a front-page story about the political rift between Britain and Ireland over the Stalker affair. The story was written by a correspondent with a fine ear for language, a writer who has never hesitated to listen to the voices of people who suffer. But he was just back from Gaza, and he was miles away from that spot in Aughnacloy where my friend fell dying. The story never mentioned Aidan McAneaspie by name, never said that he was young, that he was not a member of the I.R.A., that his sister had run for office as a

Frances Hamre's Death Unexpected

FRANCES HAMRE

SPRINGFIELD, MA — Frances R. Hamre, Assistant Editor of the National Hibernian Digest, died in Mercy Hospital here on Friday, April 22, 1988.

A lifelong Springfield resident, she attended local schools. She was an officer and member of many state and local volunteer organizations.

In 1981, Frances was honored by Pope John Paul II with the award Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice, a papal decoration for service to the Church. She was a chief high ranger in the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters and during the years was president, treasurer and historian on the Massachusetts State Board.

Besides being president of Our Lady of Hope Guild and Rosary Sodality, she was secretary of the Van Horn Parents Association, supervisor of Thomas B. Gleason Jr. Court of Foresters and secretary of Cub Scout Pack 51. In addition, she was a member of American Legion Liberty Unit 430; the Good Shepherd Auxiliary; Friends of the Sisters of St. Joseph; Friends of the Dominican Nuns; Friends of the Chalice of Salvation and Ward 2 Democratic Committee.

She is survived by her husband, former City Councilor Frederick E. Hamre; four sons, Thomas J. of East Hampton, Frederick C. of Bristol, Ct., Richard F. of Agawam, and Daniel E. of Springfield; six grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

N.J. Rep. James Howard Felled by Heart Attack

WASHINGTON, D.C. — New Jersey Representative James J. Howard, who served in the U.S. Congress for 24 years, died at Washington Hospital Center on March 25, after suffering a heart attack a day earlier. He was 60.

The congressman, who lived in Spring Lake Heights, N.J. on the Jersey Shore, was stricken while playing golf at Brooke Manor Country Club in Rockville, Maryland. He was revived by two paramedics who had been golfing and taken to Montgomery General Hospital. He was later transferred to the Washington Hospital, a leading cardiac care center.

Howard, a Democrat, served eight years as the chairman of the powerful House Public Works and Transportation Committee.

candidate for Sinn Féin, that he had been frequently interrogated and occasionally beaten by soldiers when he crossed the border each day to go to work, that he came from a family that for generations had been Irish nationalists.

In the story, Aidan was simply "an unarmed nationalist" who was "shot and killed as he walked past a British Army checkpoint in Northern Ireland" — the headline called it "Ulster." The story went on to warn that "the incident will be used to foster the contention of the outlawed Irish Republican Army that the British-Irish agreement is proving worthless in its goal of better protecting the rights of Northern Ireland's Roman Catholic minority." Another shooting disappeared under the haze of a potential propaganda victory. And still there was no reporting on the ground. What really happened there? And why? And — the I.R.A. aside — what did it mean?

"I could not in all conscience turn my back on what I thought was murder by policemen," Stalker said in a radio interview. "I have been a hard-nosed copper all my life, but I draw the line at murder."

At least Stalker tried to dig out facts. How much more blood will have to be shed, one wonders, before American reporters do the same? Where do we, as journalists, draw the line?

A VIEW FROM SAN DIEGO

Dear Mr. Murphy,
Brothers & Sisters,

On December 1987, a teleconference was held among the Officers of the AOH nationwide. I sat in for Mickey (McGrath) Michaud, president Division 1, San Diego, and state vice president. I am speaking for myself.

The purpose of this letter is to make my views known, perhaps discussed, at the upcoming meeting in Cleveland. Unfortunately I cannot attend, as I will be at home with my family in Athleague, County Roscommon.

What stands out in my mind from the teleconference is, Mr. Hession's report on the drop-out rate, new memberships, and the net gain of less than 70 souls nationwide. Our organization goes back to the 1500's, and it served a particular and worthy cause; again in the early 1800's it also has served a worthy cause. Times have changed, the AOH has fallen behind, we lost people because they became disinterested, fed up with the politics, divisions, and animosities. We have been identified too closely to one political party, unions, and unfortunately, to violence and booze. We have the Tom Haydens to advance the MacBride principles and ignore the Pat Nolans because he belongs to the other party.

Arizona has a process of removing its Governor and it worked. Last January we saw on National Television a pro-King, anti-Mecham march. In that march was about a half dozen people that I presume were Irish, and were holding a very large Irish banner. All of the marchers behind the banner were Blacks.

We appoint Flannery as Grand Marshal of a World Famous Parade causing bishops, leading elected politicians to boycott the parade. We confine ourselves too closely to a Kennedy; there is also Wilson, Dornan, Dan Lungren, (Mom is Irish), and many more all over the U.S. Just because they are Republican does not mean they have aids. As per enclosed article, is a sample of the heavyweights outside of the AOH. We keep the status quo, they stay away, and in the meantime we loose members.

On a daily basis, the Russians have landing rights at Shannon, with overnight accommodations (crew). Aeroflot is an integral part of the Soviet military, and the purpose of this exercise is to rotate its troops in Cuba. Now that is real gratitude towards the United States. I have been in the leisure travel business for the past 25 years. The Enniskillen bombing can translate to a million less tourists over one season. To many Americans, Belfast is in County Cork. Bombings and killings have accomplished this much so far. It keeps the issue alive. It stifens the British resolve to stay there. It reduces the Irishman down to a Paisley, and lower still to a terrorist. For every Irishman that takes up a gun, there are 10 British with a bigger gun. We do have the manpower worldwide to marshal world opinion and shame the British out of our country. When John Bull calls for a gerrymandered vote to settle the issue, we should loud and clear respond: let the people of all Ireland vote on the issue.

RECONCILIATION NOT CONDEMNATION

Dear Editor:

The recently reported remarks of several Bishops in Northern Ireland were predictable, one dimensional and singularly without hope or direction. The Irish Bishops — unlike Christ — consistently preach condemnation not reconciliation, mercy, compassion or justice.

The Catholic Church in Northern Ireland has long preached a sort of "gospel of the conqueror" which ignores or minimizes the treachery of the British government and maximizes the flaws of the subjugated (read poor). Almost every leader of the young Irish government was excommunicated for failing to embrace this message of slavery and degradation. The most prominent of these was a man who became the most honored Irishman in the world — the late Dr. Sean MacBride.

I have lived in the South. The St. Patrick's Day Parade at Savannah is one of the largest in the U.S. All these Protestants with Irish Catholic names, lacking the true meaning, history, of why they are there. We the AOH should be there, and in the forefront of an Irish Cultural Center, bringing all the organizations (Irish) together, consolidate our power, money, resolutions for the re-unification of Ireland. The Hibernian as a Catholic should set good example; perhaps we will have people to join the Church that their forefathers belonged to. We should promote to all, friendship, unity, charity, history, culture, our dances, stories, etc. And for God's sake, keep politics, religion, and unions outside the door. Let that Irish, Democrat, union worker sit down and eat and drink with the Republican who owns or runs the factory.

I mail to the politicians copies of the MacBride Principles, and to the Cranstons I say, if the Haitians and Ethiopians were ruled by Whites, and the North of Ireland Catholics were Black, would you be more active?

The United States of America has given a home to millions of Irish who may otherwise have starved to death. We have sent home millions of dollars to our families, to build churches, educate our nuns and priests. What have we been offered in return? We should have for example been offered space for a U.S. Installation, and in the process negotiate the British out. Belfast would make a good Navy base, and the Catholics would get a better deal.

On a daily basis, the Russians have landing rights at Shannon, with overnight accommodations (crew). Aeroflot is an integral part of the Soviet military, and the purpose of this exercise is to rotate its troops in Cuba. Now that is real gratitude towards the United States.

I have been in the leisure travel business for the past 25 years. The Enniskillen bombing can translate to a million less tourists over one season. To many Americans, Belfast is in County Cork. Bombings and killings have accomplished this much so far. It keeps the issue alive. It stifens the British resolve to stay there. It reduces the Irishman down to a Paisley, and lower still to a terrorist. For every Irishman that takes up a gun, there are 10 British with a bigger gun. We do have the manpower worldwide to marshal world opinion and shame the British out of our country. When John Bull calls for a gerrymandered vote to settle the issue, we should loud and clear respond: let the people of all Ireland vote on the issue.

Romero are sorely needed in Northern Ireland. Unless and until such leadership emerges, the Catholic Church will continue to be a part of the problem — not a part of the solution.

SENATOR VISITS IRELAND

Dear Editor:

Knowing of your interest in developments in Northern Ireland, I wanted to share with you recent steps I have taken to try and improve employment opportunities for Catholics in Northern Ireland and to impress the British, Irish and American governments with the need for progress in Northern Ireland.

I visited both Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland with Irish-Americans from New Jersey to press for economic, social and political reforms in Northern Ireland. Since then, I have met with a broad cross section of Irish-American leaders in New Jersey.

Following up on my trip and consultation with New Jersey Irish leaders, I sought a meeting with the British Ambassador, Sir Anthony Acland, and with Bill Fein, U.S. Observer to the International Fund, to personally relay my concerns to them about the International Fund. As you may know, the Fund is a U.S.-sponsored institution which was originally designed to help improve the economy of Northern Ireland and expand job opportunities for the province's Catholic minority.

After meeting with Ambassador Acland, I sent a formal note of concern to the British government through Ambassador Acland about the management of the Fund. As a member of the Senate Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee, which has jurisdiction over the Fund, I intend to pursue these issues at appropriations hearings on 1989 funding for the Fund later this year.

I've enclosed some related materials. I hope this expression of concern to the British government will contribute toward reform of the Fund, improved employment opportunities for Catholics in Northern Ireland, and a peaceful resolution of the conflict there. I welcome your input on these and other issues and hope you will not hesitate to be in touch with your thoughts on these issues.

Frank R. Lautenberg
United States Senator,
State of New Jersey

Did You Know?

THE "FAMINE"

Did you know that the famine in Ireland was in fact, not a famine? During the tragic period of 1845-50 in Ireland, a blight had struck the potato crop but nothing else. Bumper crops of wheat, oats, barley, vegetables, and dairy products were all recorded during those years. Unfortunately the Irish tenant farmer was allowed so little property that he had to rely on a crop that would produce the highest yield in the least space, and that was the potato. The potato became the staple of the Irish while they labored on the landlord's bountiful crops. When the potato failed, the landlords refused to share the other crops with their tenants and instead exported them to England where they would bring the most profit. Wagonloads of food were transported, under guard, to the docks where they were loaded on ships under the very noses of starving men, women, and children in quantities that would have fed twice the population of Ireland. How many of our forefathers died in the great hunger will never be known because of the unwillingness of the Irish to be registered by a British census, but it has been estimated that the population was reduced by over 3 1/2 million souls by 1851.

Hibernian Sports

Mike Heslin

BINGHAMTON, NY

Greetings and Salutations, Hibernian Sports Fans!

Greetings & Salutations! First, it's graduation time at the colleges throughout the U.S. YR would like to take this opportunity to say congratulations to the graduates and especially their parents. As an English teacher friend of YR would say, "You done good."

Speaking of graduations, there was a first at SUCO-Fredonia in western NY this time out. Two Heslins recieved degrees. Susan Heslin received her Masters in Education in Speech Pathology. Joseph Michael Heslin received his BS in Communications/Media. Joe is YR's oldest son. Susan is the daughter of James "Red" Heslin, VP of Div 1-Broome County. YR is very proud of his son and his niece.

Enough family business for now, let's go to sports.

College Basketball — The NCAA tourney is history. Interesting is the point that no team from the Big East, the Big Ten, the old PAC 8 or any independent made it to the championship game. There's always next year. The NCAA will probably begin to the world about parity in the ranks. Not so. Not until colleges quit exploiting high school players and insure they get the education promised. Players, on the other hand, have to quit signing letters and/or agreements for and with agents until they can do so legally. Or has the time come as a friend of YR says to take off the blinders and admit some of these so-called colleges today are no more than diploma mills. He is a former college player from a Big Ten school. His ideal conception is to have colleges such as those who insist students, athletes included, go to class, take tests and receive their degree when qualified. Scholarships would be allowed. These colleges would be on equal footing. Then institute what he calls "Jock Schools." These schools could pay athletes to play for them. After four years, regardless of what the athletes have learned or not learned, they would be given certificates of attendance. This is an interesting theory. It's food for thought and discussion.
